MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I have lived with grandpa and grandma all my life. I have a good home. Pa takes the ADVOCATE, and I read all the little cousins' letters. I go to Sabbath-school nearly every Sabbath. Mrs. Rebecca Fuller is our teacher, and we all love her dearly. Bro. R. M. Blocker is our pastor, and we all love him. We have a day-school, and Mrs. Fuller is our teacher, and we move on finely. We had a Sabbath-school celebration on May 4, and it was a complete success. Bro. Blocker was with us. Our vocal music was splendid. The speeches of the little boys and girls were fine, and our dinner was abundant and good enough for President Cleveland and his Cabinet. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is "blossom" found? I remain,

Your little friend,

KATIE FORD.

DOYLINE, Louisiana

MR. EDITOR: I receive the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE through the kindness of a dear uncle. I have learned to love it dearly and could not do without it. I tried to make up a club in the winter, but did not succeed, though there were several new subscriptions sent in, and I think there are others who will yet subscribe. We have a thriving Sunday-school, devoted superintendent and excellent teachers. We love our pastor (Bro. Robertson) dearly, and wish to keep him the four years. I must mention our prayer meetings, which we find to be most spiritually profitable; and, what is so nice, our young people seem to take such an interest in them. For fear of that dreaded waste-basket, I will conclude, wishing much happiness to all the dear old CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE readers.

Music, in its highest and noblest form, is devotional. "All inmost things," says Carlyle, "are melodious; naturally utter themselves in song. See deep enough and you see musically." "There is something sacramental," says Charles Kingley; "in perfect metre and rhythm. They are outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace."

Household.

Training Children.

Good breeding, like charity, should begin at home. The days are passed when children used to rise the moment their parents entered the room where they were, and stand until they had received permission to sit. But the mistake is now made usually in the other direction, of allowing small boys and girls too much license to disturb the peace of the household. I think the best way to train children in courtesy would be to observe toward them a scrupulous politeness. I would go as far as to say that we should make it a point to listen to children without interrupting them and answer them sincerely and respectfully, as if they were grown up. And, indeed, many of their wise, quaint sayings are far better worth listening to than the stereotyped commonplaces of most morning callers. Of course, to allow uninterrupted chatter would be to surrender the repose of the household, but it is very easy if children are themselves scrupulously taught to respect the convenience of others and to know when to talk and when to be silent.

If a child is brought up in the constant exercise of courtesy toward brothers and sisters and playmates, as well as toward parents and uncles and aunts, it will have little to learn as it grows older. I know a bright and bewitching child who was well instructed in table etiquette, but who forgot her lessons sometimes, as even older people do now and then. The arrangement was made with her that, for every solecism of this sort she was to pay a fine of five cents, while for every similar carelessness she should discover in her elders she was to exact a fine of ten cents, their experience of life being longer than hers. You may be sure that Mistress Bright Eyes watched the proceedings at the table very carefully. No slightest disregard of the most conventional etiquette escaped her quick vision, and she was an inflexible creditor and faithful debtor. It was the prettiest sight to see her, when conscious of some failure on her own part, go unhesitatingly to her money-box and pay cheerfully her little tribute to the outraged proprieties.—Louise Chandler Moulton.

CURE FOR NERVOUSNESS.—There is no better preventive of nervous exhaustion than regular, unhurried, muscular exercise. If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry and increase our open-air exercise, a large portion of nervous diseases would be abolished. For those who can not get a sufficient holiday, the best substitute is an occasional day in bed. Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily vocation have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his medical man that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their holidays on toilsome mountains. One of the hardest-worked women in England, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves at an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed. If we can not avoid frequent agitation, we ought, if possible, to give the nervous system time to recover itself between the shocks. Even an hour's seclusion after a good lunch will deprive a horried, anxious day of much of its injury. The nerves can often be overcome by struggling when they refuse to be controlled by strength of will.—Nineteenth Century.

Squirrel skins and other skins may be thus tanned with the fur on: Nail smoothly to a board, flesh side out; remove all loose pieces of flesh, then rub in as much chalk as you can; when the chalk begins to powder and fall off, take the skin from the board, till it with pulverized alum, roll it up and lay it away for two or three days, then unroll and shake it out, and the work is done. While tanning keep in a dry place.

GARNER—The subject of this obituary notice—CAPT. JAMES FULTON GARNER was the son of N. B. Garner, of Tennessee, and his wife, Ann McCarnal, of Alabama. He was born at Fort Jessop, La., November 19, 1840. When but a few months old he was taken to San Augustine, Texas, where he spent his childhood and early youth. In the year 1856, when sixteen years of age, he removed to Sabine parish, La. Here he grew up to manhood, and was happily married to Miss Sue E. Ragan. In 1879 he, with his family, removed to Rapides parish where he bought the lease and fixtures of the ferry between Alexandria and Pineville. He, with great diligence and successful enterprise, managed this ferry until his death, which occurred April 6, 1888.

Capt. Garner was a man of many most excellent qualities. There was no hypocrisy in him. He was truly honest in his dealings with his fellowmen. He was possessed of a truly kind heart, showing itself in oft-repeated acts of generosity; being ever ready to succor the needy and sympathize with the suffering. He was a true believer in an over-ruling Providence, as demonstrated in placing himself under God's especial care in all times of apparent danger. He was a man of true veracity—"His word was as good as his bond." He was always disposed to be a Christian, but, like thousands of others, he postponed this most important work to his last sickness. During his last illness I was with him a great many times, and I always found him ready to acknowledge his sins and ask forgiveness. Much of the time he was delirious; but sometimes he could connectedly talk of his business or of the interests of his soul. In the first stages of his sickness, he asked me to pray for him, and said he was praying for himself. Repeatedly I talked with him, and in every instance he expressed deep regret for his sins, and trust in God for salvation. That his repentance was sincere I can not doubt, and I trust that his faith in Christ was "unto righteousness," and his salvation the result.

The community has lost an industrious, enterprising, good citizen; the poor have lost a friend; his family, a good husband and a kind father. He leaves many friends, two sisters who reside in Texas, a wife and son, to mourn his death. May he, who is the "father of the fatherless and the husband of the widow," comfort and sustain them in this great bereavement!

May his fellow-citizens emulate his virtues, and, trusting in his salvation through Christ, may we all so live the life of faith in Christ that we may be reunited with the saints, where death and parting are unknown!

B. F. WHITE.

TATUM—MARTHA A. TATUM, formerly Martha A. McCormick, and daughter of James J. and Mildred McCormick, was born March 28, 1858; was married February 28, 1878, and died March 16, 1888. It is not surprising that she gave her heart to God in church fellowship when about seventeen years of age. She lived to establish a good character for Christian piety, and to see her children (two sons and one daughter) grown up to manhood and womanhood; then died as she had lived, a faithful and devoted member of the church. She had been sick almost constantly for four years, and suffered, oh so much! She bore her sufferings patiently and was conscious until a short time before she died; but was so low she could scarcely speak at all. Her Bible was her constant companion, and, notwithstanding every effort to be patient, her sufferings were so great that she wished for death. She saw that her life-work was done, and the little time she had to stay would only be days of suffering and detain her that much longer from her heavenly inheritance. It is not surprising that she desired to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. She is gone, and her sufferings are all over; but I reckon that the sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us. She is gone, and her death has cast a sense of loneliness and sadness over the heart and household of our beloved Bro. C. W. Tatum. May God bless and comfort our bereaved brother and the children!

The writer has been for many years well acquainted with the deceased—in her girlhood and womanhood, in her single and married life,—in the bloom of health and in the feebleness of declining strength; and in all these conditions of life she was the same consistent Christian character. She loved her church and labored to promote its prosperity. She loved the society of the good and the Word of God, and more especially she loved her Lord. She lived life-long in the same community, and established a character for sincere piety more durable and beautiful than any marble monument that can adorn her grave. If we could stay the hand of death or call back from the grave the good and noble of earth, such ones as Sister Martha Tatum would not be taken from us. The struggle is over. She has made the journey safe. Death has no more power over her. However our fond affections may desire her return, she is much happier than this earth can make her with its afflictions and painful agonies of death.

E. J. TAYLOR.

SWILLEY—MRS. GUINNEY O. SWILLEY, the daughter of Rev. J. J. and Sister M. M. Watts, and wife of Mr. George W. Swilley, passed from the church militant to the church triumphant on March 31, 1888. Sister Swilley was born August 11, 1868; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, July, 1880; was converted at Providence Camp Ground, Copiah county, Miss., 1882; was married to Mr. George W. Swilley, September 19, 1886. Sister Swilley was brought up in the lap of piety, and was early taught and learned the necessity of consecrating her young heart and life to him who created and redeemed her; and at the age of twelve years this consecration was made and accepted by her Savior, who gave her there and then a new heart and a new life, which she retained until death.

Sister Swilley was a beautiful, amiable, intelligent and lovely woman. But these valuable qualities of mind and heart were leavened by the influx of experimental Christian life, and, thus lifted up and adorned by the beauty of holiness, Christianity is the great leveller, but always levels upward toward the character of its author. Thus, Christian character adorns the doctrines makes, brings out, and manifests the excellence of Christianity to the world. The life of Sister Swilley was brief. The volume closed with the preface. The sun set in the morning of life. But the preface was a volume, and sunset was full-orbed and cloudless. Her verbal testimony was: "I have placed myself in the hands of God, who is wise and good, and will do right, and I am satisfied with whatever may be his will, whether I live or die." The testimony of those who knew her most intimately is: "From conversion until death she lived a Christian life." She left a sweet babe, devoted husband, loving father and mother, brothers and sisters, and a large circle of relatives and friends, who have, in tearful sadness, committed her mortal remains to the silent grave at Bahala Chapel, Lawrence county, Miss. But this sadness is sweetly cheered by the well-grounded hope of seeing again their beloved "Gainnie" in the freshness and fragrance of immortal bloom, "On the beautiful shore in the sweet bye-and-bye."

WM. B. HINES.

BROGAN—MISS LILLIE BROGAN, daughter of the late Rev. J. C. Brogan, of the Mississippi Conference, and of Mrs. M. L. Brogan, was born December 8, 1869, and died of pneumonia, at Rose Hill, Miss., February 11, 1888. When the summons came she was just blooming into womanhood—beautiful, bright and cultured. She had previously enjoyed excellent health, and, therefore, had the promise of long life. But, alas! how soon the fairest flower is transformed into dust! She was converted and joined the church at the age of fourteen. She was a dutiful, kind and lovely daughter, and an agreeable, attractive and admirable companion. Trained in a godly home and piously inclined, the future was full of promise of happiness and usefulness. Why should she not have lived to the comfort of her widowed mother (who loved her so dearly), to have enjoyed life and as a blessing to the world? The ways of Providence are mysterious; but "she hath done all things well." She was fond of music and had a soft, sweet voice—how sweet to mother! Will not those musical gifts continue to be cultivated and employed in heaven? And shall not the mother, who was so fond of her melodies on earth, again enjoy the familiar strains of that voice, now hushed in death? Heaven, by the separation which we now suffer, will be more enjoyable.

R. S. RAYNER.

(This obituary was mislaid, or it would have appeared sooner.—ED.)

MARTIN—Died, on Tuesday, April 16, at Vaucleave, Miss., MRS. NANCY MARTIN (nee Signerall), aged forty years and eleven months. She leaves a devoted husband, eleven children and a large number of relatives and friends, who mourn her loss. Her last moments were so full of suffering (her disease being pneumonia) that she did not converse much. She never expressed any terror of death. She asked for the prayers of her pastor and family. Her life being filled with deeds of love and charity, we can not mourn as those with no hope; but hope, after the scenes of this life are over, to meet our friend in a land where parting will be no more.

HER FRIEND.

STANLY—Died, at his home, January 25, 1888, BRO. WRIGHT STANLY, who lived to a good old age. Bro. Stanly was a member of the Baptist Church for many years, but of late years was a member of the Methodist Church. His death leaves an aged and feeble wife and two children and grandchildren to mourn his loss; but they feel sure he has only gone just ahead and is waiting on the shining shore to welcome them when God shall call. May God bless and sustain the bereaved family! T. S. R.

THE DELUGE OF NOAH.—Ex-President White, of Cornell University, in the Popular Science Monthly, calls attention to the fact that Dr. William Smith, in his Dictionary of the Bible, says that three different articles were prepared on the subject of the Deluge before the editor was satisfied; and that of this article Dr. Colenso said it conceded all he contended for. Now, the Quarterly Review, of London, in noticing Howorth's "Mammoth and the Flood," insists that a tremendous cataclysm certainly did occur, which destroyed prehistoric man and mammoth; that the great dome which supports portions of the earth's crust was broken up by convulsions surpassing all others in historic times, sweeping to destruction all creatures which then lived in those regions. The same opinion is held by many geologists, and Mr. Howorth supports this view by a mass of evidence, and fairly turns the laugh upon Messrs. Colenso and White. Very opportune is Mr. Howorth's book, showing the animals then destroyed, the food they ate, and their preservation when found five or six thousand years after the cataclysm, so perfect that dogs ate of their flesh. "God in Creation," published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 Bible House, New York (price 50 cents), has a chapter on Deluge Legends, giving a pretty full summary of the known evidence preserved among the ethnic descendants of Noah, which is specially interesting to Christian readers as verifying and illustrating the Bible account.—Evangelist.

MENTAL TELEGRAPHING.—It is said that the Indians on the plains have always practiced a system of mental telegraphing among themselves, by means of which they communicate with each other almost instantaneously, and without messengers or signals. This mental telegraphing is by no means peculiar to the Indians on the plains of the United States. The same thing has been done by many people on the plains and among the mountains, both of America and other countries, and is to-day, and always has been, one method of manifesting knowledge known to and practiced by many persons. The manner in which such communications are made seems to be, and is, a great mystery. Many theories about it have been suggested, all of which fall short of satisfying the minds of people as to how it is done. The fact that such communications are sent and received, and that they are often genuine and true, and that such is one mode of manifesting knowledge, is now almost universally conceded.—St. Louis Republican.

A London photographer claims to have perfected a system of photographing in colors. He takes a negative on a specially sensitized plate; from this a positive is produced on a chemically treated basis by the aid of a solar camera and a spectroscopic arrangement. The image is produced in colors on the basis without the aid of hand-work or brush. The colors are said to be all hydrocarbons, specially prepared and capable of subdivision to the 180-millionth of an inch. When the colored picture is produced by chemical action the image exists between two films not more than a hundredth part of an inch in thickness. These photographs are said to be permanent and not affected by climate.

To show the effect upon the children of inebriate parentage, I collected the following: Of 111 inebriate mothers, 33 of whom had inebriate husbands, 408 children were born. Of these 227 perished in infancy and early childhood, and of the survivors many are doomed evidently to an early death. In many cases the death of these children was indirectly due to the inebriety of the parents, as cold, deprivation, etc. Ages: Twenty-seven of the 204 women began to drink intoxicants before they were 10 years of age; 11 between the ages of 9 and 15; 74 between 14 and 21; 37 between 20 and 26; 33 between 25 and 31; 19 between 30 and 41; 3 between 40 and 41.

How Can We Love Our Enemies?

In my early Christian life this question greatly troubled me, as I doubt not it does many conscientious young Christians today. Some think of it as a part of a "higher life" which only a few Christians are ever expected to attain. Others think it impracticable—something that no one but Christ ever did or ever will do. How can our love his enemies as he loves his friends and his God?

The difficulty is, at least, diminished by distinguishing three kinds of Christian love: first, the love of esteem, that looks up—the love which we feel toward God; second, the love of sympathy, that looks straight out—the love with which we love congenial fellow-Christians; third, the love of compassion, that looks down in tender pity, rather than contempt or hatred, on all we think to be in the wrong, including not only the corrupt, but all we dislike or count as enemies.

The last is the most distinctive "Christian love"—"the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit," making us love the unlovely, making us love others as God loved us; because every human being is a son of God, however wayward; because each human being is a brother or sister of Christ, for whom he died; because every human being is also an immortal being; because every one who wrongs another wrongs himself still more, and so is to be pitied and saved rather than despised or hated.

There is little credit in the love of esteem, in loving the altogether lovely, or in the love of sympathy—"If ye love them that love you, what reward have ye?"

The only form of love that proves us Christians, with new hearts that love like God, is the love of compassion, that loves according to needs, not according to merits.

It is this love that Paul pictures in that wonderful thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians—the love that "suffers long and is good-natured," that is greater than faith or hope. He who lacks it may have begun to be a Christian in the will, but he is not a Christian at heart. It was this love that opened heaven to Stephen. It opens to no other key. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love."—Wilbur F. Crafts, in Christian Intelligencer.

AGE OF CRIMINALS.—Most criminals are young. It is seldom that a grave crime, provided it be the first, is committed after the age of thirty. A careful statistician has proved that of the entire male population of England and Wales, the largest proportion of criminals is found to be between the ages of twenty and twenty-five. Five times as many crimes are committed in the five years between these limits as in the ten years between the ages of fifty and sixty. Dividing the whole population into groups of those from ten years to fifteen, from fifteen to twenty, from twenty to twenty-five, from twenty-five to thirty, from thirty to forty, from forty to fifty, and from fifty to sixty, it is found that from the age of twenty the tendency to crime decreases at each successive term thirty-three per cent. in the case of women, and twenty-five per cent. in the case of men.—Rev. Mr. Thwing, in Atlantic.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:

Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption. If they will send me their Express and P. O. address.

Respectfully,
T. A. SLOCUM, M. C.,
181 Pearl St., New York.

This statement is, in point of fact, the prolongation of a spiritual death which has actually begun in time, a prolongation of it into eternity, just as the life of the blessed ones in heaven is a prolongation of an eternal life begun here amid the scenes of time onward, into the world beyond the grave, into their eternity. We here become what we shall be for ever, only that which in this life may be almost infinitely modified becomes beyond the grave fixed, irrevocable.—Canon Liddon.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5.

WITH STANDARD SELECTIONS.

BY IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES M'GRANAHAN AND GEO. C. STEBBINS.

234 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:

Music Edition, Board Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 4 00
" (Minion Type) Board Covers..... 10 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

☞ Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Democratic State Convention, in session in Norfolk, Va., May 16, passed resolutions endorsing Cleveland.

Discouraging reports regarding the outlook for crops are being received from all parts of Indiana. In many counties hay and oats have suffered severely from drought, while in the southern half of the State corn fields are being devastated by the cutworm.

In Trenton, N. J., on May 16, Vice Chancellor Bird decided the case of the Hutchings heirs against Henry George. The clause in the will leaving Henry George a bequest for the purpose of aiding him in the circulation of his peculiar ideas and theories among the people was declared void. The point made by the contestants was that it was neither a charitable, benevolent nor educational bequest.

During the debate on the tariff in the House, on May 18, Mr. Randall made the first important speech. He declared in favor of total repeal of the internal revenue tax, but proposed to retain a tax of 50 cents a gallon on whisky not used in the arts.

The plot of ground near Tarrytown, N. Y., consecrated to the spy, Andre, by Cyrus W. Field, is to be sold at auction next week.

James G. Blaine was interviewed in Paris, and adheres to the statements in his Florence letter, that he will not be a candidate for the presidency.

President Cleveland, on May 19, vetoed nine private pension bills.

The tariff bill will be laid over for a week or ten days, and the House will proceed with the consideration of appropriation bills.

The Senate committee on commerce has nearly completed its work on the River and Harbor Bill, and will report it in three or four days. It will add one or two million dollars to the bill, and will leave out, it is said, all the canal projects.

The St. Louis Sunday Law was enforced on May 20, and met with persistent resistance. There were about forty arrests for violation, and the saloons were closed at once.

On the occasion of a dinner, given to Secretary of the Treasury Fairchild, by the Brooklyn Democratic Club, he spoke on civil service reform and the service democracy has done the nation.

Two bodies were cremated at the St. Louis Crematory, May 20.

A committee of printers in New York City are making efforts to erect a monument to the memory of Horace Greeley.

Among the passengers on the "La Bretagne," which arrived in New York, May 21, were United States Minister to France E. J. McLane, and Col. Bell, United States Minister to the Netherlands.

Gen. F. T. Nicholls was inaugurated governor of Louisiana, May 21.

The Senate committee cut down the appropriations for the Mississippi river and harbors below Cairo about $320,000. A number of the minor Louisiana appropriations are stricken out. These are: Cassity bayou, $2,500; Amite river, $500; Bartholomew bayou, $5,000; bayou Courtableau, $5,000; bayou Terrebonne, $3,000; Tickfaw river, $1,000; Little river, $2,500; Calcasieu, $10,000; bayou Lafourche, $50,000.

FOREIGN.

A missionary institute has been opened at Piacenza with the object of aiding Italians to emigrate to America.

Lord Charles Beresford, in a speech in London, said that if General Boulanger got to the top of the tree, he might within a week, in order to gain popularity, order England to clear out of Egypt.

Slavery has been completely abolished in Brazil.

Cardinal Gibbons has again urged the Vatican not to condemn Henry George's writings.

It is rumored that an imperial rescript is about to be issued which is intended to prevent, as far as possible, Frenchmen from visiting Alsace-Lorraine, in reprisal for the obstacles placed in the way of Germans on the French side of the frontier.

Krupp will build a new steel factory and works near Annen, Westphalia, the works at Essen being unable to cope with the increased business.

It is reported from Rome that a party of anti-clericals came into collision with a religious procession at Bancina, near Palermo. A fight arising, the military was called out and the soldiers were compelled to fire upon the mob. Several persons were killed.

The Brazilian government has issued a decree appointing three days for festival celebration of the abolition of slavery.

Russia has accepted a French syndicate's terms for a loan. The Russian Treasury obtains an immediate advance of £15,000,000. The total loan amounts to £14,000,000, and the balance will be issued in the autumn if the time is opportune.

It is asserted that French officials purposely insult German subjects and appear to be authorized to do so by the higher French authorities.

The Queen of Spain opened the Barcelona Exhibition on May 20.

The condition of Emperor Frederick is daily improving.

At a meeting in Phœnix Park, in Dublin, May 20, at which six thousand persons assembled, Mr. O'Brien said it was heartbreaking to think that such a rescript, in the name of Rome, should be thrown into the teeth of the Irish people; that a courageous, respectful, firm protest was necessary.

Emperor Frederick signed a decree ordering reprisals in return for obstacles put in the way of Germans entering France.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia.

This old favorite (so well known as Kennesaw Route) is making the fastest time made in the South. Only forty hours from New Orleans to Washington City, and forty-seven hours to New York. One day saved over other lines.

Whitworth College.

We clip from the Brookhaven Leader the following, in regard to the purposes of President Fitzhugh. We are glad to know of the prosperity of this institution and its flattering outlook.

The president of this noted institution is continually taking steps that must necessarily enhance its much deserved prosperity.

After an experience of two years, he has decided that the best interests of the college and its patrons would be subserved by having the entire management in his own hands.

He has, therefore, concluded to take charge of the boarding department after this session; and then the boarders and faculty will form one large, happy household, all will be members of the president's family, and thus will they enjoy all the benefits and sweet influences of home life.

No one can fail to see the wisdom of such a course.

No college can reach that degree of prosperity to which it would otherwise attain, when it has two separate departments under an entirely different management.

In addition to the above wise move, we understand that there will be established in connection with the college a regular conservatory of music and art. The president intends to secure as director of the musical conservatory a complete master of music, who has enjoyed the very finest advantages both in Europe and in this country. The director will be assisted by four of the ablest lady teachers that liberal salaries can command. The instructor in art will possess every qualification for giving to that department the highest efficiency.

The opportunity for a thorough musical and art education will be superior to that offered by any college in the South.

In view of these progressive advancements, we predict for Whitworth a future more successful than it has ever enjoyed in the past.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on. The public are invited to attend.

For further information address W. J. Hearin, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Price, keeper, Biloxi, Miss.

W. J. HEARIN, Pres.
J. G. GRANT, Cor. Sec.

The established rule for thirteen years of Hennigion Camp Meeting is to begin on Thursday before the full moon in August of each year. This year the time is the sixteenth of August, and will continue one week. The public, and especially ministers, are invited to attend.

"OUR Climate is so Changeable!"

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

"So say we all of us." Fair to-day; storm to-morrow. Warm sunshine this morning; freezing cold by to-morrow noon. No wonder so many people are sick! The list of the ailments who prevail in the Spring is long and large:

BILIOUSNESS, INDIGESTION, LIVER COMPLAINT, SPRING FEVERS, SICK HEADACHES, DYSPEPSIA, DIZZINESS, RHEUMATISM, CONSTIPATION NAUSEA, LASSITUDE, LANGUOR, DEBILITY, LOSS of APPETITE, &c., &c., &c., &c.

Don't trifle with yourself this Spring. Prepare for the ills which our changeable climate brings. Nothing like EDUCATIONAL.

WANTED.—A TEACHER who can teach and speak the French language. A middle-aged lady preferred. Address R. A. SMITH, Principal E. A. Seminary, Arcadia, La.

Mansfield Female College.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Wells, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Huddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 280 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

A BARREL OF WHISKY.

A drayman rolled forth from his cart to the street,
A redjacketed barrel, well bound and complete;
And on it red letters, like forked tongues of flame,
Emblazoned the grade, number, quality, fame,
Of this world-renowned whisky from somebody's still,
Who arrested the grain on the way to the mill.

There stood the barrel delivered, but I
Could see that a shadow was hovering nigh,
A sulphurous shadow that grew, as I gazed,
To the form of Mephisto. Though sorely amazed,
I ventured to question this imp of the realm,
Where Vice is the pilot, with Crime at the helm;
And asked him politely his mission to name,
And if he was licensed to retail the same
In retail barrel of whisky which he —
As fondly surveying with demoniac glee?

"Oh, I never handle the stuff," he replied,
"My partners mortal are trusty and tried;
But as, peradventure, you might wish to look
At the invoice complete—I will read from this book.
You will find that this barrel contains something more Than forty-two gallons of whisky galore."
And ere I could slip but another word in,
He clucked it off gally, this cargo of sin:

A barrel of headaches, of heartaches, of woes;
A barrel of curses, a barrel of blows;
A barrel of tears from a world-weary wife;
A barrel of sorrow, a barrel of strife;
A barrel of all-unavailing regret;
A barrel of cares and a barrel of debt;
A barrel of crime and a barrel of pain;
A barrel of hopes ever blasted and vain;
A barrel of falsehood, a barrel of cries
That fall from the maniac's lips as he dies;
A barrel of agony, heavy and dull;
A barrel of poison—of this nearly full;
A barrel of poverty, ruin and blight;
A barrel of terrors that grow with the night;
A barrel of hunger, a barrel of groans;
A barrel of orphans' most pitiful moans;
A barrel of serpents that hiss as they pass
To the head on the liquor that glows in the glass.
"Good barrel! my treasure! I bid thee farewell;
I go by the foul seed. I will reap it in hell!"

Missouri Letter.

BY REV. M. B. CHAPMAN.

The debate in the Methodist Episcopal General Conference over the women delegates has brought the woman question again prominently before the public. Perhaps no more exciting topic of discussion has been before the body since the historic session of forty-four years ago (the last session in New York before this); and had the majority been as wise then as now, many great evils might have been averted.

A wail of indignation over the action of the Conference has come up from the woman suffragists of the country, and some of them express the hope that all the good women will withdraw from the Methodist Episcopal Church. Ah! well, it is only a question of four years, for the vote ordered is almost sure to result in admitting lay-women as well as laymen into the highest council of their church; and so another breach is made between the two great Methodisms of the country. How strange that men are not willing to leave woman where God placed her! As Matthew Henry has beautifully said: "She was not taken from his feet that he might trample upon her, nor from his head that she might top him; but from under his arm and near his heart, that he might protect her and love her."

The pendulum has swung a long ways on the other side since the days of St. Augustine, who found it necessary to employ his amazing dialectic skill to prove that Christian women, in the great day of resurrection, need not to be transformed to men to enter into heaven. I am hardly prepared to agree with the learned president of the Medical Society of Great Britain, that the sole function of woman is not to produce a Baconian philosophy, but n Francis Bacon; for I remember that Madame Galvani pointed out to her husband the phenomenn which led him to his famous battery; that Mrs. Fawcett becamie eyes to the blind, and helped her husband to his career of thinker and of statesman; that no more womanly woman ever lived than Florence Nightingale, who transformed the hospital service of vast armies, and taught us how divine a spirit may wear mortal shape, as she became a ministering angel to the heroes of the Crimea in old Scutari; and that thousands of other women have blessed the world with their words and deeds, no less than they have glorified their homes, and been like angelic presences to husbands and children. But neither have I any patience with Miss Francis E. Willard in her denunciation of St. Paul, because he would exclude the women from the pulpit, nor sympathy with any of the advanced ideas regarding woman's place in politics. Oskaloosa, Kansas, has a woman for mayor, and five women in the City Council, all of whom are the wives of prominent professional and business men of that city. It is confidently expected that the city "will be better paved and have better lighted streets, cleaner alleys, a stricter enforcement of the Sunday Law, fewer hoodlums in the streets at night, and a better city government every way"—all of which may, possibly happen, but what is to become of the households and family duties of these ladies while they are working for the "dear public?"

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."

In 1886 a series of drawing-room Bible readings were held by Mrs. F. Bottome in New York City, which resulted in the organization of a modest sisterhood, under the above name, which numbers in its ranks hundreds of young women in that city, taken from all grades of society. Among them are a large number of prominent society girls. There are no definite rules or regulations for their work; but they comprehend their purposes and duties in the following mottoes: "Look up and not down. Look forward and not back. Look out and not in. Lend a hand." Their watchword is, "In His Name," and, being the King's daughters, they are responsible only to the King. Ten form a circle, and each ten chooses its own work, and its way and time of doing it. One circle choose as their work the visiting of sick children in the hospitals, and detachments of the ten take turns in going to the institution regularly, carrying dolls, picture books, and toys of all sorts for the little ones. Another ten has undertaken to teach a class of poor working girls to sew or cook. Another ten aid the home and foreign missions, and still another choose the difficult duty of trying to help people to tell the truth. There is scarcely a branch of philanthropic or Christian work which these circles do not touch upon, and the good they do themselves is as great as that which they do to others. How much more beautiful and womanly is such work as this than the attempt to force woman into politics, or into the legislative councils of a great ecclesiastical body!

DIFFERENT METHODS.

The Missouri Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, met in our city a few weeks ago, and, in attending their sessions, I found that many of their methods of conducting business differ materially from ours. In place of voting viva voce, as with us, they always vote by a showing of hands. The presiding elders sit on the platform with the Bishop, and pretty well run the business of the Conference. The rank and file have little to say or do, and several times the Bishop suggested a motion and put it before anyone formally offered it. They have but little preaching, there having been only two sermons during the entire Conference, except on Sunday, and one of those was the opening sermon preached the night before the session began. The time is wholly taken up with the numerous anniversary meetings.

Quite an innovation on the usual work of a Methodist Conference was the introduction of Bishop Tuttle, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who was present as a visitor one morning. He made an excellent talk, full of catholicity, in the course of which he said many good things about the Methodists. He told a good story, at his own expense, on our E. J. Stanley, of Montana, which is worthy of repetition. Before being elected to the diocese of Missouri, Bishop Tuttle was Missionary Bishop of Montana. He knew Stanley quite well, and expressed a warm friendship for him. One day he was riding in an open buggy with one of his preachers, driving a slow horse, and enveloped in a cloud of dust, when he saw a buggy approaching, drawn by a pair of spanking bays, who were traveling at such a rapid gait that they kept ahead of the dust. When they met he saw that it was Stanley, and, raising his hand to stop him, the Bishop said: "Now, Stanley, I want to know how this is. Why is it that you, a Methodist preacher, drive so fine a team and outride the dust, while we Episcopal preachers have only one slow horse who can not go fast enough to keep the dust out of our eyes?" With a twinkle in his eye, Stanley answered: "I reckon it is because you are one-horse preachers." "Drive on," said the Bishop to his companion.

LOCAL OPTION.

The local option campaign in the State is about over for the season except in St. Louis, where it is just beginning. The result is very gratifying to the temperance people, and has greatly astonished the whiskyites. In all, 102 elections have been held—82 in counties and 20 in cities of 2,500, or more, population. Forty-nine of the 82 counties voted "dry;" and 13 of the counties, voting "wet," have no saloons, while two others will have none after July 1. Thirteen towns voted "dry," and one of the seven "wet" towns has become dry, making 14 "dry" towns in a total of 20 that have voted. The strongholds of the liquor traffic are the five principal cities—St. Louis, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Sedalia and Hannibal. None of these have yet voted, though St. Louis votes next month, and the local optionists have begun a vigorous campaign there. Sam Jones and Sam Small were there last week and struck some vigorous blows for temperance, as they always do. So far local option has closed 250 saloons and stopped an annual liquor revenue of $251,000.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

We are just getting through with the District Conference season in Missouri. These are pleasant occasions; but it does seem to me that there should be some legitimate business before these bodies other than merely the election of lay delegates to the Annual Conference. The recommendations to the Annual Conference for admission on trial and for the election of local preachers to deacon's and elder's orders should be part of the business of this Conference, as should also the examination of the characters of local preachers, who should be required to make to the District Conference reports of their work during the year. In the Methodist Episcopal Church the amenability of local preachers and exhorters is wholly to the District Conference, to which they bear the same relation that traveling preachers do to the Annual Conference. They borrowed the District Conference from us, and then improved on it.

The reports from the various districts show an advance all along the line, and a healthy growth in every department of church work. The number of conversions and accessions will average from three to four hundred on each district, making some 3,000 in the Conference up to the present time.

The Bishops have appointed our Conference a week earlier than usual this year, and Bishop Hendrix returns to us. He is always welcome, as we still consider him one of us.

HIGH WATER.

The all-absorbing topic with us now is the high water, the Mississippi having reached the highest stage since 1851. It has been rising very rapidly for three weeks, and for the past ten days has been encroaching on the entire river front of this city. The machine shops, lumber yards, factories, mills, etc., situated on low ground have all been compelled to shut down, being completely inundated; and the only railroad able to run any trains north or east is the Wabash, the other tracks being completely submerged. Many dwelling and business houses in South Hannibal and in the lower part of the city are completely flooded, and the occupants have been compelled to vacate them. Quincy, Burlington, Keokuk, Louisiana and other river towns are suffering in the same way, and business is being very greatly damaged. But the greatest sufferers are the farmers just opposite this city in the Mississippi bottoms. The levee broke yesterday morning, and a vast section of rich and valuable farming lands is completely inundated to a depth of from six to ten feet. At least 200,000 acres are under water, half of which was in wheat a foot high. The poor people whose farms are thus destroyed are left homeless and penniless, and great suffering and destitution is sure to follow. From the hills around this city a vast sea of water is to be seen on the Illinois side, extending clear to the bluffs, ten miles distant.

PERSONAL.

I am glad to see that you have so far recovered as to be able to be at your post again, although my old friend, Dr. Evans, who acted as your substitute, sat as gracefully on the tripod as though "to the manor born." But, then, he is at home wherever you put him—in a station, on a district, at the editorial desk or in the secretaryship of an Annual Conference.

In Memoriam.

REV. CHARLES EDWARD M'LEAN.

BY FRANK A. DANIELS.

This gifted young man passed into rest April 15, 1888, at 12:40 P. M., aged a little over twenty-six years, with a clear vision of the better land. He was conscious to the end, and in this was his prayers answered, as he desired to be fully cognizant of his approaching dissolution.

To have known Charles E. McLean was a great privilege, and the pleasure of his associations will remain green as long as memory itself sits enthroned.

The beauty of his noble character was best known to those with whom he was intimately associated. Wherever his lot was cast his character shed a lustre that was beautiful to behold. Among his own family, his classmates at school, in the family circle, in his ministerial associations, and amongst his people—all testify to his intrinsic worth, uprightness of character and sterling integrity.

As a student at school, he was classed with the highest of his fellows. He was an exemplar to both young and old.

As a minister, he was an extraordinary man, possessing, in a gifted degree, the combined graces of faith, hope and charity. He had an unwavering faith in God, an unfaltering hope and a love unbounded. He loved his people and the people of God. He wept and prayed over the erring of his flock. He agonized for souls—in this was the love of the Savior displayed.

He was a preacher, I imagine, of Elijah Steele's type. Preaching was his business, and he followed it with all of the energy of his life. Deeply spiritual, eloquent, learned, and possessing eminently what is termed "common sense," he was destined to great usefulness in the church of God. He displayed in his pulpit efforts energy, pathos and a love for souls. To hear him once was only to intensify the desire to hear him again and again. He never entered the pulpit without that preparation, which is made apparent as the service progressed, for from his eyes beamed the influence which impelled his efforts. "He had been with Jesus." He seemed constantly to dwell "under the shadow of the Almighty." His opening prayer dispelled any gloom in which his congregation might be enveloped. He loved the poor, and his delight was to minister unto them. He was a favorite among the children, and always commanded their best attention. In the social circle he was the centre of attraction, possessing personal magnetism, and sparkling with wit and repartee, but in no case departing from that dignity of character becoming to a Methodist preacher. He made himself a factor in every department of church work, and always found time to advocate and promote the various auxiliary interests of the church.

His missionary spirit was all-consuming. No cause ever had a truer champion. He was kind, gentle and affectionate and patient to the end. He suffered unmurmuringly all through the two years of his severe affliction, yet with a patience which characterized Job of old. He was firm in discipline, but kind in its administration. The weakest found in him a friend. He despised anything mean or low.

He was a graduate of Centenary College, and came out with the highest honors. He was of the type of the lamented Porter and Jackson, and of others who still remain in active service—all of whom have honored their alma mater, which has itself done so much honor to our Methodism.

It can truly be said of Charles E. McLean: No better man ever lived. In his last charge (Algiers) his memory is treasured above priceless gems, and hundreds will revere his name as a faithful man of God.

We loved him as a brother, and his separation from us has left a void, which is only assuaged by the hope of a future reunion.

His early demise is regretted by all who knew him; yet God's hand is guiding, and why should we murmur? He longed for rest, and the Lord took him after long suffering.

We condole with his dear, aged mother and loved ones who are left, and offer them the sympathy of the gospel.

I offer this memoir as a tribute to my old pastor and dear friend, whose hand I expect to again grasp in the eternal city.

ALGIERS, Louisiana.

Organic Union of the Two Methodisms.

Rev. C. H. Briggs, of Kansas City, writing on this subject in the St. Louis Advocate, says some pertinent things:

"I must confess surprise at the easy way in which a few of our preachers are ready to solve all difficulties by organic union. The two churches are more widely separated than they were in 1844-5.

"Slavery has disappeared, but neither church has receded from the positions taken on deep, underlying principles of vastly greater moment. The writer was raised in the North, and was always opposed to slavery, but with heart and soul believes in the principles put forth by the Southern minority in 1844, to which principles the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, stands as thoroughly committed now as then, while the Methodist Episcopal Church stands where the majority stood in 1844, with no veto power in her system, and the General Conference practically absolute in its authority. No one who neglects the history of the past is prepared to wisely project the policy of the future, and a clear recognition of differences is necessary before one can say whether union is practicable or even desirable.

"Passing by minor points of difference, such as lay delegation, the presiding eldership, and the probation system, the color question would of itself effectually bar all attempts at union.

"We are not prepared to recede from our action of 1870 in organizing the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, nor would they set apart their colored members for the sake of union with us.

"A fundamental difference is in the form of receiving members. Of the great churches of America we are almost, if not quite, the most liberal, and they the most narrow. A comparison of the form of receiving members, as given in the Disciplines of the two churches, will bear out my statement.

"But, perhaps, the greatest of all differences is the difference in the genius of each Methodism. It is this which has produced all the differences which appear and is in itself undefined and undefinable. Men who know both Methodisms will understand what I mean, but by such comparison can it alone be understood.

"I know in many fields there seems a sad waste of forces, but for this conflict we are not responsible. In repudiating the original compact which provided against such waste they assumed all such responsibility. The only practical remedy now is the law of natural selection and the survival of the fittest."

PREACHERS AS BIBLE READERS.—Strong preachers have ever been Bible preachers. The old reformers drew their weapons from the heavenly armory. The sermons of Bunyan, and Baxter, and Flavel, and men of their stamp, were full of God—instinct with living doctrines. Their very garb was after the Scripture pattern. Whitefield, as a custom, read the Bible with "Henry's Commentary," day by day, on his knees, praying over every sentence, line and word. Edwards and Davies were mighty in the Scriptures. Of Chalmers it has been said that his sermons "held the Bible in solution." Preachers who saturate their sermons with the Word of God never wear out. The manna which they bring is pure, and sweet, and freshly gathered. It never cloys. God's Word is deep, and he who studies it will ever have something new. He will never be dull, for the words of the Bible are strong words, and its images and descriptions are flowers of elegance. Apt citations clench the passages of the preacher's discourse, and give sanction, dignity, positiveness, authority, to it. And they shed light into his subject, like windows in houses.—Christian Guardian.

To stand "all the day idle" is to spend one's time in meeting the demands of selfism, in living to and for one's self, and for the present life exclusively. An activity which has not the love of Christ for its motive, and the fulfillment of one's obligations to God and man for its aim or end, is spiritual idleness. Hence Christ is ever saying, even to busy men who exclude him from their activities, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?"—Zion's Herald.

GOD'S FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

One-tenth of ripened grain,
One-tenth of fruit and vine,
One-tenth of all the yield
From tens-tenths' of rain and shine.

One-tenth of lowing herds,
That browse on hill and plain;
One-tenth of bleating does,
For ten-tenths' shine and rain.

One-tenth of all increases

JESUS RISEN.

Matthew xxviii, 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.—1 Cor. xv. 20.

TIME.—A. D. 30. Sunday morning, April 9 (17th Nisan).

PLACE.—Joseph's tomb not far from Calvary.

INTRODUCTION.

The Certainty of the Resurrection.—The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the great miracle which puts the divine seal of approbation to the whole work of Christ. It is the immovable foundation of the Christian Church and the pledge of the future resurrection of believers. "I live, ye shall live also." Nothing but such a miracle can account for the sudden elevation of the disciples from the midnight gloom of despondency, into which the crucifixion had cast them, to the mildday height of joy and triumph with which they boldly declared the resurrection at the risk of their lives. Only this miracle can explain the conversion of Paul, and the establishment of the Christian Church. Without it the church would be a stream without a fountain, a temple without a base, an effect without a cause; without it the gospel would be an idle dream, and Christ himself a cruel deceiver. (1 Corinthians xv. 17.) But the fact is the most certain in history. It is distinctly asserted by four evangelists, whose testimony nowhere shows greater independence of each other, and in the Acts of the Apostles; it is preached directly or assumed in all the epistles; it has been so believed for eighteen centuries, and is commemorated on every Lord's day.

1. In the end of the Sabbath—Our Saturday, of which no record has come down to us.—Jesus had now lain in the guarded tomb Friday night, Saturday, and Saturday night, and the morning of the first day (our Sunday) had come. As it began to dawn—Literally, "at the dawning into." Mark says, "when the sun was risen;" Luke, "at early dawn;" John, "while it was yet dark." The twilight in Palestine is not of very long continuance as compared with most European countries, so that all point to about the same time, namely, day-break. The day of the Savior's sepulcher repose was the last of Jewish Sabbaths. The first day of the week has from that time to this succeeded to the honors of the Fourth Commandment. Came Mary Magdalene—That is, Mary of Magdala. She is described as one out of whom our Lord cast seven devils. (Mark xvi. 9.) This fact, and her presence at the crucifixion and the sepulcher, and our Lord's appearance to her and her report of his resurrection to the disciples, are all that is known of her. There is no ground whatever for identifying her with the woman that was a sinner, mentioned in Luke vii. 36-50, and none, therefore, for the popular idea that her early life was profligate. Yet that idea is all but universal. And the other Mary—Mark mentions Mary Magdalene, Mary mother of James, and Salome. Luke mentions Mary Magdalene, Mary mother of James, and Joanna, "and others with them." John mentions Mary Magdalene only. To see the sepulchre—The purpose of anointing or embalming the body is omitted by Matthew. (See accounts of Mark and Luke.) These two women did not bear the spices. Another motive was present, an unconscious hope of the resurrection, which hurried these women, who had watched by the sepulcher, in advance of the others mentioned by Luke. Joanna, wife of Chuza, Herod's steward (Luke viii. 3), may have been in the advance party, or with the larger band coming with the spices which had been prepared by all the female Galilean disciples.

2. A great earthquake—It is not necessary to understand an earthquake in the ordinary sense of that term. Probably it was a purely local and supernatural disturbance, for the purpose of opening the grave, though possibly an after-trembling, following the earthquake of the crucifixion. Such after-convulsions are not uncommon. Angel of the Lord descended—That there were two angels is clear from John's more minute account (John xx. 12), confirmed by Luke. (Chapter xxiv. 4.) Rolled back the stone—The rolling away was not done naturally, but by a shock. It must not be supposed that the resurrection of our Lord took place at this time, as sometimes imagined and represented in paintings. It had taken place before. "He is risen," etc., are the words of the angel. It was not for him, to whom (see John xx. 19-26) the stone was no hinderance, but for the women and his disciples, that it was rolled away. They had no knowledge of the watch or the sealing, but wondered who should roll away the stone. Little dreamed they that the body was embalmed with immortality, or that angel's hands had opened the door of the tomb. Sat upon it—As a symbol of the completeness of the victory over death.

3. His countenance was like lightning—In its exceeding brightness. These angelic appearances can not be regarded as visions. The accounts are too explicit. Raiment white as snow—A symbol of purity and of fellowship with God.

4. For fear of him the keepers did shake—That is, the Roman guard mentioned in the preceding verse. Became as dead men—They became utterly unstrung in their strength, unnerved, unmanned. They would fall prostrate and collapsed to the ground. It is very probable that the splendor of a glorified body is always sufficient to overwhelm the senses and prostrate the strength of a living mortal. Such was the effect of the transfiguration upon the disciples.

5, 6. Angel answered ... fear not ye—Let the soldiers fear, but not ye. This indicates that all were still outside the tomb. We do not read of any words as spoken by the women, but the words which they now heard were an answer to their unuttered questionings and fears. The bright one on whom they gazed knew their distress and amazement at the sight of the emptied sepulcher, and told them that there was no cause for fear. Ye seek Jesus ... crucified—Whoever is honestly and earnestly seeking Jesus the crucified need not fear, even though he has not consciously found him. Observe that to the angel he is, as to the redeemed in heaven, the Lamb as it were slain. He is risen—Through woman death was first introduced into the world to woman the first announcement was made of the resurrection. The resurrection of our Lord is the culminating and crowning fact of Christianity. "Blot the resurrection," says Dr. Kennedy, "out of the story of the Christ, and you may as well blot out the Christ himself. Blot out the Christ, and you may as well blot out God." As he said (See Luke xxiv. 6, 7.) Come, see the place—Charming invitation! "Come, see the spot where the Lord of glory lay: now it is an empty grave: he lies not, but he lay, there. Come, feast your eyes on it!" The place was, doubtless, a cell or niche, usually cut horizontally in the perpendicular wall, so as to insert the corpse, with the head entering first and feet toward the court. Sometimes a shelf or bench was cut along the wall, so as to allow the corpse to lie parallel to the wall and entirely visible. Where the Lord lay—So an angel speaks of "Jesus who hath been crucified." Not your Lord, in which case it might merely mean master or seignior, but the Lord. With the definite article this word is in the gospels equivalent to God.

7. Go quickly—Don't linger here! Carry the tidings. Tell his disciples—"and Peter." (Mark.) Peter, more than the rest, would be longing for the Lord's return to win forgiveness. He goeth before you into Galilee—He would be there when they arrived. This language does not imply a literal traveling by Christ. The angel refers to the Lord's last prophecy of his resurrection, which contained a promise couched in almost these very words. There shall ye see him—This must refer to those more public manifestations of himself to large numbers of disciples at once, which he vouchsafed only in Galilee; for individually he was seen by some of those very women almost immediately after this. The gathering of the flock in Galilee was a measure of prudence to prevent persecution and to dissociate them from the old temple. Lo, I have told you—To give solemnity to the command. These words are peculiar to Matthew, and are a mark of accuracy.

8. They departed quickly—Haste, joy, energy: this is the missionary way: this is the true ministerial way. We have fallen into a mean amble, we have slunk off and let every racer beat us; the gospel messenger lags somewhere in the rear; he is outrun by many a man. We want more quickness, more energy, more running powers in the church. With fear and great joy—A natural state of mingled feeling, in view of what they had seen and heard. Fear at what they had seen, joy at what they had heard, and both mingled because the latter seemed too good to be true. Did run to bring his disciples word—They thus, as Matthew Henry remarks, acted as apostles to the apostles. "And they could not help making 'haste' on such a royal 'business.'"

9. Jesus met them—No man can go upon his errands without his company. Jesus Christ always meets his messengers, or joins them, or overtakes them. Saying, All hail—Literally, Rejoice; the Greek salutation, both on meeting and on parting. Words of exulting congratulation to mourners weeping for the dead. His work was done, a new era had begun: death was conquered in his person: life and immortality were brought to light for the world. But what will be his joy when he returns in glory to utter a last "All hail!" to sea and land, to the graveyard of the world, to the dust of everyone which has been marked to his eye and precious to his heart. Held him by the feet—Their awe controlled their love: and hence they only ventured to touch him at his feet. Kneeling down, with beautiful oriental facility and grace, and trembling all over with agitation, they would, after grasping his feet, passionately cling to them. Their profound obeisance would be instinctively sublimed into actual adoration or divine worship. Worshiped him—The devoted women signified, by their beautifully significant and seemly acts, their deep appreciation of their Lord's worthship.

10. Be not afraid—What dear associations would these familiar words—now uttered in a higher style, but by the same lips—bring rushing back to their recollection! There is a mysterious awfulness about his Person which first inspires fear, and then claims adoration. Tell my brethren—A touching term coming from the risen One, and applied to those who had forsaken him. He previously had declared that whosoever does the will of God, the same is my brother, but he never before employed the term in direct address to his disciples. Galilee—Jerusalem has forfeited the honor of Christ's presence. It was a tumultuous city; therefore, he adjourns the meeting to Galilee.

11. When they were going—While the women were hastening to announce the gospel of the resurrection to the disciples, the soldiers were going to report it to the Pharisees; the one to publish it for the world's redemption, the other to conceal and counteract it. Some of the watch came ... the chief priests—This incident, like that of the appointment of the guard, is reported by St. Matthew only. The object of the soldiers was, of course, to escape the penalty which they were likely to incur for seeming negligence, but their statement to the priests was at first a truthful one. They told "all the things that were done" the earthquake, the opened and emptied sepulcher, perhaps also of the form in bright raiment that had filled them with speechless terror.

12, 13. Gave large money unto the soldiers—Literally, many pieces of silver, a largesse. More than they gave to Judas. This is the lowest depth of their malice: and a humiliating position. Here was "large money" given for the advancing of that which they knew to be a lie, yet many grudge a little money for the advancement of that which they know to be the truth, though they have a promise of being reimbursed in the resurrection of the just. Let us never starve a good cause when we see a bad one so liberally supported. His disciples ... stole him away while we slept—The story was, on the face of it, self-contradictory. How could they tell, if they had been asleep, who had stolen the body? All that they could know was that they had fallen asleep, and that when they awoke the sepulcher was open and empty.

14, 15. If this come to the governor's ears—Come before him officially—that is, "if a stir be made, and you be in trouble about it." Will persuade him ... secure you—The "we" and the "you" are emphatic here—"We shall (take care to) persuade him and keep you from trouble," or "save you harmless." The "persuasion" of Pilate meant, doubtless, quieting him by a bribe, which we know otherwise he was by no means above taking. Did as they were taught—They had a part to play, they were paid actors, they were professional liars, they had been paid to swear and work on the other side. This saying ... commonly reported ... until this day—That is, when this gospel was written, twenty or thirty years after the resurrection. It follows that either the Sanhedrin or the early Christians invented a lie. There is no middle ground. ... Justin Martyr, in the middle of the second century, mentions the report as common among the Jews of his time, that the Jews sent chosen men to all the world, saying: "A godless and lawless heresy has been raised by a Galilean impostor, and when we had crucified him, his disciples stole him by night from the tomb." He thus, from his own experience, attests the truth of the narrative of Matthew. The lie was repeated by the blasphemous Jewish legend, "Toledoth Jesu," and was believed by credulous infidels in modern times.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Our Lord's resurrection was a supernatural fact, verified at the time by angels, by the Roman soldiers, and by repeated appearances to the disciples, who had been plunged into despair by his death, and who would never have propagated his faith unless convinced that he had truly risen; verified later on by a four-fold narrative, by the establishment of the Christian Sabbath, by the wonderful development of Christianity, and by the presence and life-giving power of the risen Redeemer in the church.

2. Our Lord's resurrection was a pledge that all shall rise; for he was "the first fruits of them that slept." Death does not end all. The stone is "rolled away from the sepulcher of human hope."

3. Our Lord's resurrection confirmed all his teachings, and made available the merit of his death. For "if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; ye are yet in your sins."

4. Our Lord's resurrection is a type of our own spiritual rising to newness of life in him.

A Chat with the Advocate.

Next to "the friend that sticketh closer than a brother" has the ADVOCATE dropped in oftenest to cheer and comfort this scribe. So from the heart goes back an echo of thanks, and this rusty pen must run or break. To grope through this world without the weekly religious paper would only be tolerable at the place where no paper is found. With the Bible and a good memory one might exist without it, but they certainly would "feel like one who treads alone" some good-for-nothing region. One of the first things I can remember is sitting on my father's knee while he read the newspaper to my mother. He was a Christian and a patriot, and often when he was reading news that touched his heart did I feel the warm tears that trickled down his cheeks fall on my upturned face. I thought there was a wonderful power in a newspaper if it could make a strong man shed tears. When I was five years old, I could read the newspaper for myself; and the first one I remember reading was The Missionary Herald, which my mother took. From it I imbibed the missionary spirit, and would have entered that field of labor, but "the door was shut." The Lord had other work for me, and it was well. One of my daughters once remarked that "all mother wanted for her bric-a-brac was newspapers and books, and the lares and penates of her household were papers and books, and her fancy-work was papers and books." So no wonder if my occupation would be gone without them.

This scribe has had a grand treat in the visit a beloved brother paid me very recently. It had been many years since we two had met. Dr. B. F. Crary, editor of the California Christian Advocate, Methodist Episcopal Church, on his way to the General Conference, now sitting in New York, stopped and paid me a short visit. To me it was like a dream; I could scarcely realize that he was here before he was gone. Our paths met, and we held sweet communion for a short time, then the iron horse bore him away. When I remarked "that it would probably be the last time we would look in each other's faces on this side of the river," he said: "Perhaps not; and if so, it matters not—eternity for us is just a little way ahead, and then there will be no more partings." He preached at our church from the text: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock."

Dr. Crary was converted among the Presbyterians. The young converts of the college he was attending held a prayer meeting every week. One night while he was leading in prayer his heart "burned within him," and his Methodist blood waxed warm, and his words were not uttered in a "still small voice," but poured out in mighty wrestlings with God for blessings and power. The minister (Rev. Mr. Benton, of Cincinnati, Ohio,) came to him after the meeting closed, and, patting him on the shoulder, said: "Benjamin, you must not get too good." After he finished his studies, he practiced law two years in Indiana. The Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in the town where he lived, and, attending it, his soul responded to the call of the Bishop for laborers, and he offered himself and was accepted. Forty-three years he has been a faithful minister of the church, serving it in almost every capacity in Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Colorado, and for the last eight years as editor of the California Advocate.

Our house, though divided against itself, has stood thus far. When all but this brother came South, we joined "the church that was in our house," and he staid in that. Lovingly we have each done what we could for the church of our choice. Two other brothers, members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, with myself are all that are left of our family.

"Soon shall we meet again—
Meet ne'er to sever:
Soon will peace wreathe her chain
'Round us forever."

Oh, these meetings and partings, how they pull and stretch our heart-strings till they well nigh break! But when we forget our own sorrows and go to the garden of Gethsemane and view that loving, suffering Christ "whose soul was exceeding sorrowful even unto death," and hear that thrice-repeated, agonizing prayer, we would be like the man that "had not on a wedding garment" were it not for the knowledge that he, though "very God," was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief and touched with our infirmities." Oh, blessed comfort this!

Sabbath-Breaking and Its Punishment.

MR. EDITOR: The law of the Sabbath is universally binding upon every accountable human being. It was instituted by our Almighty Creator at the conclusion of the original creation. The Sabbath was made for man as a day of necessary rest and refreshment in every seven. It was sanctified and set apart for the temporal and spiritual well-being of the whole human race. It was embraced in that best epitome of all laws, human and divine, known as the Ten Commandments, written upon tables of stone by the finger of God, and is in the following words: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." This language is too plain not to be well understood by all who either read or hear it announced. It is frequently referred to in the Scriptures, both of the Old and New Testaments, and the penalties for Sabbath-breaking duly announced. There is a passage in Isaiah lviii, last two verses, that throws a flood of light on the manner in which the Sabbath should be kept, and the blessings that follow its observance: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable: and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

Anyone can understand the full import of this very important law regulating Sabbath-keeping by simply reading it with care. It is too plain in every word to be misunderstood. It is not merely church members who are required to keep the Sabbath day holy, but all outsiders as well. Sabbath-breaking is Sabbath-breaking in the sight of God, whether it is done by a professing church member or by a non-professor who ignores and neglects all church obligations.

And now, before my paper is full, I will briefly allude to the manner in which Sabbath-breaking is seen all over this land of Christian civilization among both professors and non-professors. While they usually suspend their six days' work, they intentionally arrange to appropriate the Sabbath to social or secular purposes. Here is a man who lives so far from his market town that it takes his team two or three days to make the round trip, and, in order to save a working day, he purposely starts his wagon on Friday or Saturday in time to deliver his cotton and get his back load aboard by Saturday evening, so that he can have the whole of Sunday to drive his wagon home and unload and put away his goods Sunday evening. Now, sir, whoever you are, whether in or out of the church, you are a deliberate Sabbath-breaker. You require your wagoner to drive your team most of the holy Sabbath: in violation of the express law of the Sabbath you make your team work all day when they should be permitted to rest, and then half the family or more must be called out on Sunday evening to unload the wagon and put away the goods. You may try to dodge, but God knows that you are a Sabbath-breaker, and will deal with you as such. Other examples: A man has a business trip to make that will take two days, or with his family he wishes to visit relatives or see after his children off at school. The round trip requires two or three days, and he purposely starts out on Sunday, or takes Sunday to return. And the same crime is committed by hundreds of Sabbath visitors. They ignore the Sabbath for religious purposes, but they seek "their own pleasure and speak their own words" on the day that should be devoted to their spiritual interest.

I propose to finish what I have to say on this subject in another short article. J. O. JONES.

Figures and Facts.

"Facts are stern, unrelenting, and figures don't lie," it is said; yet truth may be told in such a way, and figures arranged in such order, as to make a false impression.

In the Mississippi Conference there is a poor circuit without a parsonage, with a membership of over five hundred. They are as good people, I think, as I know of, and they do more for the cause of the Master in my opinion, according to their ability, than any people I ever knew of. If the entire church were to give of their means as freely as this poor circuit for the furtherance of the gospel, it would hasten the millennial dawn. I have been acquainted with this charge over eight years. Their habit is to pay all their assessments, and the district stewards tax them in proportion to their liberality, and fully as high as they ought to, so I think. And yet per capita figures are decidedly against them; for Conference claimants they only reach the neighborhood of a nickel.

Now, I know another charge equally well. They report about one hundred members. I think they pay less, according to financial ability, than any work I know of. The district stewards seem to assess them somewhat according to what they hope to get from that work, and they almost always fall short of their assessments; yet per capita figures place them among the very first charges of the Conference for liberality. These I know are extreme cases.

I mention this to show that per capita estimates of the liberality of our people does not always show the true inwardness of the situation; yet I think they have their value and ought to be studied. Yours, etc.,

LECOMPTE AND BAYOU BŒUFF.

MR. EDITOR: Lecompte is a new town on the Texas Pacific railroad, situated near the banks of Bayou Bœuff, a swiftly flowing stream running parallel with Red river on the west side, and east of Bayou Cocodra. It courses through the parishes of Rapides, Avoyelles and St. Landry, and upon either bank, throughout its entire length, are the finest cotton and sugar farms within this State, free from overflow. The product of these lands run up into the millions annually; yet strange to say, this genial clime and fruitful soil has never been sown effectually so as to grow permanently the gospel seed of Methodism, until about three years ago Rev. J. M. Bear erected a beautiful little church at Lecompte, which is near the source of this bayou. This church was reported at the last Annual Conference as the probable door to a permanent entering into this seemingly close vineyard of the Lord with the gospel by Methodists: and Bishop Key, to fit the lock, applies himself by sending Rev. J. E. Denson and the writer to take charge of the "Lecompte and Bayou Bœuff circuit," and though with fear and trembling, we entered this hitherto difficult field without parsonage or home for wife and little ones, we have found that the Lord is near, and as of old, whispers: "Fear not little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And, blessed be the name of our God, we have unfurled the banner of the Lord of life to catch the breath of our great Jehovah, who is able of the dry bones to raise unto himself "a living army." We have erected two school-houses, and have money and material subscribed to build a third one, in which we have Sunday-schools and a large congregation twice a month. We have money in hand to open a beautiful church in Bunkie. We have received by profession and baptism forty-one members, and thirty by transfer, making seventy-one to date. Thirty adults and eight children baptized this year, with many more to follow soon. Seven Sabbath-schools, two prayer-meetings, with a spirit of love for the cause of the blessed Lord prevailing.

With the able assistance of our presiding elder, Rev. B. F. Alexander, and the zeal of our junior and a local brother from the Mississippi Conference, Rev. William N. Fulton, we feel that the work will find much to encourage and strengthen all those who love the Lord and await his appearing. I feel that I am due a debt of gratitude to Whitworth College, Mississippi Conference, for the efficient assistance of one of its former pupils rendered us in the substantial form of four hundred and ninety dollars, and her own membership in our Bunkie Church. May God abundantly bless this elect lady and the dear brethren who are helping us in this work for the Master, to whom be all the glory forever. Reader, please pray for us.

SATARTIA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has blessed us greatly at Satartia, Miss. After a special effort of preaching, prayer and song, which lasted ten days, we are rejoicing in a quickened church, several conversions, and seventeen additions to the membership.

We are indebted to Bros. Little, Huntley and Scarborough for faithful and efficient help.

OPELOUSAS, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We are in the midst of a gracious revival. Bros. Wimberly and Johns are assisting me with the preaching. The work being done is deep and thorough, in so far as I can judge. The grand old truths of the gospel are stressed and preached with power and vigor. Pray for us.

MR. EDITOR: We observed the week of prayer and self-denial, and I report $18 as the result. We believe that the week of prayer and self-denial was the occasion of great good throughout our charge.

J. O. BENNETT.

A Fact: a Precedent.

The present membership of the Presbyterian Church in New Orleans is over 3,000, as reported at the New Orleans Presbytery, just convened and ended. A year before, according to to the General Assembly Minutes of last May, it was 2,601. Twenty years ago, according to published documents in my possession, the membership was 773, plus. a small and unmentioned membership of the (then) Thalia Street Church, surely not exceeding 25, giving a total then of, say, 800 members. Hence the actual gain, the net increase, of membership has been three hundred and seventy-five per cent. in 20 years. This is a fact demonstrated by official reports and published figures.

In an interview recently had with Rev. Dr. Smith, of this city, and editor of the Southwestern Presbyterian, I was informed that the Presbyterians began work here in 1820. I asked the doctor what their first step was. He said, "The first step was to get a foothold, and the second was to expand." What do you mean by expansion? How did you expand? "We established regular city mission work and—colonized." How was this effected? "After the mission stations had grown sufficently, members from various churches were 'set off' and organized into separate churches, ably officered for regular church work." This colonization was voluntary, of course? Certainly, but we always found Christians sufficiently interested in the work of evangelization to make the sacrifice." Were any of these men of prominence in the community and of influence in the church? "Oh! yes, this was of importance to these new efforts; otherwise they must have been retarded in their growth, or worse, may have languished and died for want of proper support."

From the paper read by Dr. Palmer, at the semi-centennial of Presbyterianism, in New Orleans, November 23, 1873, we gather the following facts pertinent to the interview just referred to. From this we learn that the session of First Church (Dr. Palmer's), in January, 1840 (there being no other Presbyterian church in New Orleans), employed "Rev. Jerome Twichell as city—missionary—with—four months of labor, viz: in the lecture-room, to the colored people; in Orleans Cotton Press, to the seamen: at the city prison, and in the district of Lafayette." This last point culminated, in a few years, in a small chapel. This was "organized September 1843, when twenty members of First Church were set off as a colony for this purpose." The membership of First Church, only seven years before that was 142, and hence 1843 could not have been very large, especially as the work was much harder then than now.) Mr. Twichell resigned his work as city missionary and became pastor of that church. Dr. Palmer is its present pastor. It reported in May last 670 members; forty more than the other church had.

In less than two months after Mr. Twichell's resignation as city missionary, First Church found another man in the field. Rev. B. L. Stanton, of Woodville, accepted an invitation to act as city missionary, and in April, 1845, twenty-two persons were set off as a nucleus to form a "Second Church." Mr. Stanton, resigning as city missionary, became its pastor, and after ten years resigned, to become president of Oakland College. This church, because of unfavorable location, was finally dissolved or removed to another point.

First Church, in the meantime, took up her work. Shortly after Mr. Stanton resigned his work as city missionary, to take charge of the newly developed church, another mission station was made. "In the fall of 1845, Rev. James Beattie took charge of the mission and opened services in his own house on Esplanade, near Burgundy. On March 7, 1846, after a sermon by Rev. Dr. J. A. Scott, the Third Church was organized with a colony of 130 members set off from the First Church." In 1848, a church building, costing $2,500 was erected, which later on was substituted by the present handsome building on Washington Square, costing $45,000.

The Prytania St. Church began in the same way—in a mission school, started by First Church, Uptown. First Church employed and brought Rev. E. R. Steadman here as city missionary, in 1846. A small frame building was erected, as in each of the three instances just noticed. By colonization from three of the other churches, First Church taking the lead in numbers set off, a church was organized by the Presbytery of Louisiana, Mr. Beadle resigned as city missionary and became its pastor and served seven years. In less than three years from its organization it had a membership of 130, and a handsome brick building, instead of the frame chapel, costing about $15,000.

I could enlarge much on the facts presented, and especially by the way of exhortation. But I refrain. Our city mission work, really just begun in New Orleans, is following in the wake of a notable precedent. The above facts are food for thought.

Censorious Preaching.

A ministerial brother said, not long ago, speaking of the effect of his preaching; "When I began my ministry there they all spoke well of it, but now they do not like me so well;" and then gave the reason for the change: "At first I did not know them, and had to speak in a general way, but when I found them out and began to take aim, they complained at me, and some of them went elsewhere."

Inasmuch as this is not a peculiar, but a typical case, the subject ought to be seriously considered by the ministry. The laity do consider it, and the better thinking ones among them regard this mistaken course among ministers, however conscientiously pursued, as very unfortunate. There are censariously inclined laymen who, not having the opportunity themselves of scolding, are very happy to see it well done by others. There are some laymen, too, whose fondness for a sensation so far gets the better of their sober judgment, that they may incautiously encourage the scolding humor in their pastor. But the more reliable laymen of every charge, those who have the good of the cause uppermost always, never fail to regret it when the preacher takes it into his head that the gospel is mostly composed of fly-blisters. I know very well there is the other extreme, the notion that the gospel is all balm, precious ointment, a kind of soothing syrup, and that all of a preacher's wisdom is to take the direction of harmlessness. And there are some soft-hearted and softer-headed people in the congregation who will praise this as the highest type of pulpit faithfulness. But too much sweetness is always nauseating. Somehow the impression will get out that the preacher has a weakness for being good, and stronger and healthier minds will not submit to his leadership.

But neither extreme justifies the other. There is no virtue in scolding. No one was ever made any better by it—not even the preacher himself. It is not the wise way. It is not adapted to our human constitutions, and if the gospel is to be a constitutional treatment it certainly needs adaptation. It is not the manly way. It is a cowardly abuse of the prophetic function to make it the occasion of the venting of one's personal spleen. True courage is always best expressed in temperate tones and self-control. A scolding mood argues a wrong state of the preacher's feelings. It raises a doubt as to the efficiency of the gospel in the preacher's own case. Let us not mistake the spirit in which we are to "cry aloud and spare not," nor fail to remember that it is just as much a duty at times to speak "comfortably to Jerusalem," even if her warfare is not "accomplished." If we are to "reprove, rebuke," we are also to "exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." Turn on the light, scolding brethren: it has been dark and stormy long enough. Let us have some fair weather in the pulpit!

Care of Parsonages.

The parsonage is an important part of any well-equipped mission, circuit, station or district. A home for the preacher is absolutely indispensable to the best results of the pastor's work. This scribe has had appointments with and without them. I have enjoyed them well furnished, and had others not so well supplied. Could furnish you many interesting (to myself and family) incidents connected with our receptions, etc.; but that is not my purpose this time. The people are charged with stinginess and other kinds of meanness in regard to providing, furnishing and supplying parsonages; but I want to show by a single case which came under my notice that they have good and sufficient cause for discouragement. The case stands as follows:

A new, commodious house was purchased, and most amply furnished. The front yard was separated from the rear by a nice picket fence, and filled with rare and beautiful flowers. Fifteen fruit trees of choice kinds were planted. Quite a variety of grape vines were put out in the garden, preparatory to making a grape arbor for all time to come. The vines were doing well, and also the fruit trees, the roses, etc., having yielded well in their season, when the preacher, under whose administration these comforts had been provided, left for Conference. He was sent to another charge, and a good brother followed him. Letter No. 1, from a good sister, who loved the preacher and his family, and also had a laudable pride for their elegant parsonage, ran thus: "I have been but once to the parsonage since you left, and then I almost grew sick at what I saw. The calf was in the front yard eating the fine shrubbery cared for by Sister —— so constantly. The horse was in the young orchard and had destroyed every tree, and a man in the garden plowed up every grape vine. Now what encouragement have we to keep a nice parsonage?" Comment is unnecessary. Have we not many such cases? Furniture abused more than should be. Shade and fruit trees destroyed. The yard made into a cow pen. Gates hanging by one hinge. Palings off. Premises presenting a cheerless outlook, all for the want of a little care and work. The people are often by this condition of things very greatly discouraged, and not to be blamed.

H.

The above, from the Alabama Advocate, deserves a place in all our papers. We wot of a number of instances where similar circumstances were an almost effectual bar against securing any of much-needed improvement and furnishing. A very effectual remedy is for the parsonage aid society to take firm hold, tell such men that it just must not be. But we are glad to say there is much improvement in this matter.

J. L. FUTRELL.

SAYING THE SAME THING.—What if one does say the same things, of course, in a little different form each time, over and over? If he has anything worth saying, that is just what he ought to do. Whether he ought to or not, it is very certain that this is what all who write much or speak much necessarily must and will do. Think of the clergyman who preaches fifty or a hundred or more sermons every year for fifty years! Think of the stump speaker who shouts before a hundred audiences during the same political campaign, always using the same arguments, illustrations and catchwords! Think of the editor, as Carlyle has pictured him, threshing the same straw every morning, until we know what is coming when we see the first line, as we do when we read the large capitals at the head of a thrilling story, which ends in an advertisement of an all-cleansing soap or an all-curing remedy! The latch-key which opens into the chambers of my consciousness fits, as I have sufficient reason to believe, the private apartments of a good many other people's thoughts. The longer we live, the more we find we are like other persons.—Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes.

He deserves disappointment who gives with the hope of return. The object of conferring a benefit should be the good of the receiver, without regard to any collateral advantage to ourselves.—Seneca.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." —Civil Service Gazette.

Peculiar

To Itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Briefs.

Take care how you "borrow trouble!" The interest will be very likely to exhaust all your deposits in the bank of patience!

Dr. John Mason Good on his death-bed said, in relation to his life: "I have endeavored to live up to the doctrines and duties of Christianity, but I have lived below its privileges." Ah! how many now living will have to say the same in the last hour! The truest living is when duty is always looked upon as the highest privilege.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church, whose General Conference is in session at Indianapolis, reports a membership of 463,351, and the total of money raised for all purposes during the year 1887 as $1,064,-583. There are 3,394 churches and 660 parsonages, valued at $5,340,-889. There are 17,009 stewards, 14,190 stewardesses, and 14,778 class leaders.

The Board of Missions adopted the following resolution:

That the president of this Board be requested to issue a circular letter urging upon the treasurers of the Annual Conferences and the pastors the importance of transmitting to the Treasurer of this Board any sums of money, great or small, as they may come into their hands, without waiting for the meeting of their respective Annual Conferences.

Dr. Burrows, one of the secretaries of the Southern Baptist Convention, has published a document entitled "General Statistics," in which he gives the membership of the Baptist Church in the South as follows: White members, 1,115,276 in 14,874 churches; colored members, 1,083,282 in 9,331 churches. The total membership for the whole United States is put down at 2,917,315, and the total for the whole world is put down at 3,-506,719.

In the rules laid down for the holding of Church Conferences it is stated that one of the inquiries which the Conference shall make is this: "Is our religious literature circulated and read?" There is nothing more important to the individual or to the church than the subject which this question raises. As a rule, all over the connection our literature is not circulated as it deserves to be, and the consequence is, our people are not all well posted in church matters as they should be. To keep the church literature prominently before the people is one of the pastor's chief privileges.

The Revised Version gives some translations of Old Testament passages which are exceedingly clear. In Numbers xxxiii, where the passage runs this way, "On the morrow after the Passover the children of Israel went out with a high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians. For the Egyptians buried all their first born," etc., the Revised Version translates thus, "On the morrow after the Passover the children of Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians, while the Egyptians were burying all their first born." That is clear and shows how much difference one little word makes.

The General Conference of the Northern Methodist Church elected the following men to the episcopal office: J. H. Vincent, J. N. Fitzgerald, I. W. Joyce, J. P. Newman and D. A. Goodsell. Dr. H. M. Thoburn, of Bengal, was elected Missionary Bishop for India and Maylasia

The Bishops' Fund.

The Book Agent has made the statement that the collections for this fund during the past year are about one-sixth behind the amount necessary. This means that each Bishop is short on his salary about five hundred dollars. The salary is a scant one when it is all paid, but when one-sixth remains unpaid, it becomes a very embarrassing matter. It seems that there ought to be no difficulty in raising the Bishops' Fund, for it is certainly a very small assessment on any congregation. In Louisiana we are assessed about 5½ cents apiece for this collection, and we don't suppose anybody else is assessed more than we are. Surely we can do that much. But we suspect the difficulty lies in the smallness of our assessment. It is so little that we take no special pains to collect it closely. A preacher imagines that if he comes within a dollar or two of getting the full amount, it is all right. That uncollected dollar or two comes out of the Bishop's pocket, and for this simple reason: The General Conference Committee in making the apportionments upon the Conferences for the Bishops' salaries did not apportion a larger amount than is actually necessary to meet the claim. They left no margin whatever. Whatever is lacking, then, comes out of the Bishops' pockets. The case, then, is this: Our Bishops have done a year of hard work—traveling, preaching, holding Conferences, dedicating houses of worship, and have had on their hearts the care of all the preachers and all the churches; and for this privilege they have paid out of their own pockets the neat little sum of five hundred dollars apiece! This is simply a shame! Let the brethren everywhere go to work in earnest to roll this reproach off the church. We ought not only to see to it that we raise this year's assessment, but we ought to raise enough over and above that to refund our Bishops that five hundred dollars. How can we ever expect to get to heaven if we work our Bishops as we do, and fail to pay the scant salary for them to live on?

The Northern General Conference.

This body has taken the initiative in forming a National Sabbath Committee, and have invited all other evangelical denominations to appoint representatives to serve on said committee. It appointed twenty on the committee, with J. O. Peck, chairman.

A paragraph was ordered to be put in the Discipline of the church, providing for the appointment of deaconesses, and defining their duties.

The much-disputed subject of missionary Bishops was settled by making such Bishops "coordinate in authority with the general superintendents in the field to which they are appointed," and resolving to pay them out of the episcopal fund.

The Committee on Episcopacy unanimously agreed to report in favor of extending time-limit of the pastorate to four years.

The Conference voted by a majority of two-thirds to ask the Annual Conferences to vote on equal ministerial and lay delegation in the General Conference.

This resolution was passed:

That no one be consecrated to the episcopacy who will not pledge himself to forever abstain from the use of tobacco.

A resolution to commemorate the centennial of the Book Concern was adopted. The centennial occurs 1889.

The Committee on Temperance recommended constitutional prohibition by the States and prohibition by Congress in the District of Columbia, but was careful not to identify the church with any political party on this question. The report was adopted.

Correction of "Gilderoy's" Mistakes about the Atonement.

First. He says I was "attempting to reconcile the differences of your correspondents." No, sir; I considered them irreconcilable.

Second. "He plants himself squarely on the moral influence theory of the atonement." No, sir; I know of no such "theory." That quotation is not from me, as the reader might suppose, nor from any other writer commonly known; so he should have given the author, and not seemingly tax me with the expression.

Third. He objects to my saying that "voluntary suffering and self-denial in relieving distress is the only thing that can cause us to believe that God is benevolent." I now add that that, exactly that, and nothing else can either evidence or manifest a benevolent nature in any being—God, angels or men. Deeds, not words, are the only evidence of benevolence. Simple benefaction, however great, can not do it. Will he point out some other test?

Fourth. "Without a voluntary propitiation and satisfaction God could not forgive sin." Well, what of it? What God could do may not be so easily ascertained as what he did do. I would prefer some word or words less commercial or retributive than "satisfaction."

Fifth. He quotes me correctly as saying, "Suffering means animal suffering, or it means nothing;" and adds: "So then Christ suffered and died as an animal, as a man only." Who says, "only"? I did not. And worse still: "Is there no such thing as mental suffering?" is his posing exclamation. What is he talking about? Is not mental suffering human suffering! Here is an important point on which a word must be said. We know so little about God that we must not speak of his capacity. But this we know—that any kind of suffering entirely apart from animal life is unthinkable. Was not Jesus Christ a man?

Sixth. "Dr. Abbey will not be able to construct a permanent theory of the atonement." He will never undertake it. There lies your difficulty. To construct a theory of the atonement would be about as futile as to construct a theory of the resurrection, or of Christ, of hell or heaven, of everlastingness, of God, or of eternity. Of these things we know exceedingly little, and that little but very imperfectly.

R. ABBEY.

Romish Tactics!

A vigorous writer for the Richmond Christian Advocate, who signs himself "Rudolph," writing of the late Southern Immigration Convention, at Hot Springs, N. C., gives this note of warning:

The head, body and tail of the convention are all Romish—the head in New York under Rome's surveillance, and the tail in the palace of Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore. And this convention, born of Romish thought and inspired by Romish intolerance and hatred to Protestantism, and set on foot by Rome's devoted subjects, for the purpose of colonizing the South with popish subjects, is what they call a "Southern Immigration Convention!" "Immigration Convention?" These zealots of Rome concocted their scheme, as they well know, to develop Romanism in the South; but, in order the better to get the pill down the throat of the South, they sugar-coat with the name of "Southern Immigration Convention"—and they were keen enough to secure the services of the governors of two or three Southern States to help put the sugar on the pill. But the cheekiest thing in that misnomered convention at Hot Springs was the adoption of a resolution offered by a Romanist, proposing to raise the money to carry out their popish scheme by requesting the governors of the Southern States, the president of every Southern railroad, the mayors of every city, and the proper authority of every town east of the Mississippi, to cooperate in raising the funds necessary to perfect a plan to Romanize the South. These prelates of Rome would have the South Romanized as New York City is to-day. They would like to see our Legislature under Romish domination, after the style of the Legislatures of New York. They would like to see the last Bible kicked and swept from our public schools by a huge Romish broom.

If the South is to be colonized by the importation of the fiery zealots of the Pope from Ireland, Spain and Italy; let not the South take any hand or pay one red cent in helping to do it. Better have the country filled up slowly, wisely and surely with a class of population who respect the institutions of Christianity, recognized by the government, and love that Bible which is its corner-stone, than to have poured down on us an avalanche of immigration under popish dictation and priestly rule. Let us beware of these "Southern Immigration (Catholic) Conventions"—with a face to the South and Rome in the heart.

Church Fairs, etc.

BY REV. J. T. SAWYER.

I am glad to see that others, like the ADVOCATE, are sounding the alarm in a matter that is threatening the destruction of spirituality in the churches. Judging by the advertisements in our secular papers of church entertainments, and the like, we take it that the following words of one of London's most successful Christian workers, Rev. Archibald Brown, published in the British Weekly, are suited to New Orleans and may be well applied in our midst:

My final letter is concerning the "new methods" on which you speak in your first article. That a great change has come over evangelistic enterprises none can deny. So great indeed is the change that some of us who have been nearly all our life engaged in the work now hardly know where we are. The preaching used to be the sole attraction. Judging from the announcements placarded on all our walls, it is now one of the least. Choirs, solos, cornets, stringed bands, organ recitals, and I know not what besides, are the baits held out. The Bible is being shelved, and simple exposition giving place to smart anecdotes and the relation of "past experience," which were better forgotten as they have been forgiven. The great aim seems to make a service "bright" and "pleasant," rather than soul-searching. "A happy evening" is about the last thing an unconverted soul needs and about the last thing he would get were Paul the preacher. There is all too little mention of the sinfulness of sin and the righteousness of God. Pleasing the people has taken the place of warning them. The result is that the taste of the masses has become vitiated. They have drunk of the wine of sensationalism until a service with no other attraction than "the Book" seems flat and insipid. Like dram-drinking, the dose has to be perpetually increased or it loses its effect. At the present time there is a dead indifference among the people which, in my judgment, the rank sensationalism of the past few years is largely accountable for. We must get back to simplicity of method, or there will be evil times ahead. The Bible must be more honored and reliance placed alone on the Spirit's application of the Word. The chip-trap of the day is degrading the work of Christ and demoralizing the people. It gives the infidel ground for saying—as one did to my knowledge lately—"Their Christ is played out." This remark was made as he pointed to a flaming bill outside a mission hall announcing some special attractions. That some churches and chapels are little, if any, better in no wise affects the question. It only makes the matter the more serious. Then look again at what is done on a week day, and done in the name of Christian work! What would our grandfathers have said to such an announcement as this in connection with supposed evangelistic work: "Grand pictorial comic pantomime! Lots of fun and roars of laughter for everybody. Come early!" Entertainments, concerts, tableaux, and such like, are playing havoc with the work of God. In the name of religion our children are being trained for the theatre, and under the shadow of the name of Christ young people are being introduced to the "world." The devil never did a cleverer thing than when he suggested to the church of Christ that it was part of her mission to amuse the people. The Lord come to our rescue, or we shall soon have Holy Ghost power "amused" out of our sanctuaries and halls. More Bible teaching, more prayer, more reverence, more simplicity, more Puritanism, more going outside the camp to a rejected Christ—these are the great needs of to-day. We have had enough of the rattle of claptrap. Let us wait on God until we hear the thunder of his power. The Lord bring again to the front apostolic methods and apostolic doctrine; then shall we have apostolic success.

And the following from the Buffalo Advocate is on the same line and to the point:

Did you ever know a revival of religion, or the spirituality of a church, promoted by a fair, or festival, or bazar, or any other catch-penny device of this modern age? Don't, then, permit any of the "active members" of the society to thwart your plans for the protracted meeting by arranging for any of the above. The church had better do without the new carpet or organ, or the Sunday-school get along with their old library, than to have the way hedged up for a thorough revival of religion in your midst. "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

God's way for his children to build churches, pay their pastors and other church expenses, and help in foreign missions, is just to give of their substance as he has prospered them. Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., in a late magazine, put the case thus:

If we have been purchased by the precious blood of Christ, all we are and all we have belongs to him. Dr. William Kincaid says: "A friend of mine, receiving some money at the hands of a bank officer the other day, noticed depending from one of the bills a little scarlet thread. He tried to pull it out, but found that it was woven into the very texture of the note and could not be withdrawn. 'Ah!' said the banker, 'you will find that all the government bills are made so now. It is an expedient to prevent counterfeiting.' Just so Christ has woven the scarlet thread of his blood into every dollar that the Christian owns. It can not be withdrawn; it marks it as his. My brother, my sister, when you take out a government note to expend for some needless luxury, notice the scarlet thread therein and reflect that it belongs to Christ. How can we trifle with the price of blood?"

God's children should always work in the matter of church finance on the plan that God has given.

A Gospel Wagon.

Our City Mission has furnished itself with a gospel wagon. It is a large "cotton-float" transformed into a pulpit and "choir gallery." The wagon is pulled to the place selected for the open-air services, and there is in it ample room for the preacher, organ and singers. The exercises have been largely attended during the past week at the corner of Laurel and Soniat streets. The heavy rain on Friday evening broke up the meeting, but the brethren in charge are in no wise discouraged. They are determined to carry the gospel to those who will not go to the churches. The numbers attending these first open-air services give promise of much good being done during the coming summer. The churches here can not rid themselves of responsibility in these matters until they have made every effort possible to get the gospel in contact with the people. We need funds, funds, funds! Who will help us by generous contributions?

The missionary work of the Religious Tract Society of London is carried on in one hundred and eighty-six different languages.

Notes.

At the reunion of Northern and Southern Presbyterians at the residence of Mr. Morris, Philadelphia, the other day, President Cleveland and lady were the chief attraction. The President made a neat little speech.

That great and comforting utterance of our Savior in the seventh chapter of John, which has so often been misunderstood and, consequently, misapplied, has been made sufficiently plain by the Revised Version. "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak from myself."

Whatever some people may say about him, and there have been many good words in his favor, the Revised Version is not very complimentary to Judas. The passage in the twelfth chapter of John is rendered thus: "Now this he said, not because he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and having the bag took away what was put therein."

A writer in the Advance points out five sorts of persons who ought not to join the church: 1. The man who thinks he is good enough to join. 2. The man who thinks he knows enough to do it. 3. The man who thinks he is doing the church a favor by joining it. 4. The man who thinks that joining the church will save him. 5. The man who intends to cease effort when he joins the church.

A private note to the publisher from our missionary in Brazil, Rev. J. E. Newman, has a good word in regard to our paper. It also contains the following: "We are just now passing through a peculiar phase of emancipation. Most of the negroes are leaving their masters, and in small parties are strolling over the country seeking employment." We regret to know that Bro. Newman's health has been poor for some time past.

A writer in one of our popular magazines says, that "mission work may be regarded as the expression of religious life." As "life" always "expresses" itself in some way, and as "religious life" expresses itself in that way, it becomes a serious question whether some professing Christians have any "religious life." How is it with you, reader? Does the religion of Christ work through you to the good of others? "Examine yourself whether you be in the faith."

Hugh Price Hughes, in an address at the anniversary of the London Wesleyan Methodist Mission, used these significant words: "It will be impossible for us to hold our own in this country in the twentieth century, unless we teach that the ethics of Jesus Christ are applicable, not only to prayer meetings and revival services, but also to business, to pleasure and to politics." The church universal must be brought up to that high plane.

Not all the mercy shown among men will measure up to the New Testament standard. There is a good deal of it, but too much of it is largely mixed with the spirit of gruffness. When the poet declared that "the quality of mercy is not strained, but droppeth as the gentle dew from heaven," he evidently had in mind the mercy of Heaven, and not that which is common among men. There is too little cheerful mercy; hence the necessity to keep constantly in mind the apostolic injunction: "He that sheweth mercy let him do it with cheerfulness." There is not a more beautiful trait in human character than that manifested in the exercise of mercy, with cheerfulness."

Rev. Wesley Guard, the representative of Irish Methodism to the Northern General Conference, closed his address to that body with this warning note:

I do not venture to speak further, but still I can not sit down without saying that we are one with you in the great struggle that you have to pass through. What I fear most for you is this—that you will think, because you are strong, that, therefore, there is no danger. You have in your midst, silently, subtlely, but resolutely moving, the power which we have felt and are contending with in any country. Never was there in the history of the ages, a time when the Catholic Church was so resolute in its purpose, not only to win England, if she can, but to win America. And I know, from my own investigation, the feeling in other hearts is that it has already gained a foothold in this country, such as you have not been dreaming of. Can we not read history aright? What has been the effect and influence of this Roman system upon every land she has touched? What has been the effect in fair Italy? She has shadowed with her deadly upas shade the once famous Spanish nation. Wherever she touched, she has touched to blight and wither. Look at Mexico; look at Peru; look at Chili; look at Central America; look at the West India Islands that she first touched with her blighting influence. Surely, when we remember that, we shall hasten to endeavor to unwind the folds of that great constrictor that she has tried to throw around us. And we will endeavor, by God's grace, to say while we give the utmost freedom to thought and action, of civil and religious liberty, to Roman Catholicism, on that side and on this side, let the old echo be heard there as here: "No peace with Rome."

Obituary Notices.

About a year and a half ago the Publishing Committee instructed the publisher of this paper to publish all obituaries which did not exceed thirty-five lines of space free of charge, and, at the same time, authorized him to charge for all over that number of lines at the rate of five cents a line. It was thought that two hundred words were sufficient to chronicle the death of anybody in the church. It was also thought that by adopting this rule the obituary drawer might occasionally be emptied. But, alas! for the wisdom of the committee! We have had more trouble with that drawer since the rule was adopted than we had before. Very few who write obituaries seem to have read the notice at the head of the obituary column. And some of those who have read it seem to be trying to avoid the rule by writing "tributes" to their dead friends of more than usual length, and requesting the editor to publish them on some other page than the obituary page. We have had the indiscretion to do this several times, and the consequence is, we are receiving more of the same sort. We have nearly always published biographical sketches of our ministers on the first page of the paper. There is, we think, a difference between a minister and a private member in this respect. Now, we do hope that our friends will be careful to read the note at the head of the obituary column when they are about to write an obituary, and attend literally to the instructions given. We do know that thirty-five lines are enough. When the editor wrote the obituary of his own mother—a saintly woman, known to hundreds of people in Mississippi and Louisiana—it made just seventeen lines in the obituary column of this paper.

Felicity Street Church.

The meeting held for fifteen nights in this church resulted in great benefit. Good congregations attended, and the interest increased from night to night. The city pastors did the preaching, which was plain, pointed and owned of the Spirit. There were about forty conversions and ten additions. Since Conference fifty-one have joined Felicity. The pastor reports everything encouraging.

Next Sunday, June 3, at half-past three P. M., the new church will be dedicated, Bishop John C. Keener, D. D., LL.D., preaching the sermon. The beautiful auditorium will, doubtless, be crowded with the friends of Felicity.

The vote for Bishops in the Northern General Conference revealed some things very curious to Southern Methodists. Take this from the correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, of May 25:

Four years ago Dr. Newman made a strong fight for a bishopric, but was defeated. This time he began early, and his plan of campaign was mapped out before the meeting of the conference. The war veterans' reception by Mrs. Grant had his candidacy in view, and Gov. Leland Stanford's influence is said to have been exerted for the same end. There was no attempt to disguise the fact that strong, zealous and active Washington influences were employed to secure his election. Congressman J. D. Taylor, of Ohio, and Judge William Lawrence, of the same State, and formerly Comptroller of the Treasury under President Hayes, Garfield and Arthur, were the active managers of his canvass.

John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia merchant, May 7, presented 272 employees each with an envelope containing a check, as a part of the past year's profits of the concern. The entire amount given to the 272 persons was $10,231 02, or an average of nearly $50 to each.

Personals.

Our delegate to the Northern General Conference, Dr. S. A. Steel, of Louisville, Ky., completely captured his great audience by his eloquence, and he gave them some knowledge in regard to some of our affairs which they much needed.

The Alabama Christian Advocate reports the death of Rev. N. P. D. Samford, of the North Alabama Conference. He was "much esteemed by his brethren," and had "the warmest affection of his people."

The St. Louis Advocate, speaking of a reception given by Lafayette Park Church to our former colaborer here, Rev. S. H. Werlein, says:

The occasion was a very pleasant one, and served the purpose of getting acquainted with each other. The church grows rapidly. Congregations are large; the membership constantly increasing. The pastor is popular, industrious, useful. The church hopeful and happy in its new life.

Dr. John Matthews, of St. Louis, delivers the address at Nashville College for Young Ladies, June 4.

The increase in the membership of our church during the past year has been 41,079. The total membership now is 1,107,456.

The ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the Confederate Monument in Jackson, Miss., came off May 25, and was a grand affair. The military, the Masons and the "Daughter of the Confederacy" participating.

Dr. Cuyler says he has averaged one article a week for the religious press for forty-one years.

A private note from Bro. Jones, of Woodville, Miss., says: "My church is doing well; members are on the upgrade in spiritual life." That is the right grade to be on surely.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of Mansfield Female College, beginning Sunday, June 10, with a baccalaureate sermon from Dr. Scruggs, of Shreveport, La.

With a sad heart we chronicle the death of Miss Willie Austin, daughter of Dr. W. G. and Martha E. Austin, of this city. She was a woman of culture and Christian grace, and her place will not soon be filled.

We deeply sympathize with our presiding elder, Dr. C. F. Evans, in the loss of his youngest child, Eunice Foster. She was of that age to make her the sunshine of the home and the recipient of all its love. "He taketh the lambs in his arms."

Rev. B. Carradine, of this city, will preach the commencement sermon of East Mississippi Female College, Sunday, June 10.

Dr. A. B. Jones, president of Huntsville Female College, will accept our thanks for an invitation to his commencement exercises. The program is tempting, but we must decline accepting the invitation, being due at another place.

The commencement exercises of Centenary College begin next Sunday by a sermon from Bro. Murrah, of Whitworth College. As the Board of Trustees will elect a president for the college, it is desired that all be present, Tuesday, June 5.

Hon. W. B. Ralford, of Gloster, Miss., while conducting a prayer meeting last week, was stricken with apoplexy and died before morning.

Items of Interest.

Trinity Church, New York, had to pay a fine of $1,000 for importing a rector from England. Protection to home labor, you see.

Under the new license law there are 4,500 fewer saloons in Philadelphia than before the law went into effect.

Twenty-one years ago there were only 5,000 native Protestant Christians in India; now there are 500,000.

There are at least 250,000 women in Massachusetts alone who are earning a living by industrial occupations.

The German population of New York is given as 350,000.

Papal Rome has witnessed the laying the foundation of the twenty-second Protestant house of worship within her limits.

There are 4,000 theatres in the United States, and $1,000,000 a day is paid for amusements in this country, or $365,000,000 a year. For missions, less than $10,000,000.

There are 121 Young Men's Christian Association buildings in this country, valued at $5,500,000.

There are now in this country more than 10,000 florists, whose combined greenhouses occupy about 1,000 acres, requiring to cover them 50,000,000 feet of glass. These structures cost some $36,000,000, and the plants in them are valued at twice that sum. More cut flowers are used in the United States, it is said, than in any other country.

The Churchman estimates that "the amount of capital which has disappeared in New York City alone in profitless ventures of church (P. E.) journalism has exceeded one quarter of a million of dollars."

The Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, has been appointed Park Commissioner by Mayor Chapin, of Brooklyn. Rev. Dr. Charles H. Hall, the rector of Holy Trinity, has the appointment as a civil service commissioner.

A Connecticut firm is said to have received an order from the Russian government for 40,000,000 empty copper cartridge cases.

An experienced breeder of swine says that often when hogs are sluggish and indifferent about eating, nothing in the world ails them but the toothache.

Dr. Washington Gladden has been appointed to represent Ohio Congregationalists at the World's Missionary Conference, in London, in June.

The number of women who sell newspapers on the streets in New York is constantly increasing. The newsboys do not hesitate to mob a man or haze a boy who invades their territory, but they never interfere with these women.

The Licensing Board of Philadelphia have granted licenses to 1,109 saloons, where in 1887 there were 5,214 saloons.

Cardinal Gibbons and thirteen archbishops meet in Baltimore early in June to decide what the attitude of the church shall be toward the Knights of Labor, the American Federation of Labor and the Anti-Poverty Society.

The Equal Rights Party nominated Belva Lockwood for President and Alfred Love, of Philadelphia, for Vice-president.

The Hebrew population of New York is estimated at 125,000. Its members are very prosperous, and they hold $150,000,000 worth of real estate. The Jews form a prominent feature of the Cotton Exchange.

Queen Victoria has now reigned over England longer than any monarch but two—Henry III. and George III. She overtook Queen Elizabeth six years ago, and has outdone Edward III., who only reigned 148 days over half a century. If she lives a few years longer, Victoria will have reigned longer than any royal personage of history.

Emperor Frederick is not alone in his misery as a dying monarch. The Emperor of Brazil is dangerously sick; the Kings of Holland, Portugal, and Wurtemberg have incurable diseases; the infant King of Spain is not likely to live to manhood, and the Crown Princes of Russia, Italy, Germany and Baden are all seriously afflicted with maladies which may at any time lead to fatal results.

Summer Tours.

Round-trip excursion tickets at low rates are now on sale via the Burlington Route, C., R. & Q. R. R., from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis to Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Salt Lake City, Ogden, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and resorts West and Northwest. The "Burlington" is the only line running sleeping cars from Chicago to Denver without change. It is the only line by which you can go from Chicago to Denver and be but one night on the road. It is the picturesque line to St. Paul and Minneapolis. It runs daily "fast trains" to Kansas City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Cheyenne and Denver. Fine Government Lands are located on its new lines in Nebraska. It is the best line by which to reach all principal land points in the West and Northwest. Tickets via the Burlington Route can be obtained of coupon ticket agents of connecting lines. Send in postage to Paul Morton, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent C., B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill., four cents for a copy of the Burlington Route Guide, or six cents for an illustrated book about Colorado and the Garden of the Gods.

Prohibition Prohibiting.

Rev. John A. Miller, our pastor at Arcadia, La., in a letter to the Arcadia Record, makes the following showing in regard to the results of prohibition in his town:

There has been placed in my hands a copy of a statistical report on this subject made to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Arcadia, by a committee appointed for that purpose. I would state that the figures are "authentic." It compares the business of the first three months in 1887, with the first three months in 1888. On January 1, 1887, there were nine houses in Arcadia dealing in whisky.

Estimated stock on hand January 1, 1887, by each 200 gallons—Total 1,800 gallons. Received from January 1, to April 30, 1887, 1,800; making a total of 3,600. Deduct stock on hand May 1, 1887, 1,350. There was consumed in the three months 2,250 gallons. There was no stock on hand January 1, 1888, as during the month of December, 1887, the stock of whisky was exhausted, for some of the dealers had small amounts expressed to finish out the trade of 1887.

Amount received from January 1, to April 30, 1888, was 1,480 gallons. This was by three dealers instead of nine, as in 1887. Stock on hand May 1, 1888, 600 gallons; consumed in three months in 1888, 880 gallons against 2,250 gallons in 1887; making a difference of 1,370 gallons in favor of 1888. This amount at an average retail price, $3 per gallon, would be a saving to Arcadia and vicinity of $4,110 in three months, as a result of prohibition, for which the community is largely indebted to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the influence and prayers of those godly women.

Again, it is said that the "voting out of license has ruined the trade of the town." This statement is also incorrect. For, after deducting the $4,110 loss (as they say) from the whisky trade, the merchants' books will show an advance in business far exceeding the mercantile trade of 1887.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Sorghum and Sugar Machinery.

We are in receipt of the catalogue of The Blymyer Iron Works Co., manufacturers of the celebrated Victor, Niles and Great Western Cane Mills, Cook Evaporators, etc. Parties in want of sorghum or sugar machinery will do well to write for a copy of the catalogue.

A Reliable Offer.

In the issue of our paper, dated May 17, may be found a large advertisement of a prominent Soap manufacturing firm of Buffalo. The offer is a peculiar one, from the fact that this firm will send one case of Soaps (groceries) and toilet, enough to last a family one year), freight charges all paid, on 30 days' trial to anyone who will send a postal card with name and shipping address on it.

They also send quite an array of presents to those who buy. For details see advertisement.

J. D. Larkin & Co. are a firm of many years' standing in Buffalo, N. Y., reliable and rank as first-class business men. They certainly show great faith in their goods—Sweet Home Soap—when they will pay all charges of delivering a case for inspection to anyone who will send for it. A liberal offer like theirs should bring them many applications, especially as no risk is incurred beyond the cost of a postal card on the part of those who send in their address to

A SPRING SHOWER.

BY MISS PERCAULT.

Down the drops come, tinkle, tinkle,
With a sudden dash and sprinkle,
Though as blue as periwinkle
Was the sky.
"Some mysterious hocus-pocus,
Knocked above us and awoke us,"
Cries a little yellow crocus,
With a sigh.
There's a roaring! there's a clatter!
There's a smoky dash and spatter
Of the dust, as comes the patter
Of the drops.
Such a drencher, such a pelter,
Is it? yet when, helter-skelter,
Everything has found a shelter,
Then—it stops!

—Wide Awake.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to any paper, I thought it would be nice to surprise everybody with a letter from me in the ADVOCATE. I am going to school to Mrs. Landrum. She is such a nice lady and such a good teacher, too. I belong to the Methodist Church here, and try to live up to its rules. I belong to the Sunday-school here, and I always try to have my lessons perfect. I belong to the Bible class. We have reward cards, and we get them when we have good lessons. Mrs. Landrum is our Bible-class teacher, too. Jennie Faulkner has written to your paper before. She belongs to the Bible class, too. Our missionary society is getting along very well. We took up seventy cents the last Friday we met. Jennie Faulkner, president; Maggie Richardson, vice-president; Ada Sherrouse, recording secretary; Mona Rowe, corresponding secretary; I am treasurer; Mrs. Landrum is lady manager. Our dues are five cents per month, now. Bro. Godfrey is our preacher this year. He preaches splendid, too. Wishing much success to the ADVOCATE, I remain, Your niece,

SALLIE THOMASSON.

WEST MELVILLE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy eleven years old. I have been thinking a long time I would write a letter to the little cousins, and this is my first attempt. I hope to see it in print. My papa takes your valuable paper, and we value it very highly. I have two little sisters and one little brother. Their names are Evelyn, Berrie and Earle. I would like for some of the little cousins to tell me who was the Lord's grandfather, and where in the Bible is it found? I am a Sabbath-school scholar and love to attend. My teacher's name is Mrs. Ben Lee. With much love to the cousins, and many good wishes for our kind editor, I will close,

A New Use for Clothes-Pins.

"Girls, what do you think these are good for?" asked Nannie Brown of her two little Brown sisters. She held up one of the clothes-pins they were picking up from the grass, where Norah had left them after taking in the wash.

"What do we think they are good for? Why, to fasten the clothes to the line, of course," answered the other two little Browns in a breath; "everyone knows that."

"But there's another use for them," said Nannie; "Norah told me last night. She says, if we put them on our noses—so"—and she put one astride her nose as she spoke—"they will make our noses of the most beautiful shape, not at all puggy and turned up as they are now, you know. Wouldn't it be splendid to try it?"

Now, the three little Browns had noses that were decidedly turned up, and many were the times they had each sighed in secret over the fact. Here was their chance to shape their noses "illegantly," as Norah told them.

That night three clothes-pins were missing from the basket. The three little girls, after being tucked in by mamma for the night, each slyly drew one from under her pillow and put it on her nose. It took them some time to go to sleep in such a fix, but they did at last. When mamma came to take a last look at them before going to bed she found them sound asleep, each with a little red nose pinched by a clothes-pin. Although astonished at the sight, she laughed until the tears ran down her cheeks.

As she took off the pins and put them back, she said: "What won't these children do next?"—Our Little Ones.

A Poor Boy's Noble Resolution.

I know I am poor, but I am not ragged, and I will try to be honest. I can go to the Sabbath-school, and there I can get many a tract and pretty book; and my teacher says if I get the knowledge of Christ I shall be richer than many a man who owns thousands of dollars. Yes, I am poor. But I am not poor enough to steal, or to beg, or to lie. And I am not near poor enough to sell on the Sabbath or to go to drinking saloons.

What if I am poor? My teacher says the blessed Savior was poor. He says the apostles were poor. And he says God loves the poor.

I will sing a little before I work:

"He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is poor no pride:
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide!"

Thank ye for that, good John Bunyan; they say you were a poor boy yourself once; no better than a tinker. Very well, you are rich enough now, I dare say.

I don't see, after all, but that I can sing as gaily as if I had a thousand dollars. Money does not lighten people's hearts. There is Mr. Jones; he is very rich, but I never heard him sing a hymn in my life. His cheek is paler than mine, and his arm is thinner, and I am sure he can't sleep sounder than I.

No, I am not so poor either. This fine spring morning I feel quite rich. The fields and flowers are mine. The red clouds yonder, where the sun is going to rise, are mine. All these robins and thrushes and larks are mine. I never was sick in my life. I have bread and water. What could money buy for me more than this?

I thought I was poor, but I am rich.

The birds have no purse or pocket-book; neither have I. They have no pains or aches; neither have I. They have food and drink; so have I. They are cheerful; so am I. They are taken care of by the Lord; so I am.—A Poor Boy, in the Temperance Banner.

TO MAKE AN ÆOLIAN HARP.—Wax a piece of button-hole twist about two and a half feet long; tie each end strongly to a small peg, and thrust the pegs down the crevice between the two sashes of your southern or western window, stretching the silk as tight as possible. It will surprise you with the sweetness and variety of the tones the wind will bring from it.

Having done this you may be moved to go further and prepare a more elaborate Æolian harp. Take some "quarter inch" wood, and make a box the length of your window-frame, four or five inches deep and six or seven wide. Bore a few small holes in a circle near what will be the upper side of the back of the box when placed in the window with the open side of the box in front. To the upper side of the box fasten two bridges, like violin bridges, one at each end, and stretch over them several strings of fine catgut, contriving a series of screw-pins to aid in the tight stretching necessary, and allow of their being tuned to one note. Then raise your sash on the windy side of the house, and the wind passing through the holes and over the strings will, in its rising and falling, make very sweet music.

Many people know how to do this and that, but they lack the capacity for doing. They are listless, indolent, slow; or to call them by a better name, they are lazy. If this can not be overcome in them, they will make no progress.

MEDICAL VALUE OF LEMONS.—Many people know the value of lemon juice in allaying bilious troubles. Many know nothing of the wonderful power wrapped up in the little yellow fruit, for the good lemon juice has done is wonderful—as wonderful as it is harmless and simple. A lady who had suffered greatly with severe attacks of something akin to bilious colic keeps free from them as long as she faithfully takes lemon juice. Let her, though "feeling so well," neglect to take the juice of at least one lemon a day, and in a short time symptoms of the return of the old enemy will make her only too glad to be faithful over that little thing. For several years this lady had been subject to these attacks. No care of diet or druggist's doses averted them, and hope of relief was nearly gone, when a friend said, "You crave sour—why not try lemon juice and water? Dr. Somebody says a person need never be bilious who will take the juice of one lemon in water every night before retiring." Catching at this straw the lemons were tried, and the juice in water, without sugar, was freely drank whenever thirsty, and always the last thing at night. One slight attack of the old trouble proved that the remedy was doing a good work, and after that complete exemption for more than a year makes her an ardent advocate of lemon juice and water. Sick headaches yield in many cases to this simple treatment. Some can not bear the acid, but those who crave it are very sure to be benefited by its use.

CARE OF CHILDREN'S FEET.—Wise mothers see that the children always have dry feet. Shoes should be loose enough to be comfortable always—half an inch longer than the foot, but not loose enough to slip round. Never let a child wear a shoe that is run over on the side or heel, and constantly discourage the habit of standing on the outer edges of the shoe, turning in the toes or rubbing one foot over the other. Have the child taught from the earliest hours of understanding, that the moment his feet are wet he must change shoes and stockings. Some children's feet perspire so that woolen stockings keep the feet damp and cold; let them wear cotton hose, and buy the elastic woolen webbing which comes by the yard, and draw it over the child's limb to the ankle; this will protect the limbs, which in snow and slush should also be covered with leggins. If mothers will make it a rule that the child's hose must be hung up when taken off, and the feet warmed before going to bed, they will save themselves much trouble. Too many mothers tie up a child's throat, a most pernicious habit, and allow the child to wear thin shoes, or sit with rubbers on for hours.

THE QUEEN OF PUDDINGS.—One pint of nice bread crumbs to one quart of milk, one cup of sugar, the yolks of four eggs beaten, the grated rind of a lemon, and a piece of butter the size of an egg. Bake until done, but not watery. Whip the whites of the eggs stiff, and beat in a cup of sugar in which has been stirred the juice of the lemon. Spread over the pudding a layer of jelly, or any sweetmeat you prefer. Pour the whites of the eggs over this, replace in the oven and brown lightly. To be eaten cold with cream. This is second only to ice-cream, and for some seasons better.

TO TELL THE AGE OF EGGS.—This method is based upon the decrease in the density of eggs as they grow old: Dissolve two ounces of salt in a pint of water. When a fresh laid egg is placed in this solution it will descend to the bottom of the vessel, while one that has been laid on the day previous will not quite reach the bottom. If the eggs be three days old it will swim in the liquid, and if it is more than three days old it will float on the surface, and project above the latter more and more in proportion as it is older.

In General Debility, Emaciation, Consumption and Wasting in Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom Physicians at times gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his Cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years."—JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Bigler, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 6 Mibble st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

WILLIAMS—MRS. NANCY WILLIAMS, the daughter of Frederic and Rebecca Cross, was born May 4, 1831; was raised and lived most of her life near Kilmichael, Montgomery county, Miss., and died in Water Valley, Miss., March 18, 1888. She was of Methodist parentage, and hence her early training was truly and religiously in accord with the spirit of that doctrine, and the advancing years of her life continuously strengthened her in that devotion. She joined the church in 1845, and lived a true and pious Christian woman to the end of her mortal life. She was married to Mr. Edward Williams in early womanhood, with whom she happily lived until separated by the call of country for his services, as a soldier, in 1862; when he bade his fond wife and four dear little children good-bye, never to return, as the sequel showed. She remained a widow, and worked with her characteristic zeal and earnestness until her entire family reached their majority, and she then had the gratification of seeing them all settled in life and members of the church of Christ. The latter part of her life was of much bodily affliction; but she knew in whom she had trusted, and her faith remained unshaken to the end. Her only son and one daughter had but recently preceded her to the heavenly Lord, and when the summons came for her she was ready. With the request for "her loved ones and friends to meet her in heaven," she passed peacefully and quietly away to rest. J. E. FLOWERS.

SHARP—Sister M. A. SHARP's spirit took its flight from the body, February 29, 1888, and winged its hallowed flight to the world of light and glory, forever to bask in the glorious light of the face of him who redeemed and saved her. Sister Sharp was born December 30, 1847. She joined the Methodist Church in early life and always loved her church; but was never satisfied with her conversion until the fall of 1885, when God graciously pardoned her sins at the altar during a protracted meeting held by Bro. J. F. Wynn in Oak Ridge, La. From that time she lived a happy Christian. She was the preacher's friend; her door was ever open to the pastor and his family. She was a devoted wife and loving mother. Sister Sharp suffered much during the last few months of her life from a stroke of paralysis, but was always patient, and expressed herself as being ready to go and be with Jesus. She has gone, leaving her husband, seven children, mother, sister and a host of friends to mourn her death. But we feel our loss is her eternal gain, and bow with submission, knowing God is too wise to err and too good to do wrong. May her loved ones meet her in the home above! T. S. K.

HARPER—MRS. ANN H. HARPER, daughter of Col. John Smith, was born in North Carolina, April 25, 1831. She was educated at Salem. She moved to Scott county, Miss., with her father, and was married in this county to Mr. James C. Harper in 1855. They have lived in Forest since 1866. There are seven living children—three daughters and four sons. Bro Harper died in 1879, since which she has striven as best she could to educate and bring up her children for useful lives. Sister Harper joined the church when she was about twenty years old, and from that time to the close of life she was a consistent Christian. She was naturally of a quiet and unobtrusive disposition, but true to every responsibility of life. She was a consumptive; had been troubled with hemorrhage from lungs occasionally. On March 5, 1888, a hemorrhage began with such severity that she died in a few minutes. She was one of our most pious members in Forest Church. We miss her presence, but her memory will be precious. May the children follow the godly examples of their parents and all meet in heaven!

WIMBERLY—MRS. MARY A. WIMBERLY was born in Jasper county, Ga., March 11, 1826, and died in Wesson, Miss., May 4, 1888. Her maiden name was Patterson. She was married to Capt. F. D. Wimberly in Stewart county, Ga., April 18, 1848. Soon after their marriage they united with the Methodist Church together, and walked side by side in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord until her translation to the church triumphant. In 1853 she removed with her husband from their native State and settled in Minden, La., where she remained until after the war between the States. In 1865 they went to Shreveport, La.; in 1870 to New Orleans, and in 1873 they settled in Wesson, Miss., where she finished her course in peace.

I became acquainted with Mrs. Wimberly in the early part of the year 1879, and for three years thereafter was her pastor. During these years I was frequently entertained in her hospitable home, and had opportunity to know her well. Her home-life was very beautiful. She was a woman of capacity, judgment and self-possession. She never seemed hurried or confused, was always up with the times, and had leisure to sit and converse with her guests; and she had the art of making them feel perfectly at home in her house.

Quiet and gentle in her spirit, unobtrusive and dignified in her bearing, she cultivated a cheerful disposition, was happy in her husband's love, and made her home always bright and attractive. "Her price was far above rubies. The heart of her husband did safely trust in her. She did him good and not evil all the days of her life." Her hospitality was noteworthy. She took special delight in entertaining ministers of the gospel. That was a "preacher's home," and the messengers of Christ never found a more pleasant retreat, and the pleasure always seemed to be reciprocal. She was a lady of intelligence. She loved the literature of her church, and she found time to read and keep posted. She knew what was going on in the religious world, and she kept in sympathy with the great movements of Zion. Hence her Christian growth was steady, solid and symmetrical. Hers was a firm and well-rounded Christian character. But, like her divine Lord, she was made perfect through suffering.

They had made preparations for a quiet observance of the thirty-ninth anniversary of their marriage on April 18, 1887; but on that very morning Mrs. Wimberly was stricken with paralysis and never regained her wonted health and strength. For more than a year she suffered, sometimes hopeful and sometimes depressed, but always patient and resigned to the will of God. Early in her sickness she set her house in order, and calmly prepared for whatever the result might be. When her decline became more manifest she withdrew her thoughts from the world and its cares and placed them more fully on her home beyond the flood. And when intelligible speech had almost entirely failed her, and only an occasional word could be understood she would whisper, "Almost dead; home, home." And when the end came at last, quietly, almost without a struggle, she breathed her life out on the bosom of her Savior and entered into the rest of heaven. She was buried from the Methodist Church in Wesson, Sunday morning, May 6. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. T. L. Mellen, assisted by Rev. William Russell of the Presbyterian Church. The Baptist and Presbyterian congregations united with the Methodist in the funeral services. The text used by the pastor on the occasion was very appropriate: "And let her own works praise her in the gates." W. B. LEWIS.

LANGLY—CHARLES WESLEY LANGLY, youngest son of Rev. W. A. and Mary E. Langly, was born in Autauga county, Ala., April 8, 1863; moved with his parents to Mississippi while but a child; professed religion at Salem Camp Ground, in Choctaw county, Miss., and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in August, 1879, and died at the home of his mother, in Louisville, Miss., April 23, 1888. Charley was always a good boy, one that seemed to be bound with a spirit of devotion to both parents and the church. He was not what many would call a great light in the church, for he made no great demonstration of his hope; yet his life was so peaceful, and in all his great suffering he was so patient and uncomplaining, that many were blessed by his life and Christian resignation. He left home, full of life and hope, in January last to seek his fortune in Texas. But, alas! how true the words of the apostle, "In the midst of life we are in death." He took pneumonia on his arrival in Texas, and for three months he lay at the gates of death far from mother, sisters and home, yet with two brothers and many of the people of God. While he was resigned to his heavenly Father's will, he had a great desire to return to his mother, sisters and home in Mississippi. And in answer to the prayers of friends and relatives the Lord gave him strength and he came back, spent one week at his home on earth, and then went to his home in heaven. "We can not bring him back to us, but we can go to him." "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

HIS MOTHER'S PASTOR.

LEE—The Rev. ROBERT E. LEE was born December 2, 1866, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. We do not know the date he joined. He was licensed to exhort in 1881, and September, 1885, he was licensed to preach in Trenton circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference. Bro. Lee was a good young man. He was intending to go to Centenary College. He wanted to be profitable to our church. Bro. Lee was the only one of the family that was Methodist that we know of. His mother was a member of the Baptist Church; but we think she did all she could to encourage him in the work he had commenced. He was ill eight days. At the expiration of this time he departed this life. He has left relatives to grieve after him. God give them grace to bear this loss.

H. H. RAWLES.

NUGENT—SARAH TABATHA, oldest daughter of Joshua and Martha McCann, was born in Jefferson county, Fla., in 1851, and moved to Louisiana with her parents and settled in Avoyelles parish. She was married to J. A. Nugent in 1876. We do not know at what date she connected herself with the church, but we do know that she honored and loved the church with all the affection of her warm, kind and motherly heart. It was the writer's pleasure to know her when the heaviest cloud of spiritual gloom hung threateningly over her entire neighborhood, when it seemed that, as Elijah of old, "she only was left." Yet her constant prayer and motherly advice for and to her neighbors brought forth many spiritual children. Last summer some thirty-six were added to the church, and it seemed that heavenly light did shine from her face during prayer and class meetings, when the young converts gave their testimony of the work of God's grace in them. It was not my privilege to be with her in the last hours of life; but when parting with her six months ago she said confidently, shaking my hand, "I know that if we meet no more on earth we will meet in heaven." Speaking of the assurance of God's people, I repeated Sister Nugent's words to the congregation, and soon as the service was over her physician approached me, and said: "I wish I could have told you how glorious was the death of this good woman. Her calmness and resignation and talks to her friends surpassed anything that I have ever witnessed." Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. She died April 29, 1888, leaving a husband, four children, three brothers and two sisters to follow on and meet her in the "Father's house of many mansions." May her example be an incentive to all of us!

S. H. WHATLEY.

CATO—HENRY J. CATO, son of Henry and Rebecca Cato, was born April 3, 1862. He joined the church in 1881, but did not experience a conscious, satisfactory change of heart until several years afterward. But finally the happy change was realized, and ever after he referred to that time as the birthday of his new life. And from that time he lived a consistent Christian life. During his last sickness he loved to talk of Jesus, and his power to save the believing, trusting soul, and seemed perfectly conscious that he was nearing the last river; but he believed that Jesus would meet him there, and conduct him safely over. And when the last hour came he was ready and passed from earth in blissful triumph. He left a good old mother, brothers and sisters and a weeping wife and little babe. We buried him in Union Church Cemetery, where his dust will sleep until awakened by the trumpet at the resurrection of the just.

H. D. HOWELL.

MCMILLAM—The following resolutions were adopted by the Methodist Episcopal, South, Sunday-school of Port Gibson, Miss.

Whereas, We have heard with profound regret of the death of DAVID PHARES MCMILLAM, at his home in Franklin county, on the twenty-third ultimo, and, being desirous of showing our respect for his memory and expressing our earnest and affectionate sympathy with the household deprived by this dispensation of one of its dearest members; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That by the death of Phares McMillam the Port Gibson Methodist Sunday-school has lost one of its most prompt and faithful members.

Resolved, That we tenderly sympathize with the family of our young friend in this hour of trial and affliction, and devoutly commend them to the keeping of him who looks with a pitying eye upon the distressed.

Resolved, That, while we deeply sympathize with those who were bound to him by the nearest and dearest ties, we share with them the hope of a reunion in that better world, where bliss ineffable forbids all tears.

GENIE MORRIS, for Com.

A NEW CREATION.—God never repairs. Christ never patches. The gospel is not here to mend people. Regeneration is not a scheme of moral tinkering and ethical cobbling. What God does, he does new; new heavens, new earth, new body, new heart—"Behold, I make all things new." In the gospel thus we move into a new world and under a new scheme. The creative days are back again. We step out of a regime of jails and hospitals and reform shops. We get live effects direct from God. That is the gospel. The gospel is a permanent miracle. God at first hand—that is a miracle. The gospel thus does not classify with other schemes of amelioration. They are good, but this is not simply better, but different, distinct and better because distinct; it works in a new way, and works another work. Compare the wrought chains riveted on the demoniac, and the divine Word working a new creation in the demoniac. It is all there. It is like the difference between the impotent Persian lashing the turbulent sea with chains, and the gracious Lord saying to the troubled sea, "Peace, be still!" —Rev. C. H. Parkhurst.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editors:

Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address.

Scientific.

A Wonderful Scientific Calculation.

In the course of a lecture in connection with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching, Sir James Paget said science would supply the natural life of man with wonders uncounted. He remembered once hearing Mlle. Janotha play a presto by Mendelssohn, and he counted the notes and the time occupied. She played 5,595 notes in 4 min. 3 sec. It seemed startling, but let them look at it in the fair amount of its wonder. Every one of those notes involved certain movements of a finger, at least two, and many of them involved an additional movement laterally as well as those up and down. They also involved repeated movements of the wrists, elbows and arms, altogether probably not less than one movement for each note. As there were twenty-four notes per second, and each of these notes involved three distinct musical movements, that amounted to seventy-two movements in each second. Moreover, each of those notes was determined by the will to a chosen place, with a certain force, at a certain time, and with a certain duration. Therefore there were four distinct qualities in each of the seventy-two movements in each second.

Such were the transmissions outward. And all those were conditional on consciousness of the position of each hand and each finger before it was moved, and, while moving it, the sound of each note and the force of each touch. Therefore there were three conscious sensations for every note. There were seventy-two transmissions per second, 144 to and fro, and those with constant change of quality. Let them imagine it in telegraph wires. And then, added to that, all the time the memory was remembering each note in its due time and place, and was exercised in the comparison of it with others that came before. So that it would be fair to say that there were not less than 200 transmissions of nerve force to and from the brain outward and inward every second, and during the whole of that time judgment was being exercised as to whether the music was being played worse or better than before, and the mind was conscious of some of the emotions which the music was intended to impress.—Pall Mall Gazette.

SLATE PENCILS.—In the northwestern part of the town of Castleton, Rutland county, Vt., is the only manufactory in the United States of slate pencils. The stone, as it comes from the quarry, is first sawed into blocks from four to seven inches wide, according to the length desired for the pencils. These are split quite easily with a chisel into slabs a little thicker than the finished pencils, say five-sixteenths of an inch. These are passed through a planing machine and over an emery belt to make them flat, smooth, and of a uniform thickness of about three-sixteenths of an inch. Next day they are pushed into the jaws of a "crocodile," which consists of a pair of steel plates, in the under one of which are six rows of curved knives, each set so as to cut a little deeper than the one that went before it. These plow out parallel grooves half way through the slab, which a man then turns and lays on a steel plate, having ridges which just fit these grooves. This slides back under the six rows of teeth of a second crocodile lying in wait alongside, which cuts the grooves on the other side, and leaves the pencils side by side. Lastly, they are broken and rolled off for an instant to point them upon an emery belt. A man can give this last touch to about 8,000 in a day.

The average daily output is about 30,000, and the mill gives employment to some twenty-five hands. The old plan was to saw out square pencils from the slab one by one. These were boxed and distributed among poor families, who whittled them round by hand, at from a quarter to half a dollar per thousand.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The corner-stone of the Divinity Building of the new Catholic University, in Washington, D. C., was laid May 24:

The centennial of Presbyterianism was celebrated by an exchange of fraternal greetings between the Northern and Southern divisions, in Philadelphia, May 24.

In the Senate, on May 24, a bill was passed for the erection of a public building at Vicksburg, Miss., at an ultimate cost of $100,000.

The corner-stone of the Confederate Monument was laid in Jackson, Miss., May 25.

The President has approved the act authorizing the President to arrange a conference between the United States of America and the republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo and the empire of Brazil.

Senator Blair has introduced a bill to the effect that every State shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools, but that no money raised by taxation shall ever be appropriated, applied or given for any school, institution, corporation or person giving instruction in any doctrine, tenets, belief, ceremonials or observations peculiar to any religious sect.

The United States Treasury has paid out $12,500,000 during the present month on account of pensions alone, notwithstanding which fact the excess of receipts over expenditures during the month is nearly $5,000,000.

In the General Assembly of Northern Presbyterians, in Philadelphia, Pa., May 26, the Committee on Conference reported in favor of an organic union.

Henry George is to be expelled from the Twenty-third Assembly District Association of the United Labor Party. He is charged with having violated the constitution of the party, which declares that no member shall at any time fuse or dicker with any other political party.

The Republicans in Congress will doubtless pursue the caucus policy of opposing every paragraph of the Mills bill by offering amendments and demanding votes upon them, so that the end of the week is not likely to show any material progress toward a final disposition of the bill.

A monster meeting of representative citizens of all parties and denominations was held in Chicago, May 27, to protest against the refusal of the City Council to prohibit saloons within 200 feet of churches and school-houses.

In the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, in Baltimore, May 28, the committee appointed to consider the case of Dr. Woodrow decided against him, and voted to sustain the action of the Georgia Synod.

A terrific wind storm passed over Eastern Ohio and Western Pennsylvania on May 28.

The Senate Committee made their final report on the River and Harbor Bill on May 28. The committee have finally reinstated the specific amounts appropriated by the House for improvement at Columbus, Hickman, Greenville, Vicksburg, New Orleans, Lake Boliver front, and the head of the Atchafalaya and mouth of the Red river.

FOREIGN.

Prince Henry, second son of Emperor Frederick, and Princess Irene, daughter of Grand Duke Ludwig of Hesse, were married May 24.

The republicans of France denounce Boulangerism.

It is said that over one hundred persons belonging to the fishing fleet lost their lives in a recent gale off Ireland.

Several of the wealthiest merchants of Moscow have been convicted of adulterating tea. One of them was deprived of his civil rights and banished to Siberia for life.

The Times Rome correspondent has information that one of the Irish Bishops states that should Mgr. Persico return to Ireland he would be boycotted and probably insulted.

Austria threatens to blot out Montenegro if under Russian orders peace is disturbed.

The Secretary of State has been informed by the United States Consul at Port-au-Prince, Hayti, that fears are entertained of another revolutionary outbreak on that island.

The final audience with the Pope convinced Archbishop Walsh that the rescript must be obeyed, but that the Vatican would not make compliance needlessly difficult. The archbishop expressed his intention to endeavor to stop meetings and to insure submission.

A report comes from Egypt that Osman Digna's camp has been burned by incendiaries in order to compel him to retreat. Two thousand of his followers are said to have perished.

It is reported that M. Waddington, the French ambassador at London, is about to be succeeded by M. de Freycinet.

A copious rainfall in Southern Russia has saved the crops, and an abundant harvest is insured.

Four thousand Frenchmen and Italians met at Marseilles, May 27, and adopted resolutions protesting against Italy's foreign policy, particularly her alliance with Germany.

All Jews, excepting merchants of the first guild, have been ordered to quit Moscow within a fortnight. Over 200 expelled Jews have passed through Cracow en route to America.

The Caspian railroad in Russia is now completed.

Henry M. Stanley and party have arrived at Singatine after a twenty-days' canoe voyage.

Don Pedro, Emperor of Brazil, who has been in a very critical condition, is much stronger.

Enal Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia.

This old favorite (so well known as Kennesaw Route) is making the fastest time made in the South. Only forty hours from New Orleans to Washington City, and forty-seven hours to New York. One day saved over other lines.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the Advocate, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the Advocate, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Make every church service a religious sociable. When we pray, say "Our Father" from the heart. When we speak, magnify the blessed oneness of Christ's flock. Many churches are like that stage-coach in Colorado. The two passengers rode together for three days without speaking to each other. On the fourth morning one of the men determined to open conversation. He said, "Stranger, this is a fine morning." And the other turned upon him like a meat axe, and answered, "Who said it wasn't?" And here ended the conversation of the fourth day. Cultivate more religious sociability in the churches in all the services.—Interior.

Fourth Week in May.

Gentle Spring has now come in good earnest radiant with sunny skies and balmy with flowers. But Gentle Spring is a treacherous beauty. She makes us believe the sun is as powerful as in midsummer. We toss away our overcoats and wraps too soon, and lay aside our heavy underclothes, because we think Summer has come. Instead of Summer there comes an army of Spring diseases. We are attacked by Biliousness, bowel disorders, and a dozen other ailments which might have been avoided.

The next question is how to get rid of these Spring ailments, and to purify the blood; and to put the system in prime order for summer.

Instead of trying to find out some new way, try an old one: a way which, by steady use for over 40 years, has been proved the very best. No unpleasant dosing with nauseous medicines, but simply taking a delightful draught of the most sparkling effervescent beverage in existence. This is Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient, the best Spring medicine in the world. It purifies the blood of all the winter accumulations. It helps the liver to do its work thoroughly. It puts new life and vigor into the languid system, and prepares you for the enjoyment of a joyful summer. Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient is for sale by all druggists.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on. The public are invited to attend.

For further information address W. J. Heardin, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Price, keeper, Biloxi, Miss.

W. J. HEARDIN, Pres.

J. G. GRANT, Cor. Sec.

The established rule for thirteen years of Hemingtion Camp Meeting is to begin on Thursday before the full moon in August of each year. This year the time is the sixteenth of August, and will continue one week. The public, and especially ministers, are invited to attend.

"JESUS CHRIST HIMSELF."

BY HENRY S. WASHBURN.

ht, pastor and guide, is thy message to-day?
ough the mazes of sin I have wandered astray;
e, weary and worn, I am seeking to find this Sabbath repose some rest for the mind.
speech, howe'er finished its logic or lore,
meet my heart's longings—I'm yearning for more;
something unsullied by contact with sin,
joy of forgiveness, the witness within.
re is an old story, yet evermore new;
y prodigal heart it distils as the dew;
of redemption for sinners undone,
ch the sacrifice made by the crucified One.
can not exhaust it, no plummet or line
unded the depths of this ocean divine;
round the world, it laves every shore,
ll, through the ages, till time is no more.
ad us, O teacher, where the infant Christ lay,
the paths that he trod let us travel to-day;
my heart will rejoice as enthroned I see avior, Redeemer, still pleading for me.
—Congregationalist.

elivered before the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in New York City, May 17, 1888.)

the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

MR. PRESIDENT AND BRETHREN: I have been charged with e pleasant duty of conveying you the fraternal greetings of e Methodist Episcopal Church, outh. In the name of more an a million followers of the mb, I bid you hail and God-eed.

We were born of the same ine Spirit. We were nursed the same ecclesiastical mother. e are linked together by the llowed associations of an he childhood. We are mar-aled under the same banner. e are pursuing the same provi-ential mission on the earth. e are "one army of the living od, to whose command we ow." United by so many and ch sacred bonds, it is not pos-ble for us to feel other than warmest and most fraternal terest in your work.

We rejoice, brethren, in your osperity. We watch with ateful hearts your world-wide tivities, and perceive that "the rd is with you," and "has ven you the dew of heaven and e fatness of the earth." You ve blessed America with the its of your noble toil, and ade distant realms rejoice in ur light. Your ranks have the swing of conquest" in their arch, the enthusiasm of victory their hearts, and they bear the nner of our common Method-m far to the front of the ghty conflict with sin. We ank God for your great institu-ons of learning, by which you e bringing Methodism into oser sympathy with the highest ilture of the age, and putting e lever of Christian education der the masses that shall lift merican society to a higher and rer life. The ringing cry, "A illion for Missions," has been ard in our Southern camp, and s thrilled us like a bugle unding the advance on the eve battle. Above all, we thank od for the deep spiritual life on manifest, and for your fidel-y to the fundamental principles Christianity as they are taught by Methodism. We see in you a mighty army of the Lord of hosts, organized, aggressive and victorious.

Mr. President, I am glad to bring you a good report from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which, after you, is the largest division of Methodism. There has been steady advance along all lines, and the outlook was never more hopeful than it is now.

We are faithful to the doctrines, polity, usages, traditions, and experience of Methodism, and "are traveling home to God in the way our fathers trod." Deep and genuine revivals of religion have blessed our church from sea to sea, and the Lord has added multiplied thousands to our fold. Our institutions of learning are prosperous, and are wielding a widespread Christian influence on our people. Our Publishing House is happily free from debt, and its presses are doing excellent service for the cause of Christian literature. Our Church Extension Society is dotting the land with better churches than we ever had before, while the woman's department of this work is building parsonages in all the weaker portions of our field. Our missions are growing in Mexico, bravely holding their line in Brazil, organizing for an advance in China, and we have recently thrown a picket line into the sunrise empire of Japan.

Sir, without boasting, we may say the stanch old ship has outridden the storm, and is now putting on every pound of steam, and spreading every inch of canvas to the gale, and, breasting the billows with triumphant prow, is steering straight for the port of heaven, while "all her company, rejoicing, glory bursts from every tongue!"

The M. E. Church, South, while strongly conservative, is in profound sympathy with the progressive spirit of the age, and is striving, with a noble earnestness, to build up a Christian civilization in the fields where Providence has assigned our toil. We believe, sir, that the gospel offers the only permanent basis for human society, and that its reign in the hearts of men will solve all the social, economic, and political problems that agitate our land. It is the highest constructive force in civilization, and its success will be the harmony of the world. We believe that, as public opinion is the basis of our government and the source of our laws, a general diffusion of knowledge is essential to the stability of our free institutions, and that the peace and welfare of the whole country demand the education of all classes of our people. And, sir, New England itself would not hold more tenaciously to the system of free public instruction, with all of its admitted defects, than do the people of our Southern States.

We believe that the separation of Church and State is essential to the maintenance of both civil and religious liberty, and we look with alarm on any tendency to depart from this fundamental principle of our government; but we also believe that the church ought to educate public sentiment in favor of righteousness, that the Christian conscience of America ought to dominate its political life, and that the only hope of a free ballot, whether in the South or in the North, is for men to regard American citizenship as a gift of God, and vote as they pray.

We believe that this country is and ought to be the asylum of the oppressed in every land; but we also believe that it is, and ought forever to remain, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," and that American, and not European, ideas of civilization ought to prevail, even, if necessary, to the exclusion of the men who come, not to enjoy, but to destroy our liberties.

We are pledged, sir, to the destruction of the liquor traffic of America. We believe that this traffic is the organized, vindictive, and deadly foe of our civilization; and we are determined never to cease war upon it until it shall be as impossible to buy and sell rum as a beverage in this country as it now is to buy and sell a slave. In the language of Mr. Lincoln, we are "resolved that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Mr. President, I would not exaggerate our progress, and am deeply sensible of our manifold shortcomings. But, beyond denial, there has been a marked advance in the public sentiment of the South along all the great lines of civilization. Without ceasing to be Southerners, we, like yourselves, are becoming more largely Americans. Our horizon sweeps the whole circle of our glorious land, and we feel equally at home amid the orange groves of Florida or the boreal solitudes of far Alaska's shores. The material development of the Southern States is phenomenal, and the steady influx of population, capital and industries, has given us a wonderful impulse. Yet, so vast and so varied are the physical resources of the South, that it is safe to say we are only on the threshold of our progress. Speaking politically, we have left the quicksand of revolution, passed safely over the bar of reconstruction, and now we feel the long swell of the open sea of national life on which we intend to sail forever under the star-spangled banner of the free!

The people of the South, brethren, are living in the present, not in the past, and have their faces firmly set toward the great future which unrolls before them. We do not undervalue the past; we are not ashamed of it. We do not forget that we can understand the present only by studying it in the past. We must understand the Athens of Solon to understand the Athens of Pericles; the Rome of Cæsar to understand the Rome of Augustus; the France of Louis XIV. to understand the France of Napoleon; the England of George III. to understand the England of Victoria. So, too, we must study the America of to-day in the broad and blood-stained pages of the past. But, sir, if history is something else than "a fable about which men are agreed," if it is rather the temple in which Time preserves Truth for posterity, and to whose shrine age succeeding age must come to learn the loftiest lessons of human life, then let us cross its shining threshold with unsandaled feet and tread its aisles with reverence.

It is one thing to study the past with a calm, unbiased mind, that we may learn its solemn lessons, and it is another thing to live in it, and to perpetuate its discords. Because I was cradled in the storm of revolution, and the tramp of hostile battalions and thunder of warring armies were heard around the home of my childhood, and I saw, in my youthful terror, the red plowshare of ruin upturn my ancestral hearthstone, shall I live forever in the lurid light of that dread day? When the angel of peace has kissed the frown from the brow of the nation, and the smile of approving Heaven makes glad the heart of a great and reunited people, shall I grope in the murky abysses of the past, and, by sheer force of undying hate, scourge into the light of the living present a gory brood of ghouls and night hags that haunt its places of horror? When the love of God is kindling in the hearts of millions, and all the hilltops are aflame with the fires of a glorious hope for humanity, and "the gospel bells are ringing over land from sea to sea," and "the grand ethereal bow" of Christian progress "shoots up immense," arching the whole heavens with the bright millennial pledge, and this weary old earth of ours is sweeping out of the dark shadow of centuries of ignorance, and wrong, and woe, into the larger and brighter and happier time, must I sullenly turn my back upon it all, hug the past in mortal bitterness, and strain my ear to catch from its fast-receding shore the sound of "The death shot hissing from afar,

The shock, the shout, the groan of war?"

Perish the thought forever!

Mr. President, I am a confirmed optimist. I have an abiding faith in the ultimate realization of a lofty idea of the brotherhood of man. It may be that the light on the landscape of the future is a reflection from the luminous regions of my own hope, and that I am doomed to disappointment. But, sir, if we may learn any lessons from history; if we may hope that the great moral forces, which silently control the progress of nations, will continue to operate in the future as in the past; if we may take into account the higher and wider sweep of human events; if we may trust the pacific tendencies of the age, the day is not remote when the patriotic South will build monuments to Gen. Grant, and the magnanimous North hang garlands on the tomb of Lee. Who asks, to-day, whether the warrior, who fell at Senlac, crossed the channel with the Conqueror, or stood by fearless Harold's side? Who asks whether the soldier, who sleeps under the sod of Marston Moor, fought with Cromwell's Ironsides, or rode with Rupert's daring chivalry? Sir, we only know their valor made old England great, and that their fame is the heritage and inspiration to freedom in every land. Where is the man, who, standing on the Heights of Abraham, withholds from the brave Montcalm the tribute of admiring praise? Who pauses to reflect that if he had won the battle against the gallant Wolf, the destinies of America might have been changed, and the tricolor flag of France floated over half of this mighty continent? We would spurn the wretch who could insult the generous instincts of humanity by venting his spleen over "the grave where a hero lies buried." Where is the American who can ever forget that the dying warrior of Mt. M'Gregor, ere his mighty spirit took its flight, summoned both Federal and Confederate chieftains to his bier, made his very grave a perpetual pledge of peace, and linked his name forever with its nobler victories! These examples, sir, rebuke the persistence of our strife, and teach us, however unwilling we may be to learn the lesson, that a blessed oblivion awaits the animosities of the past. Sir, in the future, to which we are hastening, the patriot pilgrim to the battle shrines of this great nation will not be so much concerned as we are to know whether the heroic relics before him were the blue or the gray; but he will remember that, in the darkest hour that ever tried the spirit of a people, American manhood rose into the meridian of glory, was crowned with immortal fame, and humanity itself plucked new trophies from the fields where its valor bled.

Why, then, brethren, should we distrust each other any longer? Why should not the sunlit waves of peace roll in perpetual music above the chasm in which ancient prejudice and wrong lie buried forever? Do you distrust us because we honor our past? A brave and honorable people can not forget or renounce their past. The contempt of civilized mankind would be the just penalty of a craven race who could repudiate the memory of an honorable ancestry. Should the people of the South cease to honor their past, should they ever sink so low as to teach their children that they are the offspring of a race of traitors, should they ever so far forget themselves as to adopt the estimate put upon them by those who misunderstand and misjudge them, they would deserve to be hissed from this planet! There is no race on earth base enough to be the associates of a people who would degrade themselves. Self-respect was all that was left us by the cyclone of war; and to this invincible sentiment is due that rapid recuperation which has astonished the world. But, while we honor our past, and ever will, we do accept, in good faith and as final forever, the settlement of its controversies. Brethren, I am a Mississippian, a Hebrew of the Hebrews, a representative of the new generation that have come on the scene; and I declare to you that we have accepted the settlement of the war with no expectation and no desire of ever reopening in any way the issues which it closed.

Do you fear that the spirit of secession still lives in the Southern heart? You are mistaken. It has departed forever. It was extinguished by the storm of war. The political cult that sustained it has been swept away by the march of events, and the abolition of slavery destroyed the only conceivable occasion of its application. Instead of the spirit of secession, sir, we behold the unexampled spectacle of a brave people who staked and lost their all in a desperate struggle for their convictions, and who look without a blush upon their past, grateful for the defeat that overwhelmed their hopes!

Do you fear that we would restore the old order of things? You do not understand the South. A more preposterous dream never disturbed a patriot's sleeping or waking thoughts! As soon, sir, expect New England to sell slaves again, as she once did, or burn witches at the stake! The South could not, if it would—and I call heaven to witness that it would not, if it could—roll the chariot of its progress backward a single day.

Do you insist that we shall adopt your method of dealing with our race problem in the South? Mr. President, there is no problem before the American people more difficult to solve than this one. Sir, it is easy to theorize; to construct an ideal social State; to create a Utopia and people it with beings of our imagination. But circumstances limit the application of our theories, and in our practical dealings with men we are obliged to make large allowances for their surroundings. We do not differ so much about the theory of negro elevation, but about the policy by which it may be realized. We believe, as firmly as you do, that the negro is a man, a redeemed man, a free man; and, as such, is entitled to all that manhood confers. Perhaps we have not done all that we might have done to help our "brother in black;" but you will permit one whose father gave the best years of his life to missionary work among the negroes of the South, and who is himself the firm friend to all wise measures for their advancement, to tell you that we have done more than you give us credit for. But, sir, we believe that it is impracticable to ignore the differences between the races at the South; that the attempt to do it will retard the progress we desire to promote.

Both religion and practical statesmanship will recognize the impossibility of forcing the processes of social growth, and will seek to organize the work on the lines of least resistance, trusting to the sure and steady progress of the age to realize our largest hopes.

Let us, therefore,

"Countermand
Our sanguine heart back from the fairy land,
With nightingales in visionary woods," and "sprinkle cool patience" on "the heat and flame" of our enthusiasm, and God, in his own good time, will color his problem right.

Do you fear that we are not loyal to the Union? Since coming to this city I have heard that Southern mothers teach their children to hate the Union. I brand that as a lie, born in hell, and propagated only by its emissaries. If this Union were imperiled, the South would leap as one man to its defense. The survivors of a hundred fields of blood—men who held at bay the countless armies of the North, and carried the fortunes of the Confederacy on their bayonets for four mortal years—would vie with the foremost of you to defend the banner with the starry sheen! Mr. President, both the North and the South have yet to learn that the war did not merely save the Union. It made the Union. An eminent foreign publicist tells us truly that, "though there was a junction, there never was a real union, of the slave with the free States." Another, one of our own countrymen, who anticipates posterity in his broad and manly interpretation of our political history, tells us truly, that while the abolition of slavery was a great achievement, the real issue involved, in our struggle was whether the pacific principle of federalism should stand as the perpetual basis of our government. Sir, the war settled that forever. Its fierce fires welded all parts of this vast country into a vital political homogeneity. Its convulsions were the birththroes of a true national life. It sunk the foundations of the Union out of sight, and opened unlimited opportunities to the constructive genius of American civilization. Sir, we may differ on the great historic questions of the past; we may differ on the questions of social polity; we may differ on the questions of political administration; but there are two questions about which the South and the North will never differ again. One is, that this Union is one and indissoluble forever. We are

"One flag, one land, one heart, one hand,
One nation evermore!"

The other is, that the name "America" shall be the very synonym of freemen!

"For lo! the fullness of the time has come,
And over all the exile's Western home,
From sea to sea the flowers of freedom bloom."

Henceforth and forever, America and freedom are the same.

Mr. President, I have thought it appropriate to refer to the consensus of conservative public opinion in the South on the subjects which have affected our relations in the past, because I firmly believe that we only need to understand each other better to love each other more. I will not deny that there still exist in the South a few who hold other sentiments. There are extremists on both sides. There are irreconcilables in the North as well as in the South.

There are good and true men who seem, at times, to have forgotten that the war has long been over, and that a new generation have come upon the scene of action, to whom their vindictive words are strangely out of keeping with the peaceful spirit of the age. But, sir, we must not judge the course of the river by the swirls and eddies on its surface, but by the deep and steady sweep of its current. The men, whether they be politicians or preachers, the demagogues of the stump or the pulpit, who "nurse their wrath to keep it warm," are in a rapidly lessening minority. The spirit of the age rebukes them. I speak for the intelligence of the South; I represent its public opinion, and I know that I voice the sentiments of the great masses of its thoughtful, industrious, and progressive people, who not only control the present, but have the key to the future, when I say from the center, all around to the sea, We desire to bury forever the animosities of the past, hush the dissensions of the present, draw closer to our brethren in fraternal alliance, and to lock our shields for a united advance against the gates of hell!

Mr. President, America is before us, and our age is the opportunity of the American Church. Will we prove equal to the task? Is Methodism able to grapple with the forces of a highly complex civilization, and mold the life of a great and cultivated people to the pattern of righteousness? Can we hold the inevitable progress of this POURING.

BY K. T. B.

Thy way is best, my Father;
Thy will is dark and drear,
And troubled clouds do gather;
My heart bows down with fear.

Thy rod "shall" be "narrow,"
My blinded eyes can see,
But the wide seems much the fairer,
The temptor comes to me.

"Oh, help! I perish, Father!"
My soul it cries in pain,
As a little child to its mother,
The danger is the flee.

The clouds roll by in splendor,
The sun shone bright and clear,
And the Father's voice was tender,
To the soul so fraught with fear:

"I see the Light, my Father,
It comes, it comes to me,
Now strengthened my soul doth gather Power, I come to thee."

THE GREAT COMMISSION.

Matthew xxviii, 16-20.

GOLDEN TEXT. For the Lord gave the word: great was the company of those that published it.—Psa. lxviii, 11.

TIME.—Between April 9 and May 17, A. D. 30.

PLACE.—An unknown mountain in Galilee.

INTRODUCTION.

This record of the appearance of the Lord in royal majesty to the eleven disciples on a mountain in Galilee, and probably to the five hundred brethren mentioned by Paul (1 Corinthians xv, 6), and the great commission, with the pledge of his unbroken presence to the end of the world, form a most appropriate conclusion of the Gospel of Matthew, which is a gospel of Christ, the King. It begins with the royal descent of Christ and the adoration of the wise men who represent the heathen world, and it ends with the adoration of the disciples and the command to make all nations subject to his kingdom.

16. The eleven disciples went ... Galilee—The writer passes over, for some reason which we can not now discover, all the intermediate appearances, and passes on at once to that which connected itself with the mission and work of the apostles, and through them of the universal church. Into a mountain—Meaning some certain mountain which he had named to them, probably the night before he suffered, when he said: "After I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee." That the interview here recorded was the same with that referred to in one place only (1 Corinthians xv, 6) when "he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the greater part remained unto that day, though some were fallen asleep," is now the opinion of the ablest students of the evangelical history.

17. When they saw him, they worshiped—It is characteristic of St. Matthew's Gospel that this word, which indicates the homage and prostration before a king, should occur twelve times, whereas it is found twice only in each of the other synoptics. But some doubted—Certainly none of "the eleven," after what took place at previous interviews in Jerusalem. There was something mysterious and supernatural in the manifestation of the glorified body, outlines at first indistinct and scarcely recognized, and then the whole form seen as it had been seen in life. The more devoted and loving disciples were probably, here as before, the first to recognize their Lord. Others questioned whether it was a phantom or a reality. The language describes in general terms the state of skepticism in the early church, which could be overcome only by repeated appearances and invincible proofs.

18. Jesus came ... unto them At every step that he took the doubts of the doubting would be taking wing. Saying—When the familiar voice fell upon their ears, all remaining doubts would vanish entirely away, and every one's heart would be secretly exhaling, "My Lord! and my God!" ... We conceive that the evangelist only sums up, in exceedingly compressed epitome, the substance of the Savior's remarks. All power is given unto me—These words, in which the infallible King himself announces his eternal possession of the kingdom, St. Matthew, who is essentially the historian of the kingdom, alone records. His death had finished the old dispensation. It had brought in the new. Thereby the kingdom of God had come with power. Jesus, returning from paradise, came to the glory of his kingdom. This was the completion of his first coming, or advent. The second will be his advent to judge the world. With the resurrection and ascension Christ took full possession, as the God-man, of that glory and power which, according to his eternal divine nature, he had before the foundation of the world. In heaven and in earth—An expression of his glorification and victory, in startling contrast with the preceding circumstances and the mockery of his foes and the despair of his friends. The primary reference is to his authority as Mediator, extending over all, in heaven and on earth, for his church. It was given by the Father (unto the God-man Christ as the Eternal Word) and he had the glory before the foundation of the world.

19. Go ye therefore—The glorification of Christ is the ground of his sending them, and the blessed reason why in their weakness and insufficiency they can go. Indefinitely added to all the brethren, not to the apostles only, and so made good in the early church. Teach—The power is given me. Go, therefore, and observe. Not so: the purpose is declared to bring men (by the knowledge of the truth) to work on and in their hearts, and lift them up to be partakers of the divine nature; and therefore it is not "subdue," but "make disciples of," in the corresponding passage of Mark (xvi, 15) it is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Now, was all this meant to be done by the eleven men nearest to him of the multitude then crowding around the risen Redeemer? Impossible. Was it to be done even in their lifetime? Surely not. In that little band Jesus virtually addressed himself to all who, in every age, should take up from them the same work. Before the eyes of the church's risen Head were spread out, in those eleven men, all his servants of every age; and one and all of them received his commission at that moment. All nations—Observe that the command to make disciples of all nations implies: 1. That Christianity is a universal religion, not merely one of the religions of the world from which, with others, we in this later day are to select an eclectic and universal religion. 2. That it is adapted to all nations and all classes, a claim which history has abundantly justified, but which was urged by early opponents as a conclusive objection to it. 3. That not a natural development, but obedience to the principles inculcated by Christ, constitutes the secret of true civilization among all nations, and thus that Christian missions are the mother of civilization. 4. That from all nations the members of Christ's church triumphant are to be gathered to God by obedience to this commission. Baptizing them—The "discipling" consists of two parts: baptism, the rite of admission, and instruction. This is the ordinary process in the Christian Church. In the name—There is no other possible way by which finite minds can deal, in consciousness, with God, than through his name. Not that his name is of any real avail as detached from his nature. It is not. As thus detached it is but as an algebraic sign, or a little bit of visibility or audibility or imagination. But still, without a name of some kind or other, God to us, so far as our consciousness is concerned, is nothing. Father ... Son ... Holy Ghost—The use of the word name in the singular emphatically expresses the unity of the Godhead, as the words Father, Son, and Holy Ghost denote the tripersonality.

20. Teaching them to observe all things ... commanded you—This is the great business of apostles, evangelists, pastors, and all ministers of the gospel. The teaching is not to be, indeed, merely by words. Still less is it to be by words of rote. The whole outgoing of the manhood of the man should teach. The doctrines and precepts of Christ, nothing less and nothing more, are the proper subjects of Christian faith and practice. In these, however, are included the Old Testament, which he repeatedly confirms, and the further revelations he made to those personally "commanded" by him, including the Apostle Paul. Lo, I am with you—A proof of Christ's divinity—by his providence, his spirit, his life—for the idea of vital union with him had already been declared. (John xii, 26; xv, 5; xvi, 22.) "Absent in body, yet wholly and most truly present in power" (Beza and Meyer). Present as God to help, present as man to sympathize, present in my whole person, present spiritually, yet most really and truly. The simple language of the passage, as well as the facts of Christian history, forbid our limiting this promise to one set of men, claiming to be successors of the apostles. Alway—Literally, all the days, or, at all times; the words emphasizing continuity more than the English adverb. The "days" that were coming might seem long and dark and dreary, but he, their Lord, would be with them, in each of those days, even to the far-off end. Even unto the end of the world—The word here is aion, and not kosmos. The latter signifies the world as a material fabric; the former refers more to the living world. It here signifies the present human system. The Savior's mind goes no further, for, after that, evangelizing work will cease. No man, after that, will need to teach his neighbor, saying, "Know the Lord."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. The great commission was uttered by him whom "God hath highly exalted," and hath "given a name which is above every name."

2. Its purpose is aggressive—to make disciples, to turn men "from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." Every disciple is to be a missionary.

3. Its scope is world-wide—all nations, "every creature." It teaches a universal religion—the universal religion.

4. It announces, as its initiatory rite, baptism into the threefold name of the Father, Son and Spirit; and offers, besides, "the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost."

5. It proclaims Christ's teachings as the substance of its doctrine, and requires obedience to the same as the test and condition of discipleship.

6. It carries with it the blessed assurance of the abiding presence within his church of the risen and glorified Redeemer until the end of time.

Sabbath-Breaking and Its Penalties.

MR. EDITOR: There are some sins that God usually commences the punishment of the perpetrators for in this life, one of which is Sabbath-breaking. No Sabbath-breaker can escape the penalty of his crime except by thorough repentance and reformation.

I propose in this second paper to call attention specially to recorded instances of the punishment of Sabbath-breakers. The first case I mention is that of the man in the wilderness who was "found gathering sticks upon the Sabbath day." I suppose he was getting up his firewood on Sunday, which work was not allowable on that holy day. He was arrested and put on his trial before God, and the Lord decided that he should be put to death as a solemn warning to all others, and he was accordingly stoned to death. This matter of cutting and bringing up firewood on Sunday is too often seen in our Christian country, even among professors of religion. The Israelites were often sorely punished for their sins, the chief of which was idolatry and Sabbath-breaking. The long, dreary Babylonian captivity, with all its horrid antecedents and consequences, is mainly attributed to their almost universal desecration of their weekly and yearly Sabbaths. When Nehemiah saw that the returned captives were again relapsing into their former habits of Sabbath-breaking, he suddenly broke forth upon them by saying: "What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath."

I wish we had a good supply of such executive officers in this Sabbath-breaking country as Nehemiah was. The Sabbath-breakers tried to carry on their Sabbath traffic, but this faithful officer never yielded until he ran the last one of them off. It is an alarming thought to call to mind the terrible judgments God sent on his ancient people for their desecration of the holy Sabbath.

Many years before our unhappy war, by accident I found myself floating down the Mississippi river, between Baton Rouge and New Orleans, one beautiful Sabbath morning. The river was high, and as I stood on the deck, I could see all over those large sugar plantations on that beautiful coast, and I was sensibly grieved to see the negroes hard at work everywhere, as though it was one of the six working days. I thought to myself, this state of affairs will be changed, perhaps, before many years. If the wealthy planters will not be restrained from such high-handed Sabbath-breaking by moral suasion or wholesome Sabbath laws, God will take the matter in hand and put a stop to such outrageous wickedness in a professedly Christian land. A war was soon inaugurated for other purposes that put an end to so much Sabbath-working on the large plantations of the South.

Every Sabbath-breaker is not only endangering the eternal well-being of his own soul, but he is provoking the curse of God on his family and his country. To a truly Christian family the Sabbath is a day of rest, pleasure, happiness and spiritual profit. They wind up the business of the week on Saturday. Saturday evening the Sunday vegetables are all gathered, and the Sunday poultry killed and dressed; the Sunday fruit is brought from the orchard, and the melons from the patch, so that no work of that sort will tax their time or labor on the Sabbath. The Sabbath passes away in attending to their various religious duties and privileges; and when the day of holy rest is ended, they can delightfully sing:

"How blest a Sabbath thus to spend
In hope of one that ne'er shall end."

I am most decidedly in favor of maintaining the Sabbath laws so plainly taught in the Bible, and now I believe by the laws of every State in our Union.

Hip-Pockets and Pistols.

"The pistol is still doing its devilish and deadly work in spite of the futile laws which forbid a man's carrying one concealed. If a fine of one thousand dollars and imprisonment, at least, twelve months, were the penalty for having, showing or using a pistol in any manner, then pistols would cease to do harm because they would cease to be. Let the shortest lawful firearm be three feet long. Human life would then be at least fifty per cent. safer than it now is in this country."—"W. L. C. H.," in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, May 24, 1888.

Commenting upon the above, I would suggest a different method of dealing with the pistol nuisance. Instead of fining and imprisoning the man who carries the pistol concealed, suppose the dealer in firearms and all merchants be prohibited from importing, selling or offering for sale any firearm "shorter than three feet." Let the penalty be for a violation of this prohibitory law imprisonment in the penitentiary not more than five nor less than two years. Then, if any plan can be devised for getting the present supply out of the way, we would be effectually rid of the nuisance. If the State has a right to prohibit the liquor traffic (which is generally conceded), why not prohibit the pistol traffic? The same reason that demands the abolition of the liquor traffic applies to the traffic in pistols. The safety of human life and the good of the people demand legislative intervention. The rising generation must be taught that it is dishonorable, unmanly and cowardly to carry a concealed pistol in the hip-pocket, or in any other pocket.

A radical reformation is in reach if the pulpit and the press will take hold of the question, and show up the enormous evils of the practice of carrying concealed weapons. Our legislators will give us the laws we need when public sentiment demands them, and not before. The average politician will not commit himself to measures in advance of his constituency. He has too much respect for the opinions and wishes of the "dear people;" hence the necessity of agitation in order to get the good people to align themselves on the right side of all questions affecting their interests.

Studying "At the Door."

MR. EDITOR: If the study of Rev. T. L. Mellen's communication, showing the per capita contributions in the Mississippi Conference for the Conference claimants, can help the cause, it ought to be done that we may have "no more such reports as have come up from so many appointments." The charges paid from nothing to seventy-four cents, with an average of less than ten cents a member, according to that showing, and thousands paid nothing. That view of the case is misleading: it places the fault where it does not really exist in many cases. The rule of "so much a member" is not the doctrine of the gospel; it is not the method for supporting the ministry. The Conference fund should be claimed upon the same principle as the support of the ministry. The greater the number of members in a charge, the smaller the contributions per member, because there are more poor people than rich in the church. Take, for example, the St. Helena circuit, Woodville district, with 675 members, paying $35—less than six cents a member, and the pastor in charge trying to get something from every member by a system which he has adopted, which seems to be fair and scriptural in its operation. Considering the case in the light of the greater number of members, Benton, in Jackson district, is worthy of commendation: 530 members paying their pastor in charge $623, and the Conference claimants $75, or 14 cents a member, and almost 12 1-5 per cent. of the pastor's salary. The real merit of this collection is in the proportion it bears to the preacher's salary, or the per cent. it is of the sum paid for the support of the ministry. The amount paid for that fund last year was less than 6¼ per cent. of what was paid the pastors. Burtonton, in the Vicksburg district, paid preacher in charge $265 95, and Conference claimants $42—almost 16 per cent., and the highest paid by any charge. Some of the weakest paid higher per cent. than the strongest charges: Springfield, in the Woodville district, preacher in charge, $94 05, and Conference claimants, $7 (published $6 in the Minutes)—not quite 7½ per cent. Flint Creek, in Seashore district, preacher in charge, $180; Conference claimants, $20—11 1-9 per cent. Mayersville, in Vicksburg district—weak numerically, strong financially—highest per capita, preacher in charge, $506; Conference claimants, $38—7½ per cent. Jackson station, preacher in charge, $1,200; Conference claimants, $85—7 1-12 per cent. Meridian station, preacher in charge, $1,500; Conference claimants, $80—5⅓ per cent. Vicksburg station, preacher in charge, $1,500; Conference claimants, $78—5 1-5 per cent.

We might mention others, but these are sufficient to illustrate the principle that ought to control the fund for Conference claimants. When a person occupies the relation of a Conference claimant, the claim is as just as the effective preacher's, and ought to be paid as cheerfully as the salary of the pastor is paid. Those who are in the active work ought to be willing to give that deserving class the same security for a living that they have for themselves. To do this, let the Conference make up this fund by fixing a per cent. on the salary of the pastors, and then all will share it alike. The preachers will collect it when they know they must report it pro rata with their salaries.

From the Work.

CONEHATTA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: The second Quarterly Conference for Conehatta was held on May 19 and 20. Bro. P. A. Johnston, our presiding elder, was on hand, in his kind, unassuming way, and preached for us three powerful sermons that pierced the hearts of this people like the keen sword. Bro. Johnston not only preached good revival sermons, but has awakened many important points in this country, especially that of education and finances. We know that Brandon district has been far in the rear on the finance question, but, with the determination of our presiding elder and united efforts of the pastors, we are coming up.

I was assigned to this work by Bishop Keener, and came here under many disadvantages. This is a new circuit; was made up of churches from three different charges. When I arrived here I found some of the people in a spirit of disloyalty, on account of the change; others in a cold state of religion, as some of the churches had been badly neglected; others indifferent, while in other places we found the fires of true religion burning in full blast. I found other disadvantages. The days are hardly past when the Primitive Baptists wielded the mild scepter over this almost entire county. The Missionary Baptists are also very numerous, and until lately very unfriendly to Methodism; but in most places they have realized their mistake, and are becoming more friendly. There are many other Christian denominations here. I soon took in the situation, and, with the help and encouragement of the good people of this country, I went to God for strength and help to accomplish the work he had assigned me to do. At first the outlook was gloomy; no horse, no home, no money, and but little prospect of getting either. But all of this has been surmounted; at least, I have a horse and a good home. The work has paid some money. At all of my appointments, for the last two months, the houses have been crowded, and an increasing interest manifested every way. Since our District Conference I have secured twenty-four subscribers to the ADVOCATE. When I came here there was only three copies taken on the whole work. I feel satisfied that every cent of the Conference collections will be paid. Brethren, we ask your united prayers, that God may pour out the power of salvation so abundantly, that it will fill all the rivers to overflowing, and sweep over this entire country, and save unto the uttermost. "God hear our prayers, and save us, or we perish."

JAS. G. CAMMACK.

(The thanks of this office are tendered Bro. Cammack for his successful work for the ADVOCATE.—ED.)

MAYERSVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: If I am in order, I will say a few things about my new circuit. Bishop Keener said, in his charge to the class to be ordained deacons at our last Conference, "Never preach until you have something to preach about." This is a good rule in writing. Some persons may not see anything in this article, but I am sure that every itinerant preacher can. I now have the work fully in hand. I find an intelligent and appreciative people here. Our Sunday-schools and prayer meetings are well attended. There are but two or three members in the county that pray in public. Many circuits and stations may excel this in praying and shouting, but none can excel this in the grace of liberality. Bro. Mellen's "Facts and Figures" show this. We have but one church in the county. We are building another at Hay's Landing, which is to be completed by the first of July. We would like for the editor of our ADVOCATE to dedicate it for us. If he will come, we will pay all of his expenses, and allow him to make a speech for the ADVOCATE. Many acts of kindness have been shown us by this kind people—such as sending meal, meat, sugar, coffee, rice, chickens, etc., to this parsonage. A good steward sent twelve or fifteen cords of wood into the parsonage yard. A good sister made the parsonage a present of an excellent [illegible]. The church has a new carpet which was furnished by the Ladies' Aid Society, and the Bible; a nice satin cushion which was presented by an excellent lady of our town. Now, Mr. Editor, if you think I have anything to write about, you can publish this. If you have ever been a circuit preacher, you certainly think I have.

V. H. SKIPPER.

CAMDEN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We had our Children's Day in Camden, last Sabbath. It was a very pleasant and, we trust, profitable occasion. We used the printed programs issued by our Publishing House. Prof. Cox, an accomplished Christian gentleman, who is the principal of the school here, and our faithful and efficient Sunday-school superintendent, Bro. Ed. Melvin, delivered very appropriate addresses, full of warning, encouraging and instructive gospel sentiment. The singing was soul-inspiring. The collection amounted to eight dollars. The spiritual condition of the church on this pastoral charge is improving, especially at Camden, as evidenced by an increased interest in the Sunday-school and weekly prayer meeting. The number who will pray in public has nearly doubled. This is noteworthy among the young men. We are praying for and expecting a revival of pure religion, and undefiled, all over this circuit during this year. Pray for us.

Your brother,

IRA B. ROBERTSON.

SALLIS CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I will give to the ADVOCATE a short account of the work at this point.

We observed the week of self-denial and prayer with good results, after enjoying a special season of grace and getting closer sympathy with our mission work. We raised $41 [illegible] which we pray God to direct to the salvation of some precious soul.

Last Sunday we observed Children's Day with good results, and collected $4 70 at Sallis. We have eight Sunday-schools in this pastoral charge, but I have not heard from the other points at this writing.

The prospect for better times is encouraging. Our people are becoming more religious, and the moral tone of the country is improving, and Christ's kingdom is ruling. The NEW ORLEANS, Nashville and other Advocates are taken and read by the people. We are encouraged.

Cordially,

W. W. WILLIAMS.

SPRING CREEK CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to report this work as prospering. We have taken in eighteen members up to date. Our congregations are getting larger every service, and show they appreciate our labors. We feel joyful to think God will work through such an humble instrument as we are; but, Mr. Editor, there is one thing we need assistance from our brethren in, and that is help to organize a temperance society.

W. H. HILL, P. C.

SABINE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We are moving on very well on the Sabine circuit, receiving some into the church, baptizing some children. Congregations are much larger than they have been for years, and a great deal of interest is being manifested throughout the entire circuit.

Yours in Christ,

H. J. BOLTZ.

DIVINE GUIDANCE.—If we understand by "signs" the guiding of God, then all his children are so led; but too often "signs" are understood to mean all kinds of strange incidents, and out of the way events, which God has not promised us, which we dare not seek, still less pray for.

God indicates the way to his children with his eye; he does not point it out with a hedge-stake or with the barn-door, as the proverb broadly puts it. But those who are willing to be led by God's eye must ever be looking unto him or they will see nothing. Therefore, signs are only for the children who look up to the Father! They are not gross and palpable, and have little in common with what are frequently taken for them.

Sermons—Written or Unwritten.

BY REV. S. C. LEONARD.

In order to minister the Word most helpfully, the question should be asked by those who are called to the work, each for himself, How can I bring the truth into closest and most vital contact with human hearts?—by careful study of one's own aptitudes is one of the conditions of finding the answer.

There are some who ought not to use written sermons ordinarily. They have the off-hand instinct. They take fire in presence of an audience. The "nimble servitors" are never found off duty. Thought crystallizes, for them, into richer forms in the pulpit than in the study. The mechanism of their minds is adjusted to extemporaneous work. They have the temperament in which the requisite elements are mingled with fullness of all and waste of none.

There are others who can work most effectively when their hands rip the pen. They can penetrate deeper. They can see more clearly. They can gain broader outlook. The work of clothing their thought in words worthy of being reduced to record reacts to clarify and intensify and liberalize the thought.

They can use a manuscript in the pulpit with effectiveness. They can speak more forcibly because of the aid which it gives. They can read without reading. They are not exposed to the peril of repeating themselves. They have no need to hesitate between different forms of expression; the question of preference has been carefully considered and settled. The instinctive feeling that they are not quite sure of having what they desire, and as they desire, is not interfering with the free play of their powers. They are not dependent on the presence of an audience for the enkindling of the intellectual and emotional fires of their nature. Tears drop on the sheets as they are covering them. Underneath the sentences are recorded prayers. The spaces between the lines are replete with thanksgiving and hope.

That the sermon ought to be thoroughly prepared, whether by one or the other method adopted, is a truism. A mushroom can not be transformed into a shock of corn fully ripe by any method of gathering it. Writing is as indispensable to the improvisator as to the pastor who has a manuscript back of his sermon. The pen ought to be in daily use by the pastor, whatever method he adopts of "attaching truth to the life of his people." Writing is one of the conditions of his mental health. He needs to write in order to do unwritten work. He needs to write in order to understand himself. A page of manuscript is a mirror, by looking into which many a mind has gained a view of its possibilities more useful than gratifying.

A manuscript may be legitimately used, or inexcusably missed in the pulpit. The methods of helpful and effective use of the written page in public address need to be studied as enterprisingly as the best methods of unwritten speech. The manuscript should be not so much as a film to intercept the mind's identification with the thought which it is expressing by the lips, but a conductor of the electric spark. It may be so used as to relieve the mind of other cares, and leave it the more free for the sympathetic interchange between speaker and hearer which is always involved in effective oratorical discourse; which, as Vinet claims, "a contest, a combat, a debate," as really as ... et, as it is not in form. ... both methods can be ... y used. A written and ... en sermon, the one in ... g, the other in the extem... often supplement each ... reach deeper than either ...

The condition of the body should be generously cared for ... ascends the pulpit ... manuscript, as by one ... to utter a discourse ... unwritten. Between the ... work and the pulpit-work ... the rest. When the ... laying the pen late into ... night has years behind ... difficulty of breaking it ... slight. Exceptional ... justify it; but ordinarily ... custom inflicts double injury.

The services of the ... may require that the body be at its best. The tone of the pulpit will be healthier, the atmosphere which it creates will be more invigorating, the truth which it gives to the pew will suffer less discoloration, than if the lips of the preacher were feverish with nervousness, or languid with weariness.

Written and unwritten sermons have alike demonstrated their right to be. Sometimes the one has proved the more helpful; sometimes the other. Historically, they have each wielded powerfully the character-building forces. Neither should discredit the other. The best answer to the question, Which shall be used? is, Both.—The Treasury.

The Supreme Court.

The recent death of Chief Justice Waite—a worthy successor of his predecessors in the office—calls to mind the peculiar and powerful position held in the national government by the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no other court in the world upon which is conferred so great authority as is vested in this tribunal.

It can, with a stroke of the pen, nullify any act not merely of a State Legislature, but of Congress itself, when the issue of a suit before it depends upon the validity or invalidity of that law by declaring it to be unconstitutional. In no other government than this does a court have a right to consider whether or not a law is in accordance with the Constitution. Judges are expected to administer the laws as they are, not to consider the right of the Legislature to pass those laws.

This feature of the United States government has challenged the admiration of a great many foreign observers of American institutions, not only because it places the interpretation of the fundamental law in the hands of a body wholly removed from politics, and not subject to frequent changes of membership, but because the great power has been exercised, on the whole, with so much conservatism and wisdom.

The function of the Supreme Court, like many another governmental institution, has been developed gradually. It was certainly not the intention of the convention which framed the Constitution to confer the power in question on the Supreme Court; but it followed so logically from the language of the Constitution that as early as the administration of John Adams the foundation of the Court's present authority was laid.

In the early disputes between the States and the general government the theory that the Supreme Court could be an arbiter between the conflicting governments was most stoutly resisted. Before the War of 1812 it was a part of the creed of the anti-Federalists that the Court could not pass upon the validity of a State law.

We can not give the history of the change which took place, step by step, until not only did the Court assume the final authority on all questions of the constitutional rights of the general government and of the States, but the people acquiesced in the arrangement. Nothing else contributed so much to this change as did the powerful and reasonable decisions made by Chief Justice Marshall, who held the office thirty-five years, from 1801 to 1835.

At present the propriety of submitting every question of constitutional law to this tribunal is disputed by no one. Nor does any State or State court think of resisting the decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States. There are certain matters on which the Court itself occasionally declines to express a judgment, for the reason that it could not enforce a decree against an unwilling State; but instances of this sort are rare.

The strength of the Court lies in its discretion and in its freedom from partisanship. Very rarely has a political bias been attributed to the justices, and time has proved the wisdom of most of the great decisions. The members of the Court have always been selected with great care, and seldom has a weak man been placed on that high bench.

In one respect there is room for improvement. The decisions of the Court must be obeyed; but they are entitled to deference and respect. That we may be specific, we will say that sneers at the Court on account of its telephone decision are foolish and have a bad influence. Those who find that the Court is against them have always thought the decision was wrong—just as did, probably, a vast majority of the people of the country when Marshall wrote his great opinion in the Bank cases; just as a great party did when the Reconstruction Acts were pronounced constitutional.

But the Court is as free from temptation to decide wrongly as any human tribunal can be, and every good citizen should accept its decrees not merely as something which must be obeyed, but as the authoritative judgment of men of great ability who are sworn to the faithful and impartial administration of the law.—Youth's Companion.

Unity of the Bible.

This striking paragraph is from Dr. A. T. Pierson:

"The unity of the Bible is the unity of one organic whole. The Decalogue demands the Sermon on the Mount. Isaiah's prophecy makes necessary the narrative of the Evangelists. Daniel fits into the Revelation as bone fits socket, or as those strange bones in the vertebral column mutually form the axis at the neck. Leviticus explains, and is explained by, the Epistle to the Hebrews. The Psalms express the highest morality and spirituality of the Old Testament, and anticipate the clearer beauty of the New; they link the Mosaic code with the divine ethics of the gospels and the epistles. The Passover foreshadows the Lord's Supper, and the Lord's Supper interprets and fulfills the Passover. Even the little book of Jonah makes more complete the sublime gospel according to John; and Ruth and Esther prophetically hint the Acts of the Apostles. Nay, look more closely, and after following the course of history and prophecy, gospels and epistles, when you come to the last chapters of Revelation, you will find yourself mysteriously touching the first chapters of Genesis; and lo! as you survey the whole track of your thought, you find you have been following the perimeter of a golden ring; the extremities actually bend around, touch, and so blend, that no point of contact is detected. You read in the first of Genesis of the first creation; in the last of the Revelation, of the new creation—the new heaven and the new earth; there, of the river that watered the garden; here, of the pure river of the water of life, clear as crystal; there of the Tree of Life in the first Eden; here, of the Tree of Life which is in the midst of the Paradise of God; there, of the God who came down to walk and talk with men; here, we read that the Tabernacle of God is with men; there, we read of the curse that came by sin, of the serpent whose trail is over all human joys; here, we read: 'And there shall be no more curse; nothing shall enter that defileth or maketh a lie!'"

Men pray for holiness as if it were something apart from their every-day life, something that had nothing at all to do with their domestic, social and business relations. They sing, "Nearer, my God, to thee," with glowing fervor, but never think that the prayer can be answered only by the up-lifting of their own lives to the plane of God's requirements. Holiness is not a mere sentiment, not a vague vision of glory overhanging us like a heavenly cloud, not a rapture or an ecstacy, not something that God sends down to wrap us like a garment in its radiant folds. If being holy means anything at all, it means being true, honest, upright, pure, gentle, patient, kind and unselfish. We really have no more religion than we get into our every-day practice. Wherein our devotion is higher than our living, it counts for nothing.—Morning Star.

A thousand Ingersolls in every country under the sun would not do so much to create disbelief of the truth among men, as this spectacle of a church inheriting promises, which she seems unable to believe, and receiving commandments which she seems unwilling to execute.—Thoburn.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Walertown, Mass.

THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1888.

Briefs.

The question of organic union between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches has been definitely settled by the vote in the Southern Assembly. The vote stood thus: For union, 40; against union, 87. So that matter is at rest for awhile.

We give our readers this week the whole of Dr. Steel's address before the General Conference. We know they will thank us for it, and read it with a relish. Our correspondents, we know, will not object to "going over a week" in order to get this magnificent speech.

Rev. Wesley Guard, in his address before the Northern General Conference, stated that Methodism is the only church in Ireland that has not decreased in membership during the last twelve years. The Romanists have decreased 100,000; the Protestant Episcopal, 33,000; the Presbyterians, 17,000, while the Methodists have increased 5,000.

According to F. N. Barrett, in a recent number of the New York Christian Advocate, the people in this country consumed during the year ending June 30, 1887: Spirits, 71,064,733 gallons; imported and domestic wines, 33,325,041 gallons; beer, 717,748,854 gallons. The total cost of this amounted to $767,686,052. It is estimated that 25 ½ per cent. of the population are consumers, which is 15,272,715 people. Each of these drinkers paid for his dram $50 26 during the year. The increase in consumption over 1886 was 84,842,074 gallons, and the increase in cost was $56,458,164. Verily, there is need of something to stop this fearful business!

The grand jury of this parish, in its recent report to the Criminal Court, had occasion to say that "the morals of the parish are improving under the vigorous and just administration of the criminal laws." That is a hopeful sign. How about this in the same report: "The Sunday Law is openly violated every Sabbath, but no charges with names of witnesses to prove them have been presented to the grand jury, and, therefore, having nothing before us, no action has been taken to bring offenders before the court." If the jury knew that the law was openly violated, could they not have found out the violators? Was it not the duty of the jury to find them out?

Our church has now 1,107,456 members: teachers and pupils in Sunday-schools, 731,369; 11,364 churches—valued at $15,204,883; 2,199 parsonages—worth $2,457,055; 4,530 traveling preachers. The collections last year were as follows: Church extension, an increase of $12,511 over last year; widows and orphans and superannuated preachers, $102,022; domestic missions, $92,426; foreign missions, $219,611. This is so much better than we have ever done that we are ready to break out in congratulations; but it is so far below what we can do that we will pray for growth in the grace of liberality. When every circuit and station not only supports a preacher at home, but also supports a missionary abroad, then we may look at our figures without a blush, and congratulate ourselves without a twinge of conscience!

Beloved.

Not long since we received a letter beginning with the above word; and it started a very pleasant train of thought. It is eminently a Scripture word, being used sixty-two times in the New Testament. It was used first at the baptism of our Lord, when the voice out of heaven proclaimed: "This is my beloved Son." It was next heard on the Mount of Transfiguration, the same voice speaking the same words. The apostles had the very best reason for adopting it and making it a part of their vocabulary. They had the sanction of the usage of the heavenly world; for it was the Father's voice which they heard first using it, and using it to declare and define a most blessed relationship. The sentence in which it was first used was a declaration of the divine sonship of Jesus, and a definition of the closeness of the relation subsisting between him and the Father. When used by the sacred writers in speaking to or of Christians, it is suggestive of the sonship of believers and of the intimacy of the relation between them. It expresses the closest relationship. The use of the word in the New Testament shows that the church is something more than a "congregation of faithful men among whom the Word of God is preached and the sacraments duly administered." It introduces us at once to the family relation. This is the closest of all earthly relationships. Here the interchange of sentiments is less constrained, the fellowship is freer, the attachments are stronger, and the affections are deeper and purer than in any other relation of life. In the family are heard epithets of love and terms of endearment which are too sacred to be spoken anywhere else. So in the church, which is God's family, there are words used by the members of that family to other members which it would be profanation to apply to those outside.

On the day of Pentecost, when the divine Spirit descended upon the disciples and melted their hearts into a living, loving oneness, they learned the real significance of the epithet the Father bestowed upon the Son, which epithet some of them had heard applied to the glorified Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration. By their joyful acceptance of the great result of the Master's atoning work they were lifted out of the legal bondage of ordinary Jewish religious life into the freedom of God's saving grace, and made members of the divine household and brethren beloved—beloved of God and beloved of one another. And thus it came to pass that the impetuous Peter, and the son of thunder, and the bigoted man of Tarsus, and the practical James, and the fiery Jude agree to use the word, "beloved," when addressing the faithful followers of their Master. From that day to this the term has been a term of endearment among the members of "the household of God." John sounded the key-note, and the children of God have kept the music going ever since—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God."

The Northern General Conference.

The time limit of the pastorate of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been extended to five years.

The following officers and editors have been elected for this quadrennium: Missionary secretaries, C. C. McCabe, J. O. Peck, A. B. Leonard; J. M. Reid, honorary secretary. Church extension secretary, A. J. Kynett; Sunday-school secretary, J. L. Hurlburt. Editors: Review, J. W. Mendenhall; New York Advocate, J. M. Buckley; Western Advocate, J. H. Bayliss; Northwestern Advocate, A. Edwards; Central Advocate, B. St. J. Fry; Pittsburg Advocate, C. W. Smith; Syracuse Advocate, O. H. Warren; California Advocate, B. F. Crary; New Orleans Advocate, A. E. P. Albert; Chattanooga Advocate, T. C. Carter; Christian Apologist, W. Nast. Treasurer of the Missionary Society, J. M. Philips; treasurer of the Episcopal Fund, W. P. Stowe; secretary of Freedman's Aid Society, J. C. Hartzell. Dr. C. H. Payne was elected secretary of education.

The Conference extended the term of presiding elders to six years. The name of the Freedman's Aid Society was changed to Freedman's Aid and Southern Education Society.

Dedication of the New Church.

The new Felicity Street Church was crowded to its utmost capacity last Sunday evening with friends eager to see the handsome house and witness its consecration to the services of religion. The choir, assisted by several members of other churches, rendered some fine pieces of music. We think that the cornets added greatly to the beauty and force of the music. The Scripture lessons were read by Dr. J. B. Walker. The sermon was preached by Bishop J. C. Keener, from Haggai ii, 6-9. It was such as only Bishop Keener can preach. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, raised a collection of $1,307 40 to finish paying for the furniture, and the Bishop pronounced the sentence of dedication, and thus the new building was started on its mission of good. The large audience went away pleased with the interesting services, and feeling that if this latter house makes history as the former one did, it has a grand future before it.

Why More Colleges for Girls Than for Boys?

Mr. Editor: In your issue, of May 17, you ask expression of opinion on this question. The fact that the Conferences patronizing this Advocate have more than four times as many colleges for females as for males, seems somewhat strange in view of the numerical and other supposed equality of the sexes. The question proposed is, Why have we more colleges for girls than for boys?

1. Colleges for girls can be more easily supported, both because of the extra charges made in them for music and for numerous other extra branches of study, and because of the lower prices at which competent female teachers can be employed. A faculty for a boys' college costs more than double that of a college for girls.

2. State universities have everywhere, by costly equipments and free tuition, entered into unequal and destructive competition with denominational colleges for boys, while the State has but recently, and not yet generally, entered the field of the higher education of woman. Hence the church, always and everywhere the leader in education, has had this field comparatively to herself.

3. Parents have recently looked more than ever to education as a means of livelihood for both their sons and daughters. But chivalrous tenderness gives the heavier end of a light purse to the girl. The boy can make his living at the plow, or at some mechanical trade not demanding much education. The girl must be kept from drudgery, must live by her wits; hence she must have education, even though the boy gets none. Education, purely for the sake of mental growth, the acquisition of wisdom and the ennoblement of our being, is seldom thought of in these days. Perhaps seven-eighths of the teaching in the Southern, if not in all the States, is now done by women. Just before this call was made I had written an article, entitled, "Women for Teachers, and the Results." If, as a result, the race shall be womanized—I will not say, effeminated, for that word got its meaning before the present style of women came into vogue—I do not know that men will have cause to regret it. The fathers have been ahead in education a long time; now put the mothers ahead a while, and who can tell what the results shall be?

4. The trend of all the ages has been toward the elevation of woman. She is no longer to be the slave or the fondled toy of man. She comes in for a share of all the rights of humanity. It seems as if every door of profit and of honor were now to be opened to her. Do we not seem to be approaching the day when in every sphere the woman shall be the preferred man?

A Triumphant Death.

For the comfort of our readers we reprodnce from the Raleigh Christian Advocate the account of the death of the great North Carolinian, Dr. N. H. D. Wilson. It is enough to bring the shout of praise from every devout Christian. Oh, what a blessed religion we have! What a Savior is our Savior! The Advocate says:

From the time he was taken sick he thought he would die, and so expressed himself frequently, and from the time he was taken sick until he died he gave expression after expression of the grandest Christian triumph. After he was dying, being conscious of it, at one time he raised himself on his elbow, and repeated the hymn:

"My Savior, my almighty Friend,
When I begin thy praise."

As long as he could sing, he would break out singing:

"Savior, more than life to me,
Let me ever, ever cling to thee," etc.

And when he could no longer sing it, he would repeat it over and over again. At one time his wife asked him for some expression. He replied: "I know that my Redeemer liveth," etc., repeating the whole quotation. On Sunday night, when he was very low, all at once he raised his arms, with a bright, startled look on his face, and exclaimed: "What does it mean?" Bro. Renn said: "What do you see, Doctor?" He replied: "The people, oh, the people, the multitude of people," and then sank back on his pillow as if exhausted, or as if the vision had passed. Monday night, in the midst of a paroxysm of pain, this writer spoke of his suffering so much. He waved his hand, and said, joyously: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." At another time he said:

"Part of the host have crossed the flood,
And part are crossing now," etc.

Monday night we began to sing in his room. This seemed to soothe him. As the singing ceased, he turned to us, and said: "Almost home—almost home." And thus he went on, giving one expression after another, conscious to the last; and just before he died, when he could no longer speak, after his eyes were sightless, and his hearing dull, his wife spoke loudly to him, and asked him, if he could not speak, to raise his hand if he was still trusting Jesus. He made the effort, but was too weak to lift up his hand, and raised his finger. Thus in holy triumph he passed away.

Letter from Japan.

Mr. Editor: Have you been an itinerant? If so, you may be interested in the modes of circuit travel in this country.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth has his home in Hiroshima, 200 miles away; came here to go to Oita, where Rev. Waters has begun work, but, finding Mr. Mosely wanted rest, he changed his programme, and went to the school for Mr. Mosely. The journey from here to Osaka was by train, where about was to leave at 10 P. M.; but, on arrival, the boat had gone at 8 o'clock; so the next morning a jinricksha was hired, and the forty miles made in that. Wakayama being reached in safety, teaching began and continued until Friday evening, when the brother retraced his steps to Osaka, too late for the train. Supper was found at a native inn, and then another train brought him here by half-past nine o'clock P. M. Saturday was a well-filled day—business, letters, some study and a variety of errands. A five-o'clock supper gave time for the six-o'clock train, and off the itinerant went again. This is what he says:

Dear Mother: Did you ever get left? When I reached Osaka the steamer was not going until Sunday night, and doubtful if it went then. The going depended upon the weather. I thought to return to Kobe and try again next day; but having promised to be at service Sunday morning, I concluded to drive ahead. Called at Mrs. H.'s, got some beef (for we can not get good beef in Wakayama); saw Dr. T., then made for the Sakai railroad station. There, heavy rain. Arrived at Sakai at half-past nine o'clock P. M. in a fearful rain storm; rode to a jinricksha stand; engaged two men for four o'clock next morning, and then hunted for a two-story hotel. At 3:45 A. M. the men came, and by four A. M. we were off in fine style, reaching Wakayama at half-past ten o'clock, just as Mr. Usuki was beginning service. Did not get wet, nor catch cold, and did not even get hungry. I began teaching the young ideas how to shoot in half an hour. Had a first-rate turn-out of young folks on yesterday. Excuse writing with pencil. Am writing on the floor up stairs, with my back against the bedstead. Too damp for "rheumatiz" down stairs today. WALTER.

I reckon the writer would not allow me to send this if he knew it; but, never mind, it will show you how wheels move in this island empire when the love of God prevails.

His mother,

M. E. LAMBUTH.

Kobe, Japan, April 25, 1888.

Port Gibson Female College.

Port Gibson Female College holds its commencement, June 8-12. Dr. Andrews preaches the sermon on Sunday, and Hon. E. Barksdale makes the address on Tuesday. All the readers of the Advocate know or ought to know what an admirable man President Monnger is. The Misses Compton conduct the boarding and literary departments with rare administrative ability; Miss Pearce, daughter of Rev. Levi Pearce, long an honored member of the Mississippi Conference, has charge of the instruction in music, for which position she is eminently qualified; Miss Hudson excels as a brilliant teacher of calisthenics and elocution, while Miss Anstin is a veritable charmer of the little folks into studious order within the school-room and into happy play without. The commencement, judging from the program, will be very attractive and highly enjoyable.

Rev. W. B. Hines.

Rev. B. F. Lewis, writing from Summit, Miss., under date of June 2, 1888, says:

Our Bro. W. B. Hines, who was so seriously hurt on the railroad, near Martinsville, on the twenty-first ultimo, is with us in Summit now, and is recovering. He takes this method of returning thanks to all his inquiring friends for their interest in his welfare, and also to state that for the next four or five weeks Summit, Miss., will be his postoffice address.

Rev. J. M. Weems, presiding elder of Brookhaven district, writes:

At his own request, Bishop J. C. Keener has released Rev. W. B. Hines from the pastorate for the remainder of the year, and has appointed Rev. W. L. Linfield, preacher in charge of Providence circuit.

"When I look at the congregation," said a London preacher, "I say, 'Where are the poor?' When I count the offertory in the vestry, I say, 'Where are the rich?'"

Notes.

The receipts at the treasury of our Mission Board, which came in as the result of the week of prayer and self-denial, amounted on April 30 to $20,001 46.

When we read in our exchanges that rich men of other denominations are giving thousands of dollars to further the great enterprises of Christianity, we wonder why we never read of rich Southern Methodists giving their thousands also! Are our rich men more penurious than those of other denominations? Or have we no rich men? We hear of Methodists in Louisiana worth many thousands of dollars, but we don't hear of their rich gifts to the cause of Christ!

A little box came into a missionary collection inscribed with these singular words, "'Tis But." It was from a lady who had never felt that she could do much for missions. But she had been accustomed to buy a good many things for herself which she did not absolutely need, saying, "'Tis but a dollar," or, "'Tis but a trifle." This year she determined, when so tempted, to put her "'tis buts" into the missionary box; and it surprised her to find that they amounted to one hundred and fifty dollars.

The National Woman Suffrage Association was in session in Boston, last week. The members, by resolution adopted, published their indignation at the action of the Methodist General Conference in rejecting the women who had been elected to that body. Judging from the former action and utterances of that body, they had a natural right to expect a different issue. So they charge the Methodists with inconsistency, and recommend the preachers to take as their text at the next quarterly meeting Paul's utterance, "In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female."

Dr. Deems relates that one of God's stewards once said to him: "I sat down a night or two ago and calculated the increase of a dollar at compound interest, and found that in less than 240 years it amounted to more than two and a half millions of dollars. And I asked myself whether God would not make a dollar laid up for him grow as rapidly as it does by the laws of trade." It is what we do and give for God's cause in the earth that will adorn the heavenly mansions and enrich the heavenly life forever; therefore, let us do and give as much and as long as we can. "The night cometh when no man can work."

The Advance gives an account of a lady who went to hear one of the modern "apostles of humanity" preach, and this is her spirited account of the sermon:

He preached just as I expected him to. We went asking for bread, and he gave us—not a stone—no, it was not "hefty" enough—but, sawdust. It was about the "same philosophy underlying all religions," and how we should labor to bring all things into "harmony"—that is, idol worship and Buddhism and Christianity. "An idol is not a god, it is merely a word to express their idea of God," etc. I could hardly sit in my seat. I just ached to get up in the pulpit when he had done, and say the First and Second Commandment.

A correspondent of Zion's Herald, writing of Dr. Steel's speech before the late General Conference, in New York, asks, "Have we a man who could equal that speech?"—and answers, "I do not know him." "I noticed that Dr. Hartzell frowned a good deal, as if not wholly agreeing. But the Conference and the mighty audience agreed and showed it, and rightly." As Dr. Hartzell belongs, ecclesiastically, to Louisiana, his frowns could hardly be appreciated by that audience in New York, but they are duly appreciated down here as very serious things. Our Bro. Steel ought to be immediately informed that his great speech furrowed the massive brow of Dr. Hartzell with frowns, and that it is but a short distance from Cincinnati, the home of the former, to Louisville, the home of the speaker. Take care, Bro. Steel. Danger ahead!

A new prohibition paper comes to us from Atlanta, Ga. It is called the Atlanta Commonwealth. The first number is a good specimen, and we trust it will have abundant success in an article, entitled "High License versus Prohibition," some strong figures prove that prohibition is better than high license even in Atlanta. For six months during the prohibition regime there were 430 cases of drunkenness, and for a corresponding period during high license reign there were 1,012 such cases. During the same time under prohibition there were 1,621 cases before the police courts, and under high license law there were 2,592 such cases! Which figures, says the Commonwealth, go to show that "high license neither regulates nor restricts; instead, it promotes drunkenness and crime. It increases the revenues of the city at the expense of the homes and the hearts and the lives of the citizens."

mighty nation firmly to the essential truth? These, sir, are practical questions, in presence of which all other controversies should be silenced, and which should knit us together as one man. Sir, if we are true to ourselves, the golden age of the Methodist Church is in the future, and it will continue to be the greatest evangelical power on this continent.

In its origin, sir, Methodism was a grand reconditioning of truth, "as truth is in Jesus;" and it carries in its very Constitution the purpose and potency of unlimited expansion. It is not merely an organization, but a force, a power, a divine life. The strength of Methodism, sir, is not in its polity, admirable as that undoubtedly is, but in its doctrines and its spirit. Its polity changes, but its doctrines and its spirit are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever! It is in profound harmony, both with the form and genius of our free institutions, and with the scope of our progressive age.

The higher intellectual drift of the age is toward its fundamental truths, and the most advanced evangelical thought of this century can find no more appropriate expression than the symbols of Methodist belief. The platform of Methodism, sir, with its logical implications and catholic spirit, offers the most comprehensive and honorable basis for the union of Christendom; and if this unity is ever realized, it will not be on the fiction of "the historic episcopate," but upon substantially the ground occupied by Methodism for one hundred years.

Mr. President, we are told that we are in a transition period; that we must rewrite the doctrines of the church, and put them upon a scientific basis, or give them to the winds as idle tales; that we are on the eve of controversies that will shake the very foundations of Christianity; that the discussion of the "Second Probation" is only the skirmish which precedes a battle that will involve the highest dogmas of truth. Sir, it may be so. It is certain that we are living in an age of intellectual unrest, and that destructive criticism, sometimes in sacred vestments, lays ruthless hands on the most holy truth. But we have no fear of the issue. Christianity is now a triumphant fact, organized, incorporate, immanent, and indestructible in the very life of the race itself. Sir, whatever may be the fate of other systems, the cardinal doctrines of Methodism will stand fast as "the pillared firmament," and shine with unobscured light. The Christian fatalism of Augustinian theology will go down; the Calvinistic dogma of particular redemption will be exploded; the fiction of "the historic episcopate" will be given to the winds; all forms of sacramentalism will be uprooted and swept away; but the fundamental positions of Methodist Arminian theology will form the immovable rallying points around which the constructive thought of the future will gather to organize anew the belief of the world!

Sir, what America needs is not a Christianity of form, but a Christianity of power; not what men call "progressive orthodoxy," but an aggressive gospel; not "a new theology," but a baptism of the Holy Ghost. The gospel of the Son of God preached with the power of the Holy Ghost is the hope of America and of the world! This, and this only, will drive infidelity back, with its dark and threatening horde of liberalism, secularism, socialism, nihilism, and all the perversions and misbeliefs of Christian truth that league themselves against us. Sir, philosophers can not save us; science can not save us; government can not save us; political parties can not save us; social theories can not save us; secular education can not save us; but a living Christ can save us! An uplifted Christ will lift up America, and it is the supreme mission of Methodism to lift up the Christ of God.

Sir, I have said that America is before us. It is open to our advance from pole to pole.

But, sir, America is only one division of the world-wide field before us. Across the Pacific the Orient is seething from center to circumference with the ferment of the new life introduced by the gospel. The steady beat of the pulse of Christian civilization against the heart of Asia has, at last, broken down the barriers to progress, from the sunny waters of Yokohama to the deserts of Thibet, and the whole fabric of Orientalism, social, political, and religious, is tottering to its fall. Japan is, in the throes of revolution, and opens an empire to the conquest of the Cross. China is anxious and alarmed. Russia is thundering along her northern border. England is advancing along her southern line. Her coast, from Kwangtung to Corea, glemms with a girdle of foreign colonies. Commerce is pressing upon her at every point. Diplomacy, in the interest of international progress, has wrested from her concession after concession, until a crisis has come in the affairs of the East, which makes of the utmost importance that the churches, not only of America, but of Europe also, should pour into that vast country the constructive agencies and forces of Christian civilization, and take the land for Christ. Beyond China, sir, lies India; beyond India, lies Africa. These are all our neighbors; we are bound together by the laws of human solidarity and the nobler ties of brotherhood in Jesus Christ. How wide, sir, is the field before us! How wonderful our opportunity! How the fate of ages seems to hinge on our service!

Sir, I know not how others may feel, but as for myself, I feel that in the presence of such opportunities it is treason to Jesus Christ for us to antagonize each other. There should be profound harmony and co-operation between us in the prosecution of this work. No political prejudice, no partisan feeling, no sectional sentiment, no denominational jealousy, nor any other thing should be allowed to swerve in a hair's-breadth from the line of high, holy, unselfish, Christ-like endeavor to bring this lost world back to God.

Mr. President, indulge me, sir; I feel the burden of my message. I speak from my heart. Would God that I might convince the Methodist Episcopal Church that we, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, desire to clasp hands with you in perpetual peace, and together rise to the height of this vast opportunity. Sir, we do not want a formal fraternity, with its periodic official courtesies, and its ineffectual sentimentalism; but a practical fraternity, expressing itself in legislation and administration, in deed as well as words. We want a fraternity studious to avoid differences and to find points of agreement. We want a fraternity that honors each other's motives, recognizes each other's difficulties, has patience with each other's faults, and protects each other's character. We want a fraternity that will throttle prejudice and cultivate charity, throw passion into prison and put love upon the throne, forget the things that are behind, and "reaching forth to those that are before, press toward the mark for the prize of our high calling of God in Christ." Sir, we want a fraternity that draws its inspiration from above, that lives in the upper regions of light and peace, where God's tall angels walk with man, and that is ever busily engaged throwing back and forth the golden shuttles of Christian intercourse to weave a seamless robe for American Methodism. Sir, there is one power in the universe that can bring us into complete harmony, fuse into one the various elements of our life, and direct the concentrated force of Methodism against the gates of hell, and that is the divine power of love. All opposition melts away before this almightly power. It has triumphed over stupendous difficulties in the past. The imperial rescript doomed it in vain to the galleys, the prison, and the block. The Neronian beasts in the amphitheatre gnashed upon it in vain. The loaded scourge of the grim lictor could not quell its holy zeal. It made the stake the throne of power, and wreathed the very flame like a diadem of glory around the brow of the ascending martyr. It melted the spear points of the Roman legionaries, inscribed its own victorious truth upon their standards, and saw the proudest Cæsars kneel in homage at its feet. It laid its all-conquering spell on the wild and savage tribes of Germany and Gaul, until the rushing Rhine and the ensanguined Rhone became the symbol of its resistless sway! It has regenerated nation after nation, and thrills the universal heart of the world to-day. Sir, the almighty power of love can reconcile us, blend us in spiritual unity, kindle in our hearts a godlike passion for humanity, and send us, with the blazing torches of salvation, to earth's remotest bounds.

"Sink down, ye separating hills,
Let sin and death remove;
'Tis love that drives our chariot wheel,
And death must yield to love!"

Sir, three million Methodists loving each other as they ought, agreeing for Christ's sake to bury their differences, and clasping hands around his cross, would be invincible. Then, sir, America would soon be vocal with redemption's song. The deserts would blossom as the rose. The islands of the sea would shout for joy. "The people that walk in darkness would see great light." This old earth of ours would thrill to its center with the pulsations of immortal life, and the triumph of the gospel shake the trembling gates of hell. Then, sir, would be brought to pass the saying that is written: "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth!"

"Hallelujah! hark the sound,
From the depth unto the skies,
Wakes above, beneath, around,
All creation's harmonies!

"See, Jehovah's banner furled—
Sheathed his sword—he speaks: 'tis done—
And the kingdoms of this world,
Are the kingdoms of his Son!"

Mr. President, I must not trespass further on your patience. But I can not close, sir, without at least a passing allusion to the local associations of our gathering here. Forty-four years ago the great disruption of American Methodism took place in this city. The imagination recalls that memorable time. I see again the mighty men whose giant forms towered above the opening chasm, and hear again their voices pleading for peace in the gloom of the gathering storm. There is the sturdy Bangs, the saintly Janes, the eloquent Durbin, Winans, and Green; the silver-tongued Pierce, and Bascom, of Olympian port, and, with one hand on the excited North and the other on the impassioned South, the great-souled Olin, struggling to avert the impending rupture. They struggled in vain. As in great subterranean convulsions, forces beyond human control split us asunder into independent churches.

Sir, under the limitations of our work here below, the best that we can do is to do the best we can. Deplorable as that event was in our history, it may have been the only way to build up Methodism both in the North and in the South. But, sir, however that may have been, do not the glorified spirits of our fathers, so long lifted above the region of earthly conflicts, and living in the pure atmosphere of celestial love, bend from the battlements of heaven, and gaze with rapture on this auspicious scene, when, after the storm, we gather again in fraternal concord in the name of Jesus, and under the banner of his love! Can we doubt there is a jubilee in heaven to-day? Do not the angels, who sang of peace above the Judean hills, celebrate with full-throated harmonies its victories again, and thrill all heaven with joy?

Sir, may we not rather say that these lofty spirits, with the glorious company who have since ascended to their thrones, unable to resist the attraction of this holy hour, mingle with us, though invisible, in this feast of love? If by some clairvoyant power we could lift the material veil that hides the spiritual world from mortal sense, would not gallery above gallery appear thronged with white-robed messengers from the courts above hovering in rapture over this propitious scene?

Brethren, let us send the message out to all the world that we are closer together than we ever were before, and have enthroned the love of Christ in our hearts as the sovereign arbiter of all our differences. Let it flash along all the wires, through all the cities, across all the plains, leaping over all the mountains, burning through the depths of the ocean, and girdling the globe with its thrilling news; let us send it ringing down the corridors of time to greet the coming age with its glorious truth; ay, let us send it up to ranks of waiting cherubim around the throne of God, that henceforth and forever the Northern and the Southern heart shall beat as one to the music of redemption's song. Amen!

Personals.

The long case of Dr. Woodrow versus the Presbyterian Church may now be considered as settled. The vote in the late General Assembly stood: 34 to sustain Dr. Woodrow, 2 to sustain him in part, and 109 against sustaining him. Dr. Woodrow is at this time a professor in South Carolina University.

Bro. Bennett is touching up the Arkansas Methodist in a way that pleases us, and must be delightful to his numerous readers in Arkansas and elsewhere.

The Congress, last Friday, revived the grade of General of the Army, and President Cleveland nominated Gen. Phil Sheridan for the position, and he was immediately confirmed by the Senate.

The Louisiana Legislature has elected the following circuit judges: First circuit, J. C. Moncure; second, E. C. Montgomery; third, R. S. Perry; fourth, M. A. Strickland; fifth, R. T. Beauregard. Court of Appeals, parish of Orleans, H. B. Kelly.

Rev. Lyman Abbott has been chosen permanent pastor of Mr. Beecher's Church, by a vote of 400 out of 469.

Judge E. D. White, of this city, has been elected United States Senator for Louisiana.

Gen. C. B. Fisk has been nominated by acclamation for the presidency by the prohibition party, and Jno. A. Brooks, of Indiana, for Vice-president.

A private letter from Bro. Cooper, of Edwards, Miss., represents his "work as doing well, congregations delightful and kindness to the pastor unexcelled." We know something of the kindness of that people. We ate Plymouth Rock chicken there, and thought it was turkey!

Rev. F. L. Reid, editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate, has been appointed by Bishop Key, presiding elder of the Raleigh district, North Carolina Conference, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. Wilson.

A note from the pastor of West Monroe—Bro. Munholland—says: "We are getting along smoothly. Twenty accessions to date and $15 the result of the week of self-denial."

Rev. D. S. Stephans, president of Adrian College, has been elected editor of the Methodist Recorder. Dr. Scott, who has edited the paper fifteen years, goes into the pastorate.

The Aberdeen District and Sunday-school Conferences will be held at Pontotoc, July 26-28. Rev. J. M. Barnes will preach Wednesday night, the twenty-fifth. Sunday-school Conference will open Thursday morning, at nine o'clock, July 26, when the following programme will be observed:

1. The Most Essential Qualifications of a Sunday-School Superintendent—B. S. Rayner, M. C. Shell.

2. What Relation Do Parents Sustain to the Sunday-School—John Richey, R. L. Trice, M. R. Fountaine.

3. The Qualifications Requisite for a Successful Sunday-School Teacher—H. R. Tucker, T. B. Sykes.

4. How May We Prevent Sunday-Schools from Going into Winter-Quarters?—J. R. Robertson, J. A. Trice.

5. How May We Best Secure the Attendance of Children on Divine Services?—J. M. Barnes, John Reilees.

6. How May We Remedy the Neglect of Those Parents Who Fail to Have Their Children Baptized?—G. W. Gordon.

7. What Is the Ultimate End of Sunday-School Work—F. A. Widtson, W. D. Bass.

Rev. Eugene Johnson will preach a Sunday-school sermon at 11 o'clock.

Rev. E. L. Spraggins will preach the opening sermon of the District Conference, Thursday night, the twenty-sixth; and the Conference will open at half-past eight, Friday morning. Let pastors see that their Quarterly Conference records are on hand. Editors, representatives of our educational interests and agents are cordially invited.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter in him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

"Mamma, what's hereditary?" asked Bobby, laboriously tripping over syllables of the long word. "Why, it is—anything you get from your father or me," replied the mother, a little puzzled for a definition suited to his years. Silence of two minutes. "Then," he asked, "is spankin's hereditary?"

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Boy—Mother, since I have been using Wolff's Acme Blacking my shoes wear longer than ever before, and I never get my feet wet, but I do not think they look as smooth as when I first used it.

Mother—Indeed, my son, I am sorry you are so careless. You forget that even a good thing is only good when properly used. You have not even looked at the directions, for they are yet around the neck of the bottle. Now you must read them, and they will get you out of your trouble. Your father and I keep our shoes in elegant order by its use. I use it about once a month and papa about once a week.

Wolff's ACME Blacking

Is wonderful; preserving and Waterproofing any leather; giving it a deep, rich black lustre which lasts a week. Don't use others. Do not confound ACME Blacking with any other. Sold by Shoe Stores, Grocers, Druggists, &c. Try it on your Harness.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

ODD SEE-SAWS.

I saw a cow-hide in the grass,
A rush-light on the door.
I saw a candle-stick in mud,
And a bell-pull on the door.

I saw a horse-fly up the creek,
A cat-nip at her food;
I saw a chestnut-bur, and heard
A shell-bark in the wood.

I saw a jack-plane off a board,
A car-spring off the track;
I saw a saw-dust off the floor,
And then a carpet-tack.

I saw a monkey-wrench a hat
From a fair lady's pate;
I saw a rattle-snake a bird
And hogs-head on a plate.

I saw a brandy-smash a glass,
I saw a shooting-star;
I heard the corn-talk in the field,
A pig-iron crow-bar.

I saw a pin-wheel off a post
And a wheel-wright in a shop;
I saw a gin-sling on a bar,
I saw a ginger-pop.

I saw a house-fly o'er a field,
I saw an ox-roast, too;
I saw a shad-roe and clam-bake,
And saw a chicken-stew.

I saw a sword-fish from a bank,
I heard the water-spout;
I saw tobacco-spit, and then
I heard an eye-ball out.

I saw a fence-rail at the din,
I heard a waist-band play
A lively strain—a sweet spit-toon—
And then I went away.

Ida's Dime.

BY K. L. R.

"Oh, Mattie, I am so glad you have come. I've been watching for you ever so long. How did you get in without my seeing you!" said Ida Brooks, giving her friend a resounding kiss. "We're going to have lots of fun," she continued, not giving Mattie time to answer. "Mamma says we may play tea-party in the side yard under the fig tree, and Steve has taken the little table out for us, and sister loaned me two long dresses, so we can be real ladies."

"That will be splendid," answered Mattie, her eyes sparkling with anticipated pleasure.

"And just look here; ain't these nice?" And Ida held up to view a little basket filled with tiny cakes. "I can take a whole one in a bite. Mamma made them for me this morning when she was making cake."

"Oh, we will have a lovely time; come, let's go," said Mattie, jumping up.

"Oh, but wait a bit, I've something more to tell you. Uncle John gave me a dime this morning for brushing his hat and——"

"Does he give you ten cents every time you brush his hat?" interrupted Mattie.

"Why, no," answered Ida, indignantly; "do you think I do it for pay? This morning when I handed him his hat, he smiled, and said, as he turned it around and around, 'Why, chicken, you brush real nicely; here is a dime to encourage the good work;' and now, Mattie, I'm just waiting for the strawberry man; he ought to be here by this time. I am going to buy a box of strawberries for our tea party."

"Oh, that will be ever so nice. I wish the man would hurry and come," answered Mattie.

"So do I," said Ida, glancing out of the window. "Why," she exclaimed, "there goes Miss Amy." Both little girls thrust their heads out of the window, and threw kisses to a young lady passing by on the opposite side of the street, who nodded and smiled in return.

"Isn't she the sweetest teacher that ever was?" said Ida, drawing in her head.

"Yes, indeed," answered Mattie; "and didn't she talk dreadfully last Sunday about the heathens?"

"Dreadfully! No, indeed, I thought it was beautiful," said Ida, in a surprised tone.

"Oh, so did I!" quickly responded Mattie. "I mean it is dreadful to hear about those poor heathens who never saw a Bible, nor a church, not even a Sunday-school and never heard of Jesus. Why, it makes me feel so sorry. I wish I were rich. If I had lots of money," she continued eagerly, "I'd send them great boxes of Bibles and plenty of preachers to explain 'em, and ever so many nice teachers like Miss Amy to teach the little children about Jesus."

"Well, but we haven't lots of money. We've only this dime," answered practical Ida, looking down at her dime, and then glancing up to the mantelpiece at a little box labelled, "Foreign Missions." There was evidently a struggle going on in her mind.

Mattie saw the glance, and when Ida's eyes sought hers inquiringly, she nodded her head in approval. In an instant Ida was beside the box and her dime rattled against its iron sides.

"There now," she exclaimed. "I guess we won't gobble up that dime. Let the old strawberry man go by. Come, let us go play."

"Ida," said Mattie, a little later, "I am glad you didn't spend your dime, because it would not have pleased anyone but us, and I know it pleased Jesus to have it go in the box."

The Cross-Box.

It was a rainy day and all the children had to stay in the house. Ned had planned to go fishing, and Johnny wanted to set up a windmill he had made. Susie wanted to gather her flower-seeds, and Pet was anxious to hunt for her white kitten in the barns. So all were disappointed, and before the night had become cross and peevish and snappish. Mamma called all to her and talked very gravely. They were quiet for a while after it. In half an hour Ned brought a small box and showed his mother. He had cut a little hole in the top, just large enough to let a cent through and under it were the words, "Cross-box."

"Look, mamma," he said, "supposing whenever any of us speak cross we make ourselves pay a cent for a fine? Susie and Johnny and Pet are so cross, it would be a good thing. We'll try who can keep out of the box longest."

Mamma laughed, and said it might be a very good plan, if they all agreed to it; but if they did agree, they must do as they promised.

"I'll agree," said Susie; "I'm not going to be cross any more."

"And I," said Johnny.

"And I," added Pet.

"What shall we do with all the money?" asked Susie.

"We'll buy a magic lantern," replied Ned.

"No, we'll buy a whole lot of candy," said Johnny.

"No," added Susie, "we'll send it for a bed in the Children's Hospital."

"I tell you," said Ned angrily, "if you don't do as I want to, I'll pitch the box out of the window."

"Where's your penny, Ned?" asked mamma.

Ned looked very foolish, but brought the first penny, and dropped it into the box.

Mamma thought the box really did some good. The children learned to watch against getting angry, and little lips would be shut tight to keep the ugly words from coming through. When school began they were so busy that the box was forgotten. Weeks later, mamma was putting a closet in order one Saturday.

"Here's the cross-box," she said.

"I'm going to see how much money there is," cried Ned. "Seventeen cents! That's enough to buy lemons and nuts, and play peanut stand. Let's do it."

"Oh!" said Susie, "there goes poor little lame Jimmy. I think it would be nice to give it to him."

"I say"—whimpered Pet.

"I won't!" whined Johnny.

"I"—No one knows what Ned was going to say, in a very crabbed voice, for just then he clapped one hand on his mouth, and with the other held up a warning finger. "Look out," he half whispered, "or there'll be more cents in the cross-box for Jimmie."—Our Little Ones.

No one can expel Satan except by the use of proper means, nor can he be kept from the heart unless it is occupied by something better. To be "filled with the Spirit" is a great necessity.

The Care of the Eyes.

At the sanitary convention held at Ann Arbor, Mich., not long ago, Dr. C. J. Lundy, of Detroit, read a paper on "Hygiene in Relation to the Eye," which should have the widest circulation, especially among teachers and school officers. A fruitful source of eye troubles is shown to be the excessive strain upon the muscles and nerves of the eyes due to faulty educational methods, the ill-planned and insufficient lighting of school-rooms, poor ink and fine print in school books, and other causes which education might correct.

In conclusion, Dr. Lundy lays down the following rules for the better care of the eyes:

1. Avoid reading and study by poor light.

2. Light should come from the side, and not from the back or from the front.

3. Do not read or study while suffering great bodily fatigue, or during recovery from illness.

4. Do not read while lying down.

5. Do not use the eyes too long at a time for near work, but give them occasional periods of rest.

6. Reading and study should be done systematically.

7. During study avoid the stooping position, or whatever tends to produce congestion of the head and face.

8. Select well-printed books.

9. Correct errors of refraction with proper glasses.

10. Avoid bad hygienic conditions and the use of alcohol and tobacco.

11. Take sufficient exercise in the open air.

12. Let the physical keep pace with the mental culture, for asthenopia is most usually observed in those who are lacking in physical development.—Scientific American.

MAKING FIRST-CLASS BUTTER.—It is so easily done that a boy fifteen years old can learn in a week. Milk your cows quickly and into Cooley creamer cans at blood heat (92 degrees) submerging the cans in ice water. The object is to cool it down to 45 degrees as soon as possible. With this treatment the cream will all rise in from eight to eleven hours, and the cans can be cleansed for the next milking. After skimming the cream should be set in an atmosphere of about 62 degrees. Put two skimmings together, mix thoroughly, raise the temperature to about 72 degrees. Let it stand, stirring frequently until it begins to thicken. Then reduce to 62 degrees in winter, and 58 in summer. Churn in revolving churn until the butter begins to granulate the size of shot. Draw off the milk and wash in weak brine, then stronger, until the water runs off clear. Sprinkle on the butter about one ounce salt to the pound, more or less. Set the butter to cool two or three hours, and put into firkins for market. Butter must be used in two or three weeks, or it loses its peculiar aroma; though it may be kept good, as it is called, months or years. Farmers with care can make butter as good as the best creameries. But as generally made, the delicate article costs more to the poor manager than thirty-five cents butter costs the farmer who manages well.

HOW THE EYES AFFECT THE GENERAL HEALTH.—It is occasionally the case that children's eyes are near-sighted or dissimilar in focus without it being known to their elders. This is usually the occasion of much general physical disturbance which no ordinary doctoring seems to reach. In one case a young girl was treated during three or four years for violent spells of headache. She took pounds of pills, pints of medicine, for her head, for her stomach, for her spine, for malarial disorders, for neuralgia, for bile. Her hair grew gray, and she bade fair to sink into chronic invalidism. A brilliant idea struck her, and in three months spectacles had done for her what dosing had not done for her in three years. There had been a constant strain of the nerves of eyes and brain, while the poor girl had been trying to fit together two eyes of entirely dissimilar focus. The nerves are all in sympathy, and what affects the eye will likewise affect the brain and stomach.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet R. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Mohnens, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Medlar, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 70 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

ELLIS—WILLIAM FRANCIS ELLIS was born in Plymouth, N. C., November 2, 1827. Reared by pious parents, he joined the Methodist Church early in life. He was married to Miss Virginia E. Simmons, in Virginia, October 24, 1855. In 1857 he removed to Mississippi, where he lived till his death, which occurred at his residence in Wesson, September 10, 1887. Bro. Ellis was a devoted husband, a self-sacrificing and indulgent father, a conscientious member of the church and a consistent Christian. The example of industry, patience, forbearance and Christian charity he set before his children was beautiful, and is worthy their emulation. His unassuming and modest character was a beautiful exemplification of the injunction of the apostle, who said: "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." He leaves a wife and ten children to mourn his loss. A true Christian and faithful servant of the church rests from his labors on earth to join loved ones above. May the loved ones left behind meet him at last in heaven! R. F. JONES.

DREHER—GODFREY DREHER was born in East Feliciana parish, La., May 14, 1840, where he lived till God called him to the skies. On June 9, 1862, he was happily united in marriage with Miss Mattie Lypscomb, of East Feliciana parish, La. To these happy parents God gave eight children—four of which are in heaven and four on earth. Bro Dreher joined the Methodist Church in 1860, in which his brethren say he lived a consistent life, and in which he died in the triumph of a living faith. On May 4 he passed out of this life, quietly and peacefully, into that better life above. The day before he died his dear little Mattie entered into the home of the blessed. She went before to welcome him at the beautiful gate. One by one the dear ones are gathering home. May the sorrowing ones seek comfort from him who said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and at last meet their dear ones at the beautiful gate! L. S. JONES.

HALL—WADE HAMPTON HALL was born in Columbia district, S. C., September 25, 1804. He moved to Texas, and for twenty years was a respected citizen of that State. He removed to Louisiana, and settled in Webster parish in the fall of 1882. When he came to this State he was a member of the Christian Church and was truly devoted to God and spiritual in his religious experience. He was very liberal in his church views, but strict in his views of religious duty and obligation. He believed that nothing short of experimental godliness would save any man. In the fall of 1886 he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which he lived a consistent Christian life, still death transferred him to the church triumphant, which occurred in Webster parish, La., April 2, 1888. He was over eighty-three years of age, full of years and of faith.

JNO. A. MILLER.

SMITH—Died, at her home in Rapides parish, May 5, 1888, Sister FRANCES SMITH, wife of Leroy Smith. Deceased was about forty-two years old, and leaves a large family to mourn her death. She was willing and ready to die, saying so just before breathing her last. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. God bless her sorrowing husband and family!

Dear Sir—The two boxes of Pills you sent me did everything you said they would. My son was the victim of Malaria, deep-set, by living in Florida two years, and the Antidote has done more than five hundred dollars' worth of other medicines could have done for him. I have had one of my neighbors try the medicine, and it cured him immediately. I now recommend it to every one suffering from Malaria.

Respectfully yours,

W. W. MONROE.

MACKIE—MRS. CATHERINE L. M. MACKIE was born in Deventer, Holland, October 4, 1838, and died in this city, April 16, 1888. Her maiden name was Sutherland. She came to New Orleans with her family when she was sixteen years of age, and in 1858, when she was eighteen years of age, was married to Thomas G. Mackie, Esq., to whom she bore five sons, and with whom she lived most happily and affectionately until her death. Her home subsequently to her marriage was in Algiers, where for many years she continued to be a faithful witness for her Master, and where she leaves a host of friends to mourn her loss. Reared in the Lutheran Church, she had strong Protestant proclivities, and during a revival in 1860, held in the Algiers Methodist Church, she was happily converted and joined the church. This occurrence marked the beginning of a most distinct era in her life, and when she spoke of it (which was by no means seldom) it was always with elation of tone and more than usual emotion in her countenance. From that time, as might have been expected, she was bold to take up, and firm to sustain the consecrated cross."

One who knew her longer and more intimately than the writer testifies that she did not hesitate to recommend Christianity to all with whom she had any conversation or dealing, and adds, which the writer is also able to corroborate, "that she made her Bible, hymn book and Discipline the text-books of her calling." She loved the sungs of Zion and the assemblies of the Lord's people, and was a responsive hearer of the Word, even under the most unfavorable conditions. Cheerfulness was an obvious part of her calling as a Christian, and as such it must have impressed all with whom she came into contact. It is, therefore, not surprising that all the members of her immediate family became Christians, and that she wielded a steady and growing influence for good in the community where she lived. She had naturally a strong and active mind, which was balanced by rare good taste and industry, but yet her graces were ever more than her gifts; and whatever good she may have done in the world she will be longest remembered for those amiable qualities of heart that fitted her to be a servant of the Most High.

Her last illness, which was protracted, she endured with Christian resignation. Just one week before her death, at her request, all the members of her family, consisting of her husband, five sons and three daughters-in-law, and a few intimate friends were gathered at her bedside and partook with her of the emblems of her Lord's passion. At the close of these exercises her faithful husband, now past seventy years of age, witnessed a good confession and was received into the church. This occurrence, which was most obviously accompanied with the divine Witness, seemed to fill her with unspeakable joy, and, indeed, it was an occasion never to be forgotten by any who were present. To use the words of another witness: "Jesus was in the midst, and heaven seemed let down for delightful contemplation." On the last day of her life, it being the holy Sabbath, she was evidently in the Spirit and very near to translation, beholding the Savior and the forms of loved ones gone before, while she sang snatches of favorite hymns and testified that it was "the most beautiful day of her life." Thus she breathed her life out in adoration to her chief Benefactor, and so painless and undisturbed was her transit to the world of spirits that those who lingered to bid her farewell could hardly have divined whether the dying smile were less sweet than the living. Truly it may be said of this good woman in the language of inspiration: "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

J. M. B.

MILLER—Died at Carthage, Miss., May 4, 1888, THOMAS K. MILLER, aged nearly sixty-six years. He was born in Anderson district, S. C., November 12, 1822. He had resided for a number of years at this place, and, it may be said to his credit, that those who knew him best esteemed him most highly. He was brought up in the Presbyterian faith; but unfortunately failed to attach himself to any church. He talked freely to the writer of his views, giving expression to his firm belief in the great fundamental truths of our holy religion. His reasons for not attaching himself to any branch of the Christian Church, while satisfactory to himself, are not such as would be safe for others to accept. I can not but think our friend made a great mistake in that matter; yet in that, as in other things, he was honest and sincere. During his last sickness he expressed to the writer his unshaken faith in the precious atonement and his hope of pardon and everlasting life through the merits of Christ. He was well-informed, having read up in matters of general information, so that he was an authority in questions of dispute among his acquaintances. He was greatly esteemed by the good people of the community for his integrity and honesty. He leaves a widow, sad and lonely, upon whom the writer invokes the blessing of God. D. C. W. ELLIS.

FANT—MRS. ELIZABETH S. FANT died in Wesson, Miss., April 16, 1888. She was born in Colerain, Bertie county, N. C., August 29, 1825. Her maiden name was Etheridge. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in her twelfth year, and was "born again" about the same time. She was first married, in 1841, to Mr. John Banning, of Selma, Ala. He died in Choctaw county, Miss., leaving two sons. In 1856 the widow married Mr. E. M. Fant, of Anderson, S. C., and with him, in 1860, moved to Goliad, Texas, where Dr. Fant died in 1867. Three sons survive of this marriage. Mrs. Fant returned to North Carolina, but afterwards came back to Mississippi, and fifteen years ago made her home in Wesson, where she dwelt until her death. As friend, wife, mother, she was faithful and true; as a church member, earnest, zealous, consecrated and not ashamed to lead in public prayer. She had a religious experience, and consequently was not "a dumb Christian." An invalid for nearly five years, she was unable to attend upon the services of the sanctuary, but always enjoyed the visits of her pastor, who was ever benefited by his visits to the calm, patient, sweet-spirited sufferer. She was "made perfect through suffering." To her death was a gracious release, devoid of grimness or terror: "As soon as I am gone," she said, "I know I shall be happy!" A few nights before her departure I was summoned to see her. To my greeting and inquiry her reply was, "I feel bad, so bad!" But when I responded, "Yes, sister, I know this poor stricken body of yours does; but how is it with you?" who that was present can forget the brightening of the eye, the glow of the face and the clearness of the voice as she answered, "Oh! I am all right! It is all right with me!" To the absent loved ones messages were sent, and as long as consciousness continued she manifested the full assurance of faith and of hope; and she who had given her child-heart to God realized the promised light "at evening time."

T. L. MELLEN.

ADAIR—MRS. MARY IRENE ADAIR (nee Simmons) was born in Jefferson county, Miss., December 16, 1849, and passed through the portal of death into a higher state of life, April 14, 1888, at her home, near Woodlawn, in same county. She joined our church in early childhood and, I suppose, was converted at or near the same time. When little more than 18 years of age, on March 19, 1868, she was happily married to Mr. Benjamin E. Adair. To him she was a faithful wife—a companion indeed, meet to help him through the toil and vicissitudes of those trying days which came upon all the cotton planters of that section. After the model of Psalm cxxviii. 3, she blessed her husband's home. Their children were carefully trained. When they had Sunday-school privileges they were helped to prepare lessons more perfect than are often heard in the best-regulated schools. It was a privilege to listen to those recitations. Those children now rise up to call her blessed.

God grant that through eternity they may all rejoice together with her who taught their young feet the way of peace. Their earthly home was brightened by the loving care of one who was everything a mother could be, and now they look forward with peculiar joy to reunion with her in the sun-bright clime.

Her last sickness was painful and distressing. But through it all she bore with meekness and fortitude whatsoever the loving father saw fit to send, saying that she was resigned to his will. May all the stricken ones look up and see light!

A FORMER PASTOR.

BEARDSLEE—MISS ANNA M. BEARDSLEE was born in Jackson county, Miss., April 11, 1828. During her early childhood her parents move I to Moss Point, further South in same county. Here her father became one of the first mill owners of the place. In a beautiful and romantic spot, looking westward through the moss-grown live oaks, over the lake and to the confluent rivers, the family established a comfortable home. In this retired bower budded and blossomed the life of such unselfish devotion as filled all the air with fragrance. Her disposition was ever modest and retiring. Hence most of her life's beauty appeared to her family and intimate friends rather than to the public. Unselfishness was her prominent trait—in this she was truly eminent. The sick of the neighborhood looked to her in their time of need, nor looked in vain. She was like an angel of mercy at such times. In 1862, at Salem Church, near the place of her birth, she gave her heart to God and her hand to our Church. She remained a faithful member till the Master said, "It is enough, come up higher." J. P. BRAKE.

BARBER—The Methodist Church at Woodville, Miss., has suffered another loss in the death of MAJ. LEONARD X. BARBER, who departed this life April 1, 1888. He was born near Utica, Herkemer county, N. Y., April 28, 1816. In 1837 he came to Woodville and entered upon the practice of law. He soon established an enviable reputation as a competent and safe counselor, which he maintained to the end of life. He loved his profession and was always attentive to his clients. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Church. He loved the polity and doctrines of his church and enjoyed the means of grace which it supplied. He was faithful in every office the church called him to fill. By reason of his prudence and Christian habits, he resisted a wasting disease and lived beyond his threescore and ten years, and, "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season," he came to his "grave in a full age," and in hope of immortal life. His work on earth is done; his weary body sleeps in the grave, and his spirit has returned to God who gave it. May God comfort the bereaved family and bring them all at last into his eternal kingdom!

R. F. JONES.

The Great Wall of China.

Of course we had to go to the great wall of China. Squeezing through the last deep gorge and a deep rift in the solid rock, cut out by ages of rolling wheels and trampling feet, we reached the great frowning, double-bastioned gate of stone and hard burned brick, one archway tumbled in. This was the object of our mission, the great wall of China, built 213 years before our era; built of great slabs of well-hewn stone, laid in regular courses some twenty feet high, and then topped out with large hard-burned bricks filled in with earth, and closely paved with more dark, tawny brick, ramparts high and thick and castellated for the use of arms. Right and left the great wall sprang far up the mountain side, now straight, now curved, to meet the mountain ridge, turreted each 300 feet, a frowning mass of masonry. No need to tell you of this wall; the books will tell you how it was built to keep the warlike Tartars out. It is twenty-five feet high by forty thick, 1,200 miles long, with room on top for six horses to be driven abreast. Nor need I tell you that, for 1,400 years it kept those hordes at bay; nor that, in the main, the material used upon it is just as good and firm and as strong as when put in place. Twelve hundred miles of this gigantic work, built on the rugged, craggy mountain tops, vaulting over gorges, spanning wide streams, netting the river archways with huge, hard bars of copper, with double gates, with swinging doors and bars set thick with iron armor, a wonder in the world to which the old-time classic seven wonders, all gone now save the great pyramid, were toys. The great pyramid has 85,000,000 cubic feet, the wall 6,350,000,000 cubic feet. An engineer in Seward's party here some years ago gave it as his opinion that the cost of this wall, figuring labor at the same rate, would more than equal that of all the 100,000 miles of railroad in the United States. The material it contains would build a wall six feet high and two feet thick right straight around the globe. Yet this was done in twenty years.—Mining World.

THE MORAL VALUE OF PHYSICAL STRENGTH.—The American scholar and thinker is by rule a dyspeptic. He is a razor-faced, lantern-jawed, thin, nervous man. This is partly the effect of climate, and partly that of diet and regimen. In the old days of bran bread and prayer before daylight in the colleges, long morning walks before breakfast, and suicidal, consumptive habits, it required a pretty tough man to live through his studies at all. We are now doing this thing better, but we have not reached the highest outcome of the change, and shall not reach it, probably, for several generations. But we have come to the recognition of the fact that it does not toughen a man to reduce his diet, to cut short his sleep, to take long walks on an empty stomach, and to indulge in cold baths when there is no well-supported vitality to respond to them. We have come to the conviction that, for a useful public life, brains are of very little account if there are no muscles to do their bidding. In short, we have learned that without physical vitality the profoundest learning, the most charming talents, and the best accomplishments are of little use to a public man, in whatever field of professional life he may be engaged.—Scribner's Monthly.

This is the best time of the whole year to purify your blood, because now you are more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to take, and it is the most economical—100 Doses One Dollar.

We blame Knox for intolerance. Well, surely, it is good that each of us be as tolerant as possible. Yet at bottom, after all the talk there is and has been about it, what is tolerance? Tolerance, I say, has to tolerate the unessential; and to see well what that is. Tolerance has to be noble, measured, just in its very wrath when it can tolerate no longer. But, on the whole, we are not altogether here to tolerate. We are here to resist, to control and vanquish withal. We do not "tolerate" falsehoods, thieveries, iniquities when they fasten on us; we say to them, thou art false, thou art not tolerable. In this sense Knox was intolerable.—Carlyle.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The National Prohibition Convention, which met in Indianapolis, on May 31st nominated Gen. Clinton B. Fisk for President, and John A. Brooks Vice-president.

It is estimated that the reduction of the public debt during the month of May amounts to $4,000,000. Twelve million dollars were paid for pensions.

Lt.-Gen. Sheridan, who has been extremely ill for some time, is in a very critical condition. There is no hope for his recovery, and his death is a mere matter of time.

Lt.-Gen. Sheridan was promoted to the rank of General of the army, June 1.

It is announced that Mr. Blaine will start for home on June 25. Mr. Blaine announces that "while not a candidate, I am still a protectionist, a Republican and an American citizen, and shall do all in my power to help my party."

The grand jury of Springfield, Mo., has indicted over a hundred prominent citizens for gambling.

The bill creating the Department of Labor, to be conducted on a similar basis to the Department of Agriculture, has been adopted in conference by the Senate and House, and will become a law, as the President will doubtless sign the bill.

A furious storm swept over Washington county, Arkansas, June 2, causing much loss of life.

Jefferson Davis celebrated his eightieth birthday, at Beauvoir, Miss., on June 3.

A hotel at Rockdale, Texas, was burned on June 1. Out of thirteen people known to have been in the hotel only two escaped.

The bills relating to Louisiana that have gone to the Senate are the following: for a public building at Monroe; for constructing a road to the national cemetery at Baton Rouge; to extend the port of New Orleans; to sub-divide the western judicial district of Louisiana, and several bills relating to private claims.

The street cleaning movement was inaugurated in the city on June 5, with nearly 600 men added to the regular force of laborers.

The Democratic Convention assembled in St. Louis, June 5.

FOREIGN.

The Pope, in a speech at the close of the Vatican exhibition, announced that all precious objects will remain the property of the Holy See, with the exception of the holy vases and ornaments, which will be divided among the poor churches and the cathedrals, each cathedral receiving one.

It is confirmed that the passports of English and American travelers, and also of Frenchmen traveling through Alsace-Lorraine into Germany, will be vised without delay; but Frenchmen intending to reside or sojourn in Alsace-Lorraine must await inquiries.

The English gunboat "Mistletoe" has visited the Minquiers group of Channel Islands and warned the French to quit Mitre Island, upon which the tri-color was recently raised. It is claimed by the English.

A secret consistory was held May 31, at the Vatican. Pope Leo spoke chiefly of the indignities to which the clergy in Ireland are subjected by the penal code. The Pope was visibly fatigued and much overcome with emotion.

The queen regent unveiled the statue of Christopher Columbus in Barcelona, May 31. The ceremony was made the occasion of great rejoicing.

Emperor Frederick, after signing the quinquial bill prolonging the terms of the Prussian Parliament, has withdrawn his signature. Bismarck and the ministry, at their sitting, June 3, resolved to resign unless the bill was signed and published.

The agitation against the payment of tithes at Denbigh, Wales, is increasing. The military were called out June 3, and dispersed a crowd that had gathered. No one was injured.

Advices from Japan state that 230 houses were destroyed by a conflagration on May 8, at Tourangeka; and at Kameka, the next day 710 houses, one temple and a number of huts were burned.

A monster demonstration was held in the City of Mexico, June 3, in favor of the re-election of President Diaz. Twenty thousand workingmen marched through the principal streets and called upon the President at the national palace.

A fire broke out in the Hotel Roma, in Panama, June 3, entirely gutting ten large houses. It is estimated that $300,000 worth of property was destroyed.

Virchow, the great physician and scientist, who has critically examined the glands and throat of Emperor Frederick, has positively asserted that the glands are not only perfectly healthy, but their functions are normal, unimpaired and free from any trace of disease.

This diagnosis is equivalent to an opinion that the recovery of the Emperor is a question of time, and the crisis passed.

ONE LANGUAGE.—A Hindu and a New Zealander met upon the deck of a missionary ship. They had been converted from their heathenism, and were brothers in Christ; but they could not speak to each other. They pointed to their Bibles, shook hands, and smiled in each other's faces; but that was all. At last a happy thought occurred to the Hindu. With sudden joy, he exclaimed: "Hallelnia!" The new Zealander, in delight, cried out "Amen!" These two words, not found in their own heathen tongues, were to them the beginning of "one language and one speech."—Old Testament Anecdotes.

An Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for Bass on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh) day, July, Bass, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

Reduced rates of fare on all the connecting lines of railroads are being secured, and will be published later on. The public are invited to attend.

For further information address W. J. Heath, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. L. Price, keeper, Biloxi, Miss.

W. J. HEATH, Pres.
J. G. GRANT, Cor. Sec.

The established meeting of thirteen years of Hennington Camp Meeting is to begin on Thursday before the full moon in August of each year. This year the time is the sixteenth of August, and will continue one week. The public, and especially ministers, are invited to attend.

E. P. BUCKWOOD, Pres.
J. W. M'NEIL, Sec.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia.

This old favorite (so well known as Kennesaw Route) is making the fastest time made in the South. Only forty hours from New Orleans to Washington City, and forty-seven hours to New York. One day saved over other lines.

THE HOLY SACRAMENT.

BY E. H. BICKERSTETH.

Not worthy, Lord, to gather up the crumbs
With trembling hands, but from thy table full;
A weary, heavy-laden sinner comes
To plead thy promise and obey thy will.

I am not worthy to be thought thy child,
Nor sit the last and lowest at thy board;
Too long a wanderer, and too oft beguiled,
I only ask one reconciling word.

I hear thy voice, thou bidd'st me come and rest.
I come, I kneel, I clasp thy pierced feet;
Thou bidd'st me take my place, a welcome guest
Among thy saints, and of thy banquet eat.

My praise can only breathe itself in prayer,
My prayer can only lose itself in thee;
Dwell thou forever in my heart, and there,
Lo'd, let me sup with thee; sup thou with me.

"Turn on the Light!"—Part I.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

The 32,265 church members, 170 local preachers, and 135 itinerants in the Mississippi Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who contributed $3,085 46 to support 10 superannuated preachers, 25 widows and 25 or 30 children, are, no doubt, entitled to some information concerning these several claimants and their necessities; and, as the demand has been made on me by a presiding elder to "turn on the light," I shall try to do so as best I can. It is a delicate duty, and one from which I shrink. I sincerely hope the claimants will not misjudge me, for I am seeking only their good. The names may be found on pages 20 and 21 of the Minutes of our last Conference. Let this fact be noted: that in speaking of the allowances made the widows, the 85 cents paid each from the "Colvin Bequest" is left out, and only the amount collected in the bounds of the Conference considered.

1. A widow, whose husband served a number of years in the Conference, and did some good work for the Master. She has no means of her own; no home, save with her sons-in-law, whose means are limited. A daughter teaches school when she can get a school to teach. Allowance, $58 40.

2. A widow beyond 70, in bad health, yet thanking God she is spared to minister to her two invalid daughters—one helpless from birth, and the other, of late years, from spinal disease. Some means of her own, but the invalid daughters are wholly dependent upon her. For forty-five years her husband was a tower of strength in our Conference. Allowance, $65 70.

3. Another widow, whose husband had been a strong, faithful preacher for many years, his labors honored of God. She is not eating the bread of idleness, but striving hard to make a living; how much family I do not recollect. Her allowance was $65 70.

4. Another widow, old and feeble, making her home with her preacher-boy; her husband for many years a preacher of power. She has a small income, not quite enough for comfort. Allowance, $29 20.

5. An orphan girl of fifteen, who, by the aid of a young brother and a devoted elder sister, is trying hard to qualify herself for teaching; her father, in his poverty and severe physical and mental disease, received a little help for one year. Allowance, $43 80.

6. The wife and three children of a man, comparatively young, but earnest, zealous, consecrated and laborious, who, while in the discharge of pastoral duties, was thrown from a buggy and his skull fractured. He is in the insane asylum; no property; a friend furnishes the family with a house, rent free. The wife has an aged invalid mother to care for. Allowance, $131 40. Would $300 have been too much?

7. To the wife and seven children of another superannuate an allowance of $175 20 was made. He is incapable of caring for himself, and several of his children are in like condition through no fault of their own. Possibly he ought not to have been admitted into the Conference; but he was let in long years ago, and did the very best he could, and now he is infirm in body and mind, and in abject poverty.

8. A widow, whose husband died eighteen years ago, leaving her some life insurance money, which she judiciously invested. On the interest and her own skillful labors she has maintained herself and brought up three noble boys, one already a member of the Conference, and the others soon to be. Allowance, $43 80.

9. The widow of a superannuate who went home to glory a few years ago, leaving her without a dollar in the world. Her only home is with her daughter, the wife of an itinerant, whose family is not small. Allowance, $87 60.

10. The widow of another faithful preacher, not actually in distress, but needing some help. Allowance, $29 20.

11. Another godly widow, whose husband was for many years a pillar in the temple of our God on earth, loved and honored by all, and whose death in 1860 was mourned far and wide. She owns the little old farm on which he resided, and from which she gets a very little yearly rent. Her home is with her children, one of whom is a traveling preacher. In no danger of starving, but allowed $58 40 to help buy clothing, medicines and little comforts needed in old age and feeble health.

12. Another widow; her husband did not preach many years, for God took him in the midst of his labors. She is poor, and needs all the help she can get. Allowance, $87 60.

13. Another widow, striving to make a living where board is cheap and boarders not numerous. An unmarried daughter teaches school and helps the best she can. Allowance, $58 40.

14. An old man, weak in mind as well as in body; some family; poor as a Methodist preacher ever gets to be, and needing all possible help. He got $131 40; it ought to have been $300.

15. Another widow, whose husband was a zealous and efficient preacher for many years, and whose fame is in all the churches he served. She is striving to support herself and school her boys by boarding college students. Allowance, $87 60.

16. A man 84 years old, 64 years a preacher, whose spiritual children are counted by thousands, whose labors have otherwise been abundant, has a very small income, and makes his home with his children. Allowance, $58 40. It ought to have been at least $100.

17. The widow of one who came to us from the Methodist Protestants in 1870; a good man and faithful. She is a good woman and poor. Allowance, $87 60. It ought to have been more.

18. Another widow, not so needy as some, but needing far more than the $43 80 allowed.

19. Another widow, old and feeble. Her good husband, after many years of faithful labors, went to heaven two years ago, leaving her a little home encumbered by debt, and nothing more. Allowance, $131 40. It ought to have been $300.

20. Another widow; her husband a valiant young preacher dying in the harness. She is working hard to support herself and children. Allowance, $131 40. It ought to have been doubled.

21. Another old veteran, trembling as he walks, leaning on his staff, very poor; but cheered by the hope within and the joy set before him, longing for the appearing of his Lord. Allowance, only $131 40, when $300 was needed.

22. Another widow; refined, cultured, to whom and her daughters was left a home by her husband, who was for years a leader in our Israel. By her own hands, in the field, has she been earning her daily bread. Old and sick, she still abounds in energy. Allowance, only $131 40, when $300 would have been little enough.

23. Another old veteran, whose long life is closing in poverty. He toils on his little farm to support his wife and the child of his old age. How many hundreds he has led to Christ eternity alone can disclose. Allowance, $131 40.

Christ's Agony in the Garden.

BY REV. J. D. CAMERON.

MR. EDITOR: For two reasons I ask another hearing on this sacred subject. And, first, I want to set myself right. I learn from several brethren that my declaration, "I will pursue the argument no further," has been understood as applying to his whole controversy. I meant it to apply only to that particular argument. "Gilderoy" had quoted our Second Article of religion as favoring the view that the divinity of Christ had suffered, and to show this had put "suffered" in italics. I took the position that the words "crucified, dead, buried," sustained the same relation to Christ as the word "suffered." So that if his argument proved that divinity "suffered," it also proved that divinity was "crucified, dead and buried." But this view was so repugnant to all my conceptions of divinity that I did not wish to pursue the argument any further. That was all I meant.

Secondly, I want to set Dr. Summers right. "Gilderoy" mentioned Dr. Summers' Systematic Theology as being on his side of it; but made no quotation from him. I did not have the book at that time, but have since gotten it, and make some quotations from it. On page 216, paragraph 2, on "Christ truly suffered," he says: "'One Christ, very God and very man,' truly suffered—not the Father, nor the Holy Ghost, but the Son, as he is Christ, possessing a human nature in which he could suffer. This is opposed to the patripassians and the psabellites, as it restricts the sufferings to the Son and to his human nature." (Italics mine.) On page 217 he says: "His suffering was both physical and mental. The physical suffering consisted in the bloody sweat in the garden, the buffeting, scourging, coronary thorns, being the cross, and being nailed to it. The mental suffering consisted in fearful apprehensions unknown sorrows, and anguish inexpressible. In his agony in the garden, when 'he sweat as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground,' exclaimed, 'My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death.'" On page 218, under the proposition, "the higher and nobler the nature of the sufferer, the more exquisite the suffering he says: "Christ possessed a body that had never been degraded by vice, and, hence, was finely strung in its nervous organization, and liable to extreme suffering. He possessed a soul 'that was spotless, sinless, without offense.' The moral perceptions had never been obtunded by any obliquity, and every faculty was in the highest state of development, and so capable of exquisite pleasure or excruciating pain." Is there anything about 'divinity' suffering here? Does he not clearly state that the suffering was restricted to the human nature of the Son? that it was mental and physical suffering? I was surprised to hear Summers quoted as against my views on this subject, as a mere hint from his commentary on Matthew had constituted the germ of those views. While "Gilderoy" seems so anxious to instruct the young men, he must be careful not to mislead them.

WEST POINT, MISS., 1888.

Those Vandalized Parsonages.

BY C. P. G.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of May 31, I read an article on the destruction of parsonage flowers, vines, fruit trees, etc. Who could suppose so sad a case of vandalism in all the families of our itinerants, or of any one of the itinerants themselves, could have been found? Who would build and beautify parsonages for a family to hack, chop, chisel, scratch and deface? And who will plant trees if a preacher takes the rude liberty to cut them down?

Somewhere, in one of our Conferences, as I am informed, the preacher actually cut down two splendid oaks that stood on the south side of the parsonage, and gave it a most grateful shade. The ladies protested, the stewards opposed, but the work went on all the same. Those trees were worth for their beauty and usefulness at least $500 each, and it has for years been a cause of regret, reproach and disappointment, that they were, against all right, fitness and propriety, destroyed. So I am informed. It ought to be understood that no person, preacher or layman, has any right to touch a tree, or fence, or vine, or any part of church or parsonage property, without a permit from the trustees after they have met in regular form and considered the application. Had a private citizen cut down such trees the law would have held him responsible. And preachers in houses rented, or belonging to the church, can not be too cautious about the marring, soiling, defacing with nails, or otherwise, such property. A minister may lose his usefulness by such carelessness, and get removed, when otherwise he might have remained.

Rome's Designs.

Dr. Lorimer, of Chicago, read a paper before the Baptist Educational Convention at Washington City, May 16, in which he sketches our perils after this fashion:

"There are two precious trusts committed to the people of America—law-abiding liberty and Bible-revering religion. The West, humanly speaking, will determine their future. They are at present exposed to two perils—Immigration and Romanism. If the existing rate of progress continues, there will be 25,000,000 of foreign element west of the Mississippi in 1900. Many of the foreigners are already there, and in the territories they outnumber the native-born population two to one, are worthy citizens; but we can not be blind to the fact that even these are rapidly naturalizing on our shores the continental Sunday, and that others, less worthy, are actively antagonizing American institutions. Multitudes of them believe in privilege without corresponding responsibility, in freedom without restraint, in property without ownership, in families without marriage, in a state without government, and in a universe without God. What the outcome will be when this army of aliens shall be at the height of its strength we can easily foresee.

"Unquestionably the time to check its desolating march is now, and that, too, before reinforcements come up. Nor have we anything to hope from Romanism; but rather everything to fear. Lafayette warned us when he said: 'If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy.' The faithful Irish have a taste of what this means in the recent papal bull condemning their policy on behalf of national autonomy. If his Holiness shall presume to interfere in their political affairs, why not authoritatively meddle with ours when he thinks he is strong enough to do so and we weak enough to let him? He would no more hesitate to dictate terms to us than to them. It is only a question of power. And yet we deceive ourselves, quote every studied word that falls from the Pope's lips that seems to favor liberty, and hail every new-made cardinal as though he were made specially as an endorsement of our institutions, instead of facing the truth and owning that he is mocking us with the first and fastening chains on us with the second. But it will probably be answered: 'Is not the Romish Church doing much for education?' Education, indeed—but let Victor Hugo answer: 'You claim the liberty of teaching. Stop! be sincere: let us understand the liberty which you claim. It is the liberty of not teaching. You wish us to give you the people to instruct. Very well. Let us see your pupils! Let us see those you have produced. What have you done for Italy? What have you done for Spain? * * * Thanks to you, Italy, * * * mother of genius and of nations, which has spread over the universe all the most brilliant marvels of poetry and the arts; Italy, which has taught mankind to read, now knows not how to read! Yes, Italy is, of all the states of Europe, that where the smallest number of natives know how to read. Spain, magnificently endowed; Spain, which received from the Romans her first civilization, from the Arabs her second civilization, from Providence, and in spite of you, a world, America: Spain, thanks to you, to your yoke of stupor, which is a yoke of degradation and decay; Spain has lost this secret power, which it had from the Romans; this genius of art, which it had from the Arabs; this world, which it had from God; and, in exchange for all that you have made it lose, it has received from you—the Inquisition. This is what you have done for two great nations. What do you wish to do for France? The same.' And this is just what Rome will do for America unless we rouse us from our lethargy, and take such measures as shall preserve inviolate the precious trusts which God has confided to our watchful keeping."

A Universal Peace Conference.

I take pleasure in recommending the sentiments expressed, in the following extract from a speech recently delivered in Congress by Hon. C. E. Hooker, to the consideration of all lovers of peace. The duties which grow out of our position among the nations of the earth are but beginning to be realized. Especially as the oldest and foremost of sixteen republics on the American continent, our responsibilities are great and peculiar. It will be a noble thing in us to promote their growth and greatness along with our own; but if we shall be the means of showing all the world how universal peace can be perpetually maintained, all standing armies virtually abolished, and all the horrors of war ended forever, we shall deserve the foremost place in all history for the most beneficent achievement that up to that date her annals shall record. There is no reason why five of the strongest nations should not maintain the peace of the world, as easily as five of the largest boys in a school could prevent all fighting among the scholars. Yes, let Congress authorize the President to invite the conference, and let America inaugurate and illustrate the plan of universal peace among nations, to be maintained by arbitration.

W. L. C. H.

"MR. CHAIRMAN: This proposed conference of the governments embraced in North and Central and South America has one other object, suggested by the enlarged philanthropy of the age in which we live, which is to submit the disputes that may arise between any of these American governments to arbitration before resorting to the arbitrament of the sword. The Committee on Foreign Affairs had the pleasure of listening to the views of the venerable David Dudley Field, the Nestor of the American bar, who, in a few simple, terse, strong, Anglo-Saxon sentences, presented this question forcibly to the consideration of the committee.

"It would be a beautiful exhibition of national magnanimity for the strongest and most powerful nation on the globe to come to the front and propose to the other nations of the three Americas and of the world to submit all disputes and differences between nations to the arbitration of friendly powers. The present bill under discussion refers, of course, in this regard only to American nations. It is but to apply to men in their collective and national capacity the principle and essence of the message of the divine Messiah, 'Peace on earth and good-will toward men.' It is not going too far, Mr. Chairman, to express the hope that this measure, thus sanctioned and enforced by the representatives of the strongest people on the earth, will tend at once to the reduction of the vast and unwieldy standing armies of Europe, thus insuring the peace of the world, and will hasten the time when the hoarse roar of artillery and the sharp rattle of small arms will be hushed, and the small, still voice of 'Peace' be heard to swell its paeans of victory over the nations of the earth.

"One word, Mr. Chairman, as to the time when the President of the United States, in the discretion invested in him by this bill, should invite this conference to meet. It will, no doubt, occur in the year 1889, the centennial year of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the parent republic of the Americas. It has been proposed to mark the lapse of the first century of our existence under our present Constitution by a grand assemblage of all the nations of America at the capital of the parent republic, to express our fealty to the great principles embodied in this Constitution and copied into the constitutions of government adopted by the Central and South American republics. Would not this be the most fitting occasion for the assemblage by the President of the United States of the conference for which this bill provides?

"All the nations of the Americas will have assembled to bow in admiration at the shrine of Liberty and Freedom, consecrated and secured by this Constitution, a constitution imitated in its essential features by all the Central and South American republics, and of which the greatest of English lawyers and England's premiers, the 'old man eloquent,' the octogenarian of the English Parliament, William E. Gladstone, said in his memorable speech:

"'The American Constitution is, so far as I can see, the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.'"

Let patience have her perfect work, and bring forth her celestial fruits. Trust to God to weave your thread into the great web, though the pattern shows it not yet.—George Macdonald.

PRAYER.

BY K. L. D.

Let not thyself become of evil-doers,
Lest thy fretting help thy sorrow,
O, my brother.
Trust in Jesus;
He is worthy for to hold.

Fret not thyself because of evil-doers,
Lest thy fretting help thy brother?
O, my faint heart,
Trust in Jesus;
From the evil good he'll gather.

Fret not thyself in any wise,
Cease from anger, forsake wrath,
Be thou meek,
For he was lowly,
On earth he trod no tangled path.

Fret not, trust him now and ever,
Cleanse thou heart of sin and dross,
Work for Him,
Without complaining;
He will reward for earthly loss.

Fret not, rest in the Lord and wait,
Thou shalt have thine heart's desire,
God is love,
O praise his name;
Thy Rock and praise he doth require.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

1 Corinthians viii, 1-13.

TIME.—A. D. 58.

PLACE OF WRITING.—Ephesus.

INTRODUCTION.

To eat flesh offered to idols is a thing morally indifferent for all who understand rightly what an idol is (verses 1-6). Still, for the sake of those who are more weak, we should refrain from so eating, if it is a stumbling-block to them. (Verses 7-13.)

1. Touching things offered unto idols—Those portions of the animals offered in sacrifice which were not laid on the altar, and which belonged partly to the priests, partly to those who had offered them. These remnants were sometimes eaten at feasts holden in the temples, or in private houses, sometimes sold in the markets by the priests, or by the poor, or by the niggardly. Christians were thus in continual danger of meeting with such remnants. Partaking of them was an abomination among the Jews, and was forbidden by the apostles and elders assembled at Jerusalem. We know that we all have knowledge—I do not undertake to teach you as men destitute of knowledge. We all know that Christians, by virtue of their fellowship with Christ, possess knowledge; but it is not upon their knowledge that they are to rely. 'And yet show I you a more excellent way.'" Knowledge puffeth up—The sense is, "Admitting that you all have knowledge; that you know what is the nature of an idol, and of idol worship; yet mere knowledge in this case is not a safe guide; its effect may be to puff up, to fill with pride and self-sufficiency, and to lead you astray." But charity edifieth—While knowledge works injuriously and destructively upon the Christian life of others, love works edifyingly, building up that life either in the salvation of a brother, or in the well-being of the church.

2. If any man thinketh that he knoweth—If he is proud and conceited. He knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know—It is not what to know, but how to know, which includes all real knowledge.

3. If any man love God, the same is known of him—The sense seems to be this: "There is no true and real knowledge which is not connected with love to God. This will prompt a man also to love his brethren, and will lead him to promote their happiness. A man's course, therefore, is not to be regulated by mere knowledge, but the grand principle is love to God and love to man."

4. Concerning therefore—The parenthesis closes with verse three. The apostle now proceeds to the real question in debate. We know—Paul seems fully to admit that they had all the knowledge which they claimed. (Verse 7.) But his object was to show that even admitting that, it would not follow that it would be right to partake of that meat. That an idol is nothing in the world—That is, that the idols of the heathen have no existence in the world. That they who worship idols worship devils, the apostle himself asserts; but that is no contradiction to the present sentence, which asserts that the deities imagined by them, Jupiter, Apollo, etc., have absolutely no existence. There is none other God but one—This was a great cardinal truth of religion. To keep this great truth in mind was the grand object of the Jewish economy.

5, 6. Though there be that are called gods ... in heaven ... earth—The apostle does not say there are many gods or lords, but only that the gods of the heathen are called so. To us ... one God, the Father—The expression, "the Father," indicates that which Christians have in God. "It brings out prominently the contrast between the stand points of the heathen and the Christian; for the heathen have no father in this sense. God has become a Father to Christians only by redemption." Of whom are all things, and we in him—From whom, as a fountain and source. He is the great source of all; and all depend on him. We are formed for him, and should live to his glory. We have been made what we are, as Christians, that we may promote his honor and glory. One Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him—God the Son, the Eternal Word or Reason of the Father, is the Agent by whom he works in the creation, preservation, redemption, regeneration of all things.

7. Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge—Though to us who "have knowledge" all meats are indifferent, yet "this knowledge is not in all" in the same degree as we have it. There are some whose Christian faith is not yet so emancipated from the religious convictions of their old heathen state, and who are still in the bonds of their former conscience, moulded by heathen ideas. Some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it—We must understand the passage of Gentile converts, who by long habit had become so accustomed to the idea of the personality of the idol that they could not shake it off. Their conscience being weak is defiled—Here, then, is an ignorant, mistaken, ill-formed conscience; and yet he goes on to tell them that this conscience, so ill-formed, yet binds the possessor of it. For example: there could be no harm in eating the flesh of an animal that had been offered to an idol or false god; for a false god is nothing, and it is impossible for it to have contracted positive defilement by being offered to that which is a positive and absolute negation. And yet if any man thought it wrong to eat such flesh, to him it was wrong; for in that act there would be a deliberate act of transgression—a deliberate preference of that which was mere enjoyment to that which was, apparently, though it may be only apparently, sanctioned by the law of God.

8. Meat commendeth us not to God—The sense is, "Religion is of a deeper and more spiritual nature than a mere regard to circumstances like these." God looks at the heart. He regards the motives, the thoughts, the moral actions of men. The mere circumstances of eating meat, or abstaining from it, can not make a man better or worse in the sight of a holy God. For neither, if we eat, etc.—The meaning is: "Meat will in no way affect our relations to God; neither so that we shall lose standing with him in case we eat not, nor so that we shall be better in his sight in case we eat."

9. Take heed lest ... this liberty of yours become a stumbling block to ... weak—Under ordinary circumstances we have a right to act upon our rational convictions. But this right has its limits. We are bound to respect the scruples of the conscientious, though, perhaps, unenlightened man. The perceptions of such persons may be far from clear, but their motives are pure and worthy of respect. This is a general principle that is to regulate Christian conduct in all matters that are in themselves indifferent.

10. If any man see thee, which hast knowledge, sit at meat in the idol's temple—St. Paul would seem here to be putting an extreme case. He supposes the more enlightened believer to have carried his views of the non-existence of idols to their utmost possible limits, and to have seated himself in the idol temple, and partaken of the food which, to his eyes, is as fit for food as any other, if it be partaken of with thanksgiving. Emboldened to eat—The sense here is: "Before this he had a superstitious regard for idols. He had the remains of his former feelings and opinions. But he was not established in the belief that an idol was anything; and his superstitious feelings were fast giving way to the better Christian doctrine that they were nothing. But now, by your example, he will be fully confirmed in the belief that an idol is to be regarded with respect and homage. He will see you in the very temple, partaking of a feast in honor of the idol; and he will infer not only that it is right, but that it is a matter of conscience with you, and will follow your example."

11. Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died—The argument is, that we should not do anything that would tend to frustrate the work of Christ, that would render the shedding of his blood vain. The possibility of doing this is urged; and that bare possibility should deter us from a course of conduct that might have this tendency.

12. When ye sin so against the brethren ... wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ—Here is where the act culminates, and exhibits its exceeding guiltiness. In what way this is done is shown in the previous clauses. It thwarts the ends of the Savior's death. It is true that Christ, as the head of the body, suffers also in the affliction of his members; but this is not the thought here brought out.

13. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend—Lead him into sin; or shall be the cause of leading him into error and guilt. It does not mean, If the eating of meat should enrage or irritate another; but if it is the occasion of his being led into transgression. I will eat no flesh while the world standeth—In order to insure my avoiding flesh offered to idols, I would abstain from all kinds of flesh in order not to be a stumbling-block to my brother. On the supposition that the use of wine and other fermented liquors may be in themselves lawful, and that you might be safe in using them, yet others may be led by your example to an improper use of them, or contract a taste for stimulating drinks that may end in their ruin. Would it be right for you to continue the use of wine in such circumstances? Would Paul have done it? Would he not have adopted the noble principle in this chapter, that he would not touch it while the world stands, if it led a man to sin?

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

Knowledge without love is conceited and selfish.

Knowledge without love prides itself on liberty of action, and disregards the scruples of those who are weak.

Knowledge without love, therefore, may wound a tender conscience, lead a soul astray, and incur sin against Christ.

Knowledge without love is of small account; for "though I understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and have not love, I am nothing."

The Support of the Ministry and the Institutions of the Church.

There is no subject of more importance—nothing more essential to the success of the gospel—than the support of the ministry and the institutions of the church. I propose to consider these subjects as to their nature and effects. The support of the ministry is too often meant and understood only as relates to the temporal interests of the minister. I shall endeavor to show the necessity of a liberal support in this particular, and also to consider the necessity and effects of spiritual and moral support as well. In order that the minister of the gospel be successful in his work, he must not be engaged in secular affairs; he must have all of his time to devote to his peculiar work; be free from anxiety and care as regards his temporal wants. This being the case, how important it is that the minister be assured that provision for his temporal wants are felt and appreciated by those who are responsible for the same. Thus assured, his time and energies are used and directed to the welfare of all the interests of the church; he studies the character and dispositions of his people, and soon discovers how to instruct and comfort them, and in many ways he is enabled to get their confidence and love; has time to attend to the social meetings of the church, to visit the sick, etc. In other words, he has time for all the various duties incumbent upon him as a minister and pastor—time for self-examination; as well as time to study the Word of God. While all temporal supplies may be ample and liberal, yet without spiritual support the preacher will soon become discouraged or careless; his work will be fruitless; the church become powerless for good. It is necessary, therefore, that the minister should have the moral support of his people.

Let us consider how this can be given and to whom should the preacher look especially for this support. There is no question as to whom shall the preacher look for his temporal support, and really to them (the stewards) the people as well as the preacher look for spiritual and moral support to be given to the preacher especially. They are expected to take the lead in spiritual matters, as well as to see after the temporal affairs. How necessary, then, that stewards be chosen according to the rule laid down in the Discipline. As to the temporal support, the stewards should estimate the amount necessary to make the preacher comfortable, and then consider it a debt from which they can not become exempt only by paying—until they have done all in their power—done their whole duty. There are many methods in use for raising money, but have yet to hear of one that gives satisfaction when the support of the minister is only considered from a financial point; but when the spiritual and moral is considered and given, it is not difficult to use any method successfully.

Let us now consider the spiritual support—how given and its effects. This support should begin with the minister's arrival. There should be a cordial, hearty reception; and ask any preacher who he expects to meet him on his arrival, or who he prefers, and I dare say the answer would be in every case, "the stewards." So the stewards should be ready to meet the minister, and give him such a greeting as shall cause him to feel that he is amongst brethren, though strangers. Call him, "brother." There is inspiration in the word, "brother." I was pleased with our pastor's remarks, a few days ago at prayer meeting, in regard to the old way of saying "brother." He liked it, and so do I. The preacher should have the presence of the membership, and especially the official members, at the social meeting of the church, and their assistance as well in conducting these meetings; their prayers while he preaches; their advice and co-operation in his efforts to increase the attendance upon all the services of the church. In other words, the membership should work with their minister. That moral support is necessary is evident. There are other matters besides preaching, visiting the sick, etc., with which the minister of the gospel must and does come in contact; and his influence over men not members of the church is generally in proportion to the moral support he has from his own people. It is, therefore, very important that the world should know that the minister has the moral support of his people.

Let us now briefly consider some of the ways in which this support can be given: by speaking kindly of the minister; tell of his virtues, and be silent of his faults; be ready to explain his intentions, his words and his sermons when these are not properly understood and are receiving harsh or unkind criticisms; let the world know that you and your preacher are on the same side on all moral questions (taking it for granted that ministers of the gospel are on the right side on moral questions). The preacher thus supported is not backward in times of trouble, but comes to the front, and is successful in doing good in general and his work in particular. Happy is the minister thus supported, and happy is the people who thus support!

A few words on the institutions of the church: Never was there a time when the institutions of the church needed more hearty and liberal support, and never was there a time when the membership of the church was in greater need of instruction in regard to the importance and necessity of sustaining these institutions than at present. We believe that all of the institutions of our church are necessary to the success of the gospel; our very existance as a church depends largely, if not entirely, upon the maintenance of these institutions. And just here will say that with such support given to the ministry as has been indicated, the institutions of the church will be supported as a natural result. Experience teaches us that in proportion as we support the institutions of the church, we grow in grace and in knowledge.

May God speed the day when our people—called Methodists—shall fully realize that it is not only a duty, but a blessed privilege to support the ministry and the institutions of the church, according to their ability and the necessity of each; then shall Christians be indeed "the salt of the earth, the light of the world."

P. A. RICHARDSON.

Do All Christians Deny Themselves?

MR. EDITOR: This may appear to be a singular question to many readers of the ADVOCATE. However singular it may be, it is the terms of discipleship, made so by our Lord. He says: "Let him that will come after me, deny himself," etc. I know we have many holy, consecrated men and women in the church who do all they can to further the cause of God. I would not detract one thing from them. They are "the salt of the earth." Yet we have many that think they are taxed heavier, and do more than their part. Can this be true? I do not think anyone can do too much for the cause of Christ. "We are workers together with him." Christ gave himself. Then to hear a man complain of being taxed too heavy, or that he is doing more than his part, I am forced to the conclusion that such an one does not know what it is to practice self-denial, in comparison with God's servants, who labor for the salvation of them and their families.

Let us notice some of the self-denial practiced by the servants of God. In doing this we will leave out the expense of moving, and the separation from kindred and friends. The church is assessed for the support of himself and family, provided he has one. The assessment is as often based on the amount the stewards think they may possibly be able to collect, as it is on the actual amount demanded by the laws of nature, for the support of the preacher. We will make for a basis, and we think it not above an average, the assessment to be five hundred dollars. Out of this amount everything has to be paid for, from a load of wood to a barrel of flour. Little enough if he gets it all! Does he get it? Not one time in ten. Most generally he has to deny himself and put one hundred and twenty-five dollars out of a salary of five hundred, one-fourth of his salary not being paid to him. This is not all he denies himself. Out of his small remaining salary he gives liberally to the cause of missions and his Conference collections, equally as much as the average church member. In addition to this, he has to pay to the building of churches and parsonages. I knew a brother who is serving a good average charge in his Conference. That brother's salary was estimated by the Board of Stewards at $800, divided equally between the four appointments. At one of the appointments they had to build a church. The people at this appointment were good livers. Most any member at this appointment could have built the church and not felt it but little. The church was only to cost $450. This brother had to pay one hundred dollars toward the building of that church—seventy-five dollars more than any other member or contributor. The question might be asked, Did he pay the money? In answer to the question, He did. The stewards notifying him they could not pay him only half of his assessment, owing to the congregation having to build them a church, directly forcing the preacher to give not only half his salary at that place, but lead his congregation in giving to build a church for themselves $75. This caused a more rigid system of self-denial to be practiced in that brother's family, denying themselves some of the comforts of life that only the itinerant's wife, angels and God can understand.

I would, in conclusion, recommend to all those who think they are overtaxed, to a careful reading of the twenty-fifth chapter of our Lord's gospel as recorded by Matthew, beginning at the fourteenth verse to the end of the chapter. For in that day our Lord will certainly say to such: "Inasmuch as you did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not to me;" "I know ye not."

Yours truly,

UNCLE JOHN.

Children's Day in Camden, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Had our pastor selected a more gifted pen, you certainly would have had an account of the pleasing and instructive exercises of Children's Day embellished with many beautiful flowers of rhetoric and elegance, which mine, uninspired by the muse, is unable to adequately portray. Our Sunday-school is blessed in having a working, practical, faithful superintendent, Bro. E. Melvin. We have a band of Christian teachers, and earnest and punctual pupils, and feel encouraged to persevere. Our leader in music, Miss L. Purviance, presides with skill and efficiency at our organ, and under her tuition we are learning many sweet and beautiful songs of Zion.

The orators on that occasion were our superintendent and Prof. Cox, teacher of our secular school. They delivered two very pointed and appropriate addresses, and should our children heed the kind advice of those Christian gentlemen, they certainly would become blessings and ornaments to the generation in which they live.

Bro. Robertson appointed four cheery-faced little girls to wait on the congregation, and "to smile most sweetly upon each one who contributed."

Bro. Melvin (father of our superintendent), a Baptist according to "faith and order," may not have much faith in sprinkling as an orthodox mode of baptism; nevertheless, has a wonderful amount of faith in Methodistic liberality, for he actually refused to allow anyone of those dear little girls the use of his hat, saying: "Mine is a straw hat, and I am afraid you will knock the bottom out." One cautious soul, fearing lest some evil would befall the hat passed to him, cast therein the generous sum of one cent.

We had a large, attentive congregation, which contributed the sum of $8 99, and several promised to send in more to Bro. Robertson. In due time the money will be forwarded to Rev. H. R. Singleton.

Our pastor, in his usual, genial mood, gave us a little talk; then closed the exercises with prayer and benediction.

How thankful should we feel for all the precious gospel privileges we enjoy! Then prove our gratitude by sending the Bible to those who have it not.

J. E. BENNETT.

On the Atchafalaya.

MR. EDITOR: At a point on the banks of this river, known as Bentley's Saw-Mill, there is a large settlement of people who, until this year, have only had desultory preaching and no Sabbath-school within walking distance; and as but two of the families have any other means of locomotion than "shanks' ponies," religious instruction is at a somewhat low ebb. In April I commenced preaching here regularly twice a month in a small building kindly lent by Mr. W. J. Bentley for the purpose, and now have a regular attendance of twenty-five to thirty, and a flourishing Sunday-school organized with thirty-one scholars and three teachers. As this building is wanted for other purposes, we must have one of our own, or the alternative will be that the good work of preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ and teaching the little ones God's holy Word must be suspended indefinitely.

The estimated cost of the church which it is proposed to erect will be $350. Towards this we have up to the present time received $166 75. There is about fifty dollars more promised, which will come as soon as work is commenced. From this statement you will see we want $150 more to ensure a building at all suitable. My older brethren in the ministry know the neighborhood and its need, and know that a church is urgently needed. Who will help in this good work? Subscriptions, large or small, will be thankfully received by the undersigned. Only $150 and another building for the worship of God will be erected, and more souls will be led to the foot of the cross of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Help, brethren and sisters, for the call is pressing!

Your brother in Christ,

WALTER DENSTAN, P. C.

SUMMERPORT, Louisiana.

From the Work.

MARTIN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: As there is much information going into the ADVOCATE of the several charges, I deem it a pleasure to give a short report of the Martin Church.

We are making some progress in church affairs, especially in the collections ordered by the Conference. Congregations are good at all appointments, and there seems to be a desire among the majority of the people to have a spiritual growth among us. Certainly this is needed more than anything else, for without spirituality in a church there is not much progress to be made in the ways of godliness and righteousness; and it is this one point which I try to impress upon my people. To increase this spiritual life and strength, I have appointed class leaders at two churches, and have placed the responsibility of that part of church work on them. By persistent effort I have succeeded in organizing three Sunday-schools with a membership of about ninety; but I do not say that all this number attend. I am indebted to Bro. B. M. Drake for help in organizing one of these schools at Martin. You see, it sometimes takes two preachers to organize a Sunday-school, or, at least, it did so at that place.

Protracted meetings will begin next month, and I trust that I can report the Spirit of God as having descended in great power upon us and scattering the darkness of sin from many hearts, and carrying the light of the gospel in its stead. I have four churches to fight for and nine whisky and beer-selling places to fight against, and you see, Mr. Editor, that we need such an overwhelming influence of the Spirit on this work that these things of great evil and destruction of homes and life shall be blotted from this lovely country.

I have already written too much, so must close.

Yours fraternally,

ROBT. SELBY.

LEE, Miss., June 4, 1888.

DOUGLAS CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I am endeavoring to till the soil of my new field, and while, on account of rocks, my plowshare does not leave a smooth furrow, I expect to continue the use of tried implements, and, therefore, expect a harvest. I have seven appointments—four at churches, and three at school-houses.

The week of prayer and self-denial was observed, and Children's Day was not forgotten; but, as results are not satisfactory, we expect to repeat the effort this fall.

Our Sunday-school work is moving on finely. We have four Sunday-schools, and, with one exception, they use our Nashville literature. The records show the names of something over two hundred who take part in this all-important work of feeding and being fed from God's Word.

Yours in Christ,

W. J. PORTER.

JUNE 1, 1888.

Every Christian needs to take time apart from the hurry and bustle of every-day life to consider, with his face toward God, whether or not the main line of his conduct is in harmony with the will of God and in accordance with the righteousness which is illustrated by the life of Christ. Not otherwise can we be his disciples; not otherwise can we escape the undertow of this world, which catches and draws down into the depths all who are not held by the strong hand of Christ.—Words and Weapons.

From Our Mission Rooms.

BY SECRETARY I. G. JOHN.

Will you permit me to offer your readers occasional gleanings from our mission fields? Many of them are white unto the harvest. As the reapers report their work, they haul in many a sheaf that we would gladly hold up to the church as evidence that the gospel in our day, as in the days of Paul, is the power of God unto the salvation of the heathen. Often the reapers are weary, for their labor seems in vain. They need some one to hold up their hands. Possibly an extract from a letter telling of these discouragements may awaken a prayer at home which the Head of the church will gladly answer. Fresh fields are opening and calls are coming in from every mission for more laborers to help gather in the harvest. We would echo these calls. They may inspire the prayer Christ taught his church to offer, that more laborers be sent into the open field. Possibly it may quicken the conscience of the church and make it willing to send to heathen lands the men who are ready to go.

Here is a letter from Bro. Grimes, of the Guadalajara district, Central Mexican Conference. His district embraces the State of Jalisco. He is reporting his first round, and says: "I have visited every station and circuit in the district, and also every preaching-place in the different circuits." In order to do this he "traveled four hundred and three leagues, over the mountains to San Blas on the Pacific coast. He reports progress in all departments of the work. "The spirituality of the people is shown by their attendance on the ordinances of the Lord's house, and their interest in the progress of the cause of Christ. In some places the people are beginning to realize that it is their duty to help in carrying forward the cause by contributing of their means for this purpose." The wise missionary steadily moves his people forward on the line of self-support. It is a lesson many are slow to learn. So they are at home. Many churches have had the gospel for scores of years, and their members have not all learned their duty to support the gospel that has given them and their children the hope of eternal life. Let us be patient with the church on missionary ground.

Here is an extract from a letter from a home church, which presents in practical form an open field of Christian effort in every congregation and Conference of our broad connection. Some weeks ago, Rev. Horace Bishop, of Waco, Northwest Texas, wrote to the secretary, asking the cost of support for single and married men in our foreign work. During the week of prayer and self-denial his people had moved forward to the point that they felt it their duty to support a missionary in the foreign field. The information, of course, was sent, and here is an extract from his reply: "We organized our subscribers yesterday afternoon. They want to support a single man, commencing with the first of this month. If we succeed as we expect, we will be ready to take care of his wife when he marries. Please select a young man already in the Orient, or one whom the Board designs to send, and then let us know how to proceed, so that the church and the Board will work in harmony." God bless Bro. Bishop and the church at Waco! They are moving on the apostolic line. Antioch sent out Barnabas and Saul, and every church that has the ability may have its representative in the mission field, and yet meet the demands the church makes on it for our general work. There are several charges in Texas as well able as Waco to support a missionary. There are hundreds of charges in Southern Methodism that can send out and support one or more missionaries in heathen lands, and not diminish one dollar of their offerings to the general work. Last year Kansas City raised $1,000 to send two missionaries to China and Japan. The Baltimore Conference also raised a like amount and sent out two of its best young men to Japan. Louisiana and Mississippi, in answer to an appeal in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, raised in a short time $1,000, and the man it sends is now nearing the shores of Japan.

So far from depleting, these special efforts swelled the general collections. The Board, at its recent meeting, provided for one married and three single men for China. One of the latter we expect to assign to Waco. We are hoping to re-enforce at an early day every mission field. Then our veteran missionaries deserve a kind remembrance from some Conference and church in their native land. Were the churches to lift their support from the Board, it would quickly move forward and re-enforce each field with the men for whom they so earnestly call. What church, or district, or Conference will fall into line with Waco, and say, "We will support one or more men in the mission field?" Shall Southern Methodism have but one Antioch within its bounds?

(The above items from our missionary secretary ought to be pondered prayerfully by us all. The editor would ask, Are there not congregations in Louisiana and Mississippi that are willing to support a missionary. We know that some are as able as the congregation in Waco, Texas. Are they willing?—Ed.)

Work for Children.

Bro. E. P. Mackie, the faithful and successful superintendent of the new Felicity Sunday-school, made the following excellent remarks, on Children's Day, which we gladly make room for in the columns of the ADVOCATE:

"The duty of teaching the young is distinctly enjoined upon the church of God in the Old Testament. Hear Moses, in his valedictory, as he utters the words of divine coinage: 'Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.' The Jewish synagogues in Jerusalem, numbering over 450, furnished the model after which the services of the early church were fashioned. These places secured to the people systematic instruction in the Scriptures. The Sunday-school service of our day closely resembles that of the ancient synagogues. The faithfulness of the early Christians in teaching the young these truths and practice of religion is fully attested by the history of their times.

"On through the Middle Ages, amidst its dreadful and discouraging purpose to crush out all Christian teaching, it lived. With the open Bible of the Reformation came liberty, and in 1527 Sunday-schools were established by Luther at Wittenberg, and in 1560 by John Knox, in Scotland; in England during seventeenth century; in the United States in 1674, in Massachusetts; Wesley organized one at Savannah in 1736. The first real epoch in Sunday-school history begins with the founding of the Gloucester schools by Robert Raikes in 1780. In 1880 there were not less than 12,500,000 teachers, and 12,500,000 scholars—11,000,000.

"The leading object of Sunday-school work is to trace out and establish in the minds of scholars the boundary line between right and wrong, to assist conscience in restraining those who would go beyond that line and in reclaiming those who have gone beyond it; to bring them to the obedience of Christ. The chief instrument in the accomplishment of this work is the Bible in the hands of intelligent Christian teachers. The great question should be: How may our scholars be induced to accept Jesus? His spotless life, vividly presented, will break down all self-sufficiency and pride when brought face to face with the submissive, humble and loving Son of God, dying for sinners. We must bring the children to Jesus and interest them with scenes in his life; then win the heart to love him and pray for the Spirit to instruct them and lead them to surrender to Christ, their glorious Captain of salvation. Teach a present salvation, and do not wait for special revival occasions. Have a burning desire to lead every unsaved scholar to Christ, and every saved one to richer enjoyments of a Christian life. The benefits growing out of the Sunday-school to the young Christian are simply incalculable. Beginning from the parents' arms the child should be taught 'the way of life.' The work of the Sunday-school among the children can be immensely helped by careful home instruction. Sunday-school workers see most clearly, as they also suffer most keenly, the direct consequences of parental negligence of the children.

"The Sunday-school must substitute unchristian homes. By Christianizing the children of such homes, the parents are often led to Jesus. The songs, prayers, lessons, exhortations these children never will, never can forget. The Sunday-school has 'met a great and waiting necessity.' It is clearly the duty of the church to make the amplest provision for the spiritual efficiency of Sunday-schools. 'Will you support' this one of 'its institutions?' When a church has brought under cultivation its own field, its next duty is to carry the gospel to those children in regions beyond, and establish mission schools.

"Children's work, then, should be the especial care of the church of Jesus Christ. 'Feed my lambs,' said our risen Lord; and, clothed with the power which the Comforter bestows upon all consecrated teachers, we will become skillful in leading the children to Jesus. Teach them to be noble, truthful, kind, self-denying, consistent Christians. The children's work today is exerting a marvelous force in the mission fields of the world. Heathen children are being taught the truths of Christianity by missionaries supported with Sunday-school children's offerings. This school has for over a quarter of a century systematically raised money for educating Chinese boys for the ministry, and largely sustained a mission school, bearing its name, in China.

"Let us thank God for raising up noble workers in the Sunday-school in the years gone by, through whose consecrated talent the work of instructing the children has been so perfected and so grandly developed. Much prayer and wise planning have been, under God, the secret of the present inspiring condition of our organized work among the children. We do well to ask continually for divine guidance and seek heavenly qualifications to enter into the labors of our worthy fathers and carry successfully forward the work they so divinely inaugurated. Let us covet earnestly the best gifts for a work like this, germinal with such untold possibilities. 'Thy that be teachers shall shine as the brightest of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.' (Daniel xiii, 3.)

THE TRUE GENTLEMAN.—The following sketch is called, "The Portrait of a True Gentleman. It was found in an old manhouse in Gloucestershire, written and framed, and hung over the mantelpiece of a tapestried sitting-room:

"The true gentleman is God's servant, the world's master, and his own man. Virtue is his business, Study his recreation, Contentment his rest, and Happiness his reward. God is his Father, Jesus Christ his Savior, the saints his brethren, and all the need him his friends. Devotion is his chaplain, Charity his chamber-maid, Sobriety his butler, Temperance his cook, Hospitality his housekeeper, Providence his steward, Charity his treasurer, Piety his mistress of the house, and Discretion his porter to let in or out as most fit."

"Thus is his whole family made up of virtue, and he is the true master of the house. He is necessitated to take the world on his way to heaven; but he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business like way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man and a Christian.—Exchange.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which manifesting in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or body; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or ailments, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has made, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a

Briefs.

The Interior has this note:

We respect that official, whatever his politics may be, who shows enough respect for religion in entering on the duties of his office to acknowledge his dependence on the Ruler of the universe for wisdom and strength to perform his sluties. A case in point is that of Governor Nicholls, of Louisiana, who in his inaugural address the other day invoked divine aid and prayed for guidance in serving the State. If this governor and all other governors would not only make a devout beginning, but would continue in a reverential frame of mind throughout their terms of office, what a rebuke their course would administer to the evil elements in the contending parties! And then what a blessing it would be if the example of the governors were to be followed by the mayors of cities. The times are ripe for the advent of mayors with moral principles and religious convictions; mayors who will administer municipal affairs in the fear of God, and not in fear of the demon of the dramshop.

This, from the same paper, contains much:

Money, money, money! That is the cry which now goes up continually from churches, Conferences, assemblies and Missionary Boards. But as the demands are in nearly every case reasonable in amount and right in purpose, there is no occasion to get irritated about them, or to tighten the grip on one's pocket-book as if in self-defense. The sober truth is: that the best measure of self-defense is an open pocket-book when the church and its various causes are under consideration. Our own peace and safety and the well-being of our offspring depend on the activity and efficiency of those agents and agencies which are concerned in spreading the gospel of Christ, and in bringing this and other peoples under its saving influence. Therefore, enlightened self-interest impels to liberal giving, while a sacred sense of duty and gratitude to God sanction and intensify the impulse.

"The Sunday Law" is now a matter of grave interest to the people of this State. The efforts being made to repeal or amend are watched very closely. The friends of repeal are working every available means. They propose to repeal the law: if that can not be done, they propose to amend, but their amendment is such that, if carried, will render the whole law unconstitutional. Let the friends of the law be specially watchful at that point. We are surprised to read, in a petition sent by the Temperance Alliance of Louisiana to the General Assembly, this unmistakable refutation of the statement that the law does no good. "We call your especial attention to the statement that the law is not being respected. Gentlemen, inquire at the United States Revenue office of this city. There you will ascertain that the first year of its enforcement saved to the poor and needy families of this State $14,000,000—a sum that would in ten years drive extreme want beyond the limits of our State." Yet in face of this evidence of good to our people there are those who seek to repeal or so modify the law as to render it inoperative. Such people are the enemies of society. Let the law be maintained and greater good will come.

There are two reasons why a man may not desire anyone to know how much he gives. 1. A real desire to please God, and not parade his alms before men. 2. A shame to let anybody know, because he gives so little.

The Commencement Exercises of Centenary College.

For fifty years Centenary College has been doing effective work for the church and humanity. The influences that have gone out from her halls have been felt in very many places in the Southwest. Her graduates are scattered through Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, and have filled, and are now filling, prominent positions in the learned professions, and in the agricultural and mechanical vocations of the land. The pulpit, the bar, the bench, the workshop and the farm have all been graced by men who received their intellectual and moral training in the class-rooms and chapel of Centenary College. Fifty years of good work, no matter how wide and beneficial its results, do not satisfy the Board of Trustees, nor the faculty, nor the friends of the college. They look upon those years as but the beginning of years of usefulness, and upon the work done as but the foundation upon which to build better and more enduring work in the future.

THE PAST SESSION.

The session just closed opened under embarrassment and discouraging circumstances. Just at its beginning President Adams suddenly vacated his position, and left the institution without a head. To meet such an emergency and counteract its influence, the president of the Board of Trustees, Bishop Keener, requested Prof. Wiley to act as president until a successor to Dr. Adams could be secured. That Prof. Wiley did his difficult work well is evinced by the fact that the Board of Trustees, after examination, passed a most complimentary resolution in his favor. The attendance of students has not been as large the past year as during some other years, but the work done has been as well done as that of any past year. An extract from the report of Acting President Wiley to the Board of Trustees will give our readers an idea of the general state of the case during the past session:

It is gratifying to me to state that during the thirty-three years of my connection with the college there has never been so large a proportion of our number whose deportment, habits of study and progress have been so satisfactory. This is mainly due to the excellent home-training that most of them received before they were sent away to college. The Young Men's Christian Association connected with the institution has enrolled among its members over 50 per cent. of our number. This association has exerted a fine influence in imparting a healthy moral tone to the body of students. We have had occasion to administer private reproof once or twice for unexcused absences from college duties. These are the only cases of discipline we have had. If there has been a single case of offense, such as is supposed to be rife among college boys, it has not reached the ears of the faculty.

This extract speaks out the fact that Centenary College is a safe place for a boy's morals.

THE EXERCISES.

The exercises began Sunday morning. Rev. W. B. Murrah, of Whitworth College, preached the baccalaureate sermon to a large and interested audience. At night he preached again; and both sermons are spoken of as of excellent quality and forcefully delivered.

The preparatory exhibition on Monday evening was a spirited contest between six young speakers for the gold medal offered to the best speaker. The pieces were selections, and were all well rendered, but the committee awarded the medal to Master H. N. Pharr, of Berwick, La. The faculty awarded the medal for scholarship to R. J. Putnam. Tuesday morning the annual alumni address was made by Prof. McGimsey, of Centenary, on "The Practicality of This Age." It was an address evincing a thoughtfulness abreast of the progress of the age, and delivered in a dignified and graceful manner. It gave general satisfaction. Tuesday evening was the oratorical contest between the chosen champions of the two literary societies for a gold medal. The orations were original, showing wide range of subjects, considerable depth of thought, and delivered mostly well. The gold medal was won by W. J. Roberts, of the Franklin Institute. After this contest, the Hon. T. Dabney Marshall, of Meridian, Miss., was introduced as the orator for the two societies. He spoke on the subject of "Dudes," but by no possible change of position could we come within range of his voice, and so did not hear a sentence that was spoken. We judge, however, from the laughter and applause of those who did hear him that his speech was a success.

Wednesday morning Centenary College sent forth two more graduates—W. W. Drake, of Jackson, La., and D. N. Dalton, of Bastrop, La. Mr. Drake was graduated to the degree of "B. A.," and Mr. Dalton to that of "B. S." Mr. Drake delivered a fine speech, on "Southern Literature," and also the valedictory. Mr. Dalton gave the salutatory, and an oration, on "Tyranny." Both gentlemen acquitted themselves well, and, in so doing, reflected additional honor upon their alma mater. The baccalaureate of Prof. Wiley was highly commended by everybody, some going to the extent of declaring that it was the best ever delivered at Centenary College. At this point Prof. Wiley announced that the gold medal for scholarship among the students of the college proper had been awarded to W. H. Wynn, son of Rev. John F. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference.

The Board of Trustees held meetings twice a day, and examined minutely into the affairs of the college. They found out the gratifying facts that the Conference collections for this college are gradually increasing; that the buildings are in better repair than last year and better kept, and that a new interest in the college is awakening in many places. These facts have aroused the members of the Board to a determination to leave nothing undone, nothing unsaid, that can insure the future success of the college. Prof. Huffaker having resigned the chair of Natural Sciences, his place was filled by the Board by the election of Charles C. Miller. Mr. Miller is a young man—a graduate of the college, and said to be eminently fitted for the position to which he has been called. The Board conferred the honorary degree of "D. D." upon Rev. B. Carradine, of the Louisiana Conference, and upon Rev. W. B. Murrah, of the North Mississippi Conference.

THE ELECTION OF A NEW PRESIDENT.

About the opening of the last session President Adams vacated the chair of president. Since that time the members of the Board of Trustees have been praying and seeking light on the question of filling the place with a suitable man. When they met on Monday evening, the man had not made his appearance. During neither of the two sessions of the Board on Tuesday did he come to the front. By Wednesday morning we began to fear that the Lord had not heard our prayers; but at the last moment the hand of Providence led out before the Board the man who is to guide the old college to the highest success. When his name was proposed, the wonder was expressed that he had not been mentioned before, and when the vote was taken, he was elected unanimously. Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, D. D., presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, is now at the head of this college. The friends of the college have now a new inspiration of hope. The horizon has already begun to broaden and brighten. Dr. Hunnicutt will bring three most important qualifications for his work: a clear, trained intellect, a pure, humble heart, and a vigorous energy. In the use of these, and with the co-operation of his competent faculty, we expect to see President Hunnicutt bring this college to the positon where it will do better work for Mississippi and Louisiana than it has ever done.

Now, let all our preachers and laymen and lay-women take on a full stock of downright enthusiasm for Centenary College. Let us talk up our own institutions and patronize them as far as we are able, and quit building up the schools of other denominations at the expense of our own.

Gatuitous Advertisement of the Enemy.

It seems to us that there is nowadays a danger which is much overlooked. In some quarters the devil and his agents are having too much respect paid to them by Christian people. The old preacher was not very far wrong who refused to preach about the devil because he did no want to pay so much respect to him. If the devil ever can have a moment of pleasure, it is when he persuades a follower of Christ to enter a discussion with an of his retainers. No matter if he does get the worst of the combat, it has brought him into prminence. A man who is policly kicked in the streets is sne to be "the observed of all observers," and that is often a large compensation for the public insult. We particularly like what Dr. Parkhurst, of New York, said, the other day in his pulpit, on what we call a "gratuitous advertisement of the enemy:"

We do not care for the pleasant patronizing words of the atheist or the agnostic. He occupies distinct grounds from ourselves. He is a mutineer against the general heart of mankind, and nineteen centuries of useful history. Tenting with an infidel is reason against Christ, and, as Christians knowing the Lord, we can be about more profitable business than engaging in fencing matches with the distinguished exponents of unfaith. It advertises anti-Christ at the expense of Christ. We regret that there should exist in our city what we might call a doctrinal cockpit, where game fowls of all variety of feather, Christian, Jewish, infidel, agnostic and atheist, are let in upon the same sand, to attest their respective genius for picking out each other's eyes; and bear with me in saying that I venture to think that it is a shrewd move on the part of the infidels who maintain the pit, a good deal shrewder than on the part of the Christians who patronize it.

The Democratic Nominations.

Last week the Democratic Nominating Convention met in St. Louis for the purpose of choosing candidates for the President and Vice-Presidency of this great country. Mr. Cleveland had no opposition for the first place on the ticket, and was, therefore, unanimously chosen as the preference of the Democratic party for President of the United States. Mr. Cleveland's term of service in that office for the past four years seems to have been eminently satisfactory to the great majority of his party, and his nomination is not only a hearty endorsement of his policy, but a pledge of party support for re-election. Hon. Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, was selected as the candidate of the party for the Vice-Presidency. The unanimity with which these nominations were made is a prophecy that these two distinguished gentlemen will command the full strength of the party at the election next November. It strikes us as something wonderful how excited men can get when assembled in a political convention. Huzzaing and screaming and stamping and waving of banners and handkerchiefs seem to have converted the audience-room into a place where all noise was holding its frantic revels.

This extract from the platform, unanimously adopted, will give our readers an idea of what it contains:

The Democratic party of the United States, in National Convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives in the convention of 1884, and indorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to Congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the issue of tariff reductions, and also indorses the efforts of our Democratic representatives in Congress to secure a reduction in taxation.

"Gilderoy" Corrects Misstatements.

First. Dr. Abbey wrote these words: "Your correspondents' views do not seem to harmonize. Suppose you let me try my hand at it." If "trying his hand at it" meant other than at "harmonizing the views of your correspondents," it does not appear anywhere in his first article.

Second. Dr. Abbey knows of no theory called "the moral influence theory of the atonement." If the young student of theology will turn to Chapter V., paragraph 6, of the first volume of Summer's Systematic Theology, he will find a discussion of the "Moral-subjective Theory," which, in its main features, is exactly the "benevolence theory" of my venerable friend, Dr. Abbey.

Third. Abelard and Dr. Abbey are in the most perfect accord on this subject, using largely the same terms. Let the young men read and see for themselves.

Fourth. "Propitiation" and "satisfaction" are terms common in our theology. That Dr. Abbey does not like the word, "satisfaction," is no argument against its use by others. How about "propitiation," Doctor?

Fifth. The Doctor says: "Any kind of suffering entirely apart from animal life is unthinkable." Just so, Doctor; but was God apart from the animal Christ in that last supreme moment of his purely animal life? This is the point at issue. I insist that the agony and death of Christ was more than the agony and death of an animal—more than the death of a man. He was God-man in the garden and on the cross. Now, split a hair and show how he was God-man, and yet died only as a man.

Sixth. Dr. Abbey will not "undertake to construct a theory of the atonement," and yet he writes two columns giving his theory, which, in substance, is the "Abelardian Theory," now more than seven hundred years old. So he merely adopts this old theory.

GILDEROY.

SENATOBIA, Mississippi.

We have information that the corner stone of the first Methodist Church in Bunkie, La., will be laid June 24. Rev. J. M. Beard, of this city, will officiate. We offer our friends in Bunkie our congratulations for the start they have made. We notice the name of a lay-woman on the building committee, and that raises the suspicion that the work—well, for fear the other members of the committee may think something, we forbear. At any rate, Paul spoke of a woman who was a "succourer of many." Let the brethren everywhere study that appellation!

The Woman's Missionary organizations in this country and Great Britain report 19,486 auxiliaries, 5,193 bands, 999 missionaries in their various fields, 2,219 Bible readers and teachers, 2,303 schools and 59,318 pupils. Their aggregate increase for 1886 was $1,221,619 57, an increase on the preceding year of $68,947 96.

Notes.

In 1861 the Wesleyans had twelve large churches in London; now they have seventy-six large churches and ninety-seven smaller ones.

The new version gives a fine turn to a familiar passage: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

Law is an expression of life. When Moses had finished delivering the law to the Israelites he said to them: "Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life."

The North American Review, which contained Mr. Gladstone's reply to Ingersoll, has passed to the fifty-seventh edition. The Evangelist says, that means 30,000 copies over and above the regular edition to subscribers. It does seem, after all, that a part of the public can find interest in a religious discussion. It shows also that people on this side of the water are still willing to read after Mr. Gladstone.

The Advance (Congregationalist), speaking of the lengthening of the pastoral term among the Methodists, has this very significant sentence: "Doubtless, among the great majority of Congregational pastors a five-year term of assured pastorate stability would be hailed with deep satisfaction." The great point in the Methodist polity is that every traveling preacher is provided with a pastorate. Whatever else may not be, that is bound to be.

The popular weed is catching it on all sides. The Methodist Conference passed a resolution that no one should be consecrated a Bishop who indulged its use. Various other religious bodies have fulminated against it. And now comes Mr. Martin, of St. Landry, and gives notice in the Louisiana Legislature that he will introduce a bill to "prohibit the use of tobacco, either for smoking or chewing, by children under fifteen years of age, and to punish persons furnishing them with the weed." And so the ball rolls and gathers size and momentum in its rolling.

We have read in one of our exchanges a most remarkable instance of devotion to conscience. A mayor somewhere near Boston refused to sign a license to sell liquor, granted by the aldermen of his town. The case was brought into the courts, and the Supreme Judicial Court ordered him by a mandamus to sign the license. On the reception of this order, lo! and behold! he resigned his office and withdrew from the performance of its duties! Not many office-holders would do such a thing as that! The mayor's name is Robinson, and the place, Gloucester. "The unexpected is the thing that happens" sometimes.

Two notable men of English Methodism have retired from active service: Rev. William Arthur and Rev. Richard Roberts. Both are ex-presidents of the Wesleyan Conference. Mr. Arthur has been one of the most prominent Methodists of this age. Mr. Roberts has been a preacher for forty-three years, and in all that time has missed preaching only five Sundays; two of those five Sundays he was in countries, the language of which he could not speak; two others were days of bereavement in his own family, and one was a day when he himself was sick. He is said to have preached on an average 300 sermons a year and to have traveled 20,000 miles a year. He said recently, "For forty-six years I have always had a new sermon on hand."

The Mayor has, it appears, issued some stringent orders concerning the regulation of the concert saloons and the closing of gambling-houses. There is nothing new in these orders, and the public will be curious to see if the present administration can accomplish any more than was done by its predecessors.

The crying evil of the present day is the enacting of severe laws and the launching forth of violent denunciations against crimes and vice, all to no purpose. Congress, State Legislatures and Municipal Councils spend a great deal of time in doing that sort of thing, but the laws are never executed and nobody appears to expect that they will be. The laws are made to satisfy a popular clamor, and that being done, the matter rests there.

A real efficient remedy for any public evil would astonish the public. It would give the people a new sensation. They have learned to expect little and they are seldom disappointed. Reform is just as good a name for it as anything else. The result is usually the same.

The above, from the Daily Picayune, is too true. The wonder is that the "popular clamor" should be "satisfied" with the mere passage of a law and never demand its execution. Among men laws do not execute themselves. Let the "popular clamor" back up the mayor, and the laws will be enforced.

The Sunday Law.

The following is the text of the bill introduced into the General Assembly at Baton Rouge to repeal the Sunday Law:

Whereas, It is declared under Article 1 of the State Constitution that the only legitimate end of government is to protect citizens in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property, and that when it assumes other functions it is usurpation and oppression;

Whereas, The Sunday-closing Law (Act No. 18, of 1886) operates a hardship upon the citizens of municipal corporations of this State in prohibiting the sale of malt liquors or spirituous liquors at places excepted from the provisions, thus enforcing the principle of prohibition of alcoholic, vinous or malt liquors at places allowed to be kept open on that day in the course of their business, under the cloak of a pretended closing law, an object not embraced, expressed or contemplated in the title of the law and contrary to the spirit and institutions of the municipalities of this State and the citizens thereof;

Resolved, That it is the opinion and sense of this House that said Act No. 18 of 1886 is an unwarrantable interference with the individual rights secured by the Constitution of this State and the United States, and an arbitrary and illegal exercise of the police power of this State.

Resolved, That this said Act No. 18 of 1886 is unjust, illegal and unconstitutional in its discriminations, and there is no justification in law for the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic, vinous or malt liquors therein provided for at the places of public character where the same are now allowed to be kept open on Sunday, and that the said act infringes the rights of life, liberty and happiness of the citizen, and should be repealed or modified so as to suit the wants, habits and rights and privileges of the citizen.

The idea of the "repealers" is for the Legislature to act as a court, and by vote to decide and declare the unconstitutionality of its own acts is decidedly cool for these June days. We have faith to believe that the present legislators have more common sense than such action would display.

Revival at Holly Springs, Miss.

DEAR EDITOR: In midst of a glorious revival; three weeks old; public interest unabated; over one hundred conversions to date. Rev. J. W. Hodge, of Olive Branch, has been with us for ten days and has kindled the conflagration. Bro. Hodge, full of the Holy Ghost, and fire, has been with us from the start and says he is "in for the war." Rev. L. B. Estes, a layman of great power from Memphis, was with us last Sunday; also Bro. W. H. Evans, of same city. Bro. Evans delivered a telling address to men only in the afternoon, and preached at night. God bless you all, brethren. The Young Men's Christian Association of Memphis sent us out two efficient altar workers yesterday. Glorious the fight goes bravely on. Thirty-two accessions to our church to date.

Personals.

We call special attention to a short article, in this number, on "Those Vandalized Parsonages." The subject is well worth the attention of all the preachers and their families and all the Boards of Trustees. We refer all concerned to Luke xvi. 11.

The honorary degree of "D. D." has been conferred by Centenary College upon Rev. B. Carradine, pastor of Carondelet Street Church, in this city, and upon Rev. W. B. Murrah, vice-president of Whitworth College, Mississippi. These worthy honors have, in this instance, been worthily bestowed and will be worthily worn.

While we were away last week attending commencement exercises at Centenary College, the printer made us say "former" for "frowner." If he can hardly make out the editor's writing, how very careful our contributors ought to be to write in a plain, easy-to-be-read hand?

Bro. George H. Galloway, of the Columbia circuit, Mississippi Conference, writes as follows: "Parsonage nearly finished; $47 for self-denial fund and $61 for foreign missions; ten persons received into the church." That is the kind of news we love to publish abroad.

Rev. A. D. McVoy, president of East Mississippi Female College at Meridian, Miss., has been elected president of Mansfield Female College, Mansfield, La. What is Mississippi's loss is Louisiana's gain in this instance. We congratulate the Board of Managers at Mansfield on their success in securing Bro. McVoy's services for their college.

The Board of Trustees of Centenary College, La., last week, unanimously elected Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, of the Mississippi Conference, to the presidency of that college. We feel that we can congratulate the friends of Centenary on this election, and predict a continuous progress for the school from this time onward!

The Central Methodist favors a reunion of the two great branches of Methodism in this country. Speaking of the departed great men on both sides, it says: "Now let their sons draw up a plan of re-union universally acceptable."—NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. No, the Central Methodist has not expressed itself in favor of a re-union, but the language quoted is from a regular contributor to its pages.—Central Methodist.

Our clipping was made from what we took to be an editorial note on the fourth page of the Central. It had no mark to distinguish it as a contribution from outside.—We beg the Central's pardon!

Bishop Granbery will sail from Newport News for Brazil, June 23.

One other good, unsuspecting man has been undeceived. The editor of the Florida Christian Advocate says: "This editor has thought some men too good to get mad, but, alas! sometimes he has been mistaken."

Dr. John Matthews delivered the annual address at the Nashville College for Young Ladies, last week. The Nashville Advocate speaks of the address as "the most strikingly original and brilliant address delivered in Nashville in many years." We can easily believe that.

Judge B. D. Magruder, son of our old friend, Hon. W. H. N. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, has recently been re-elected Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois. The vote stood 9,557 to 78.

A private note from Bro. R. D. Norsworthy has this: "I visited on last Sunday the father of Miss Hughes, missionary to China. He lies low with sickness and most likely will rise no more. In behalf of the family and the absent one, we ask the prayers of the church. When asked by myself what message I should send his absent daughter, the old patriarch said: 'Tell her I am very sick, but my way is clear.'"

The dispatches announce the death of Rev. Thomas J. Hough, of Opelousas, La. He was for several years an earnest and active member of the Louisiana Conference, but was compelled by ill-health to retire from the itinerancy. For several years he has been living on his farm near Opelousas.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, the well-known Unitarian divine and author, died at his residence, near Boston, June 8.

Dom Pedro, the Emperor of Brazil, whose life has for some time been despaired of, is convalescent and his entire recovery speedily expected.

Rev. James Campbell, of the East Texas Conference, has been elected editor of the Texas Christian Advocate.

Rev. N. H. D. Wilson, Jr., son of the late Dr. N. H. D. Wilson, of the North Carolina Conference, has secured a position on the editorial staff of the Raleigh Christian Advocate.

The largest salary paid to any of the Bishops of the Episcopal Church is $10,000. New York pays that much to Bishop Potter and provides him a house.

The editor's wife and daughters are indebted to Miss Willie Galloway, of Brookhaven, for an invitation to attend the Whitworth Commencement. The invitation is the most beautiful of any we have seen.

A correspondent of Zion's Herald says:

Dr. Buckley managed to get the floor ninety-two times inside of thirty days, and kept it—nine hours, or about one-sixteenth the time it was in session; but he always had something to say, usually helped forward the business, was a favorite with outsiders, was feared by his opponents, petted by his friends, and though struck at in a score of ways, he was elected editor, without employing electioneering arts, by the largest vote by which he ever mounted the tripod.

Ex-Gov. S. D. McEnery has been appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of this State, to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Justice Todd.

The Southwestern Christian Advocate announces that Rev. J. D. Hammond, of St. Louis, has been elected to the presidency of Central College, Fayette, Mo. The pastorate loses by that election.

A private note from Dr. T. B. White, at Homer, La., reports a protracted meeting of several weeks' duration, during which the church enjoyed "a good and profitable time."

Items of Interest.

It is said that there are in Illinois 600,000 males between the ages of sixteen and forty, and 550,000 are outside the membership of the evangelical churches.

In twenty-two States and Territories of the Northwest, the Baptists have twenty-nine institutions of learning, with endowments aggregating $2,098,078. In these schools are 2,450 students; 377 of whom are preparing for the ministry.

The Topeka Capital says: "Kansas has saved nearly $12,000,000 since she turned her back on the whisky traffic."

The General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterians resolved to raise during the next year $850,000 for home missions.

Wesleyan Methodism has 15,244 members among the soldiers of the British army. It has also 333 missionaries and 2,000 paid agents and 3,859 unpaid agents in foreign fields, with 32,325 church members and 59,388 Sunday-school scholars in those fields.

Twenty per cent. of all the population of England is found in the Sunday-schools of the churches, and in Wales thirty per cent. is found there.

If the human family are equally divided, male and female, there are 500,000,000 women and girls who have never had a chance to hear the name of Jesus. In unbroken procession, one by one, they would, in passing your door, consume thirty successive years.

The missionary fields in Japan demand more men and more money. There are now 200 churches, with 15,000 members and 100 ordained Japanese ministers. The Congregational churches number 4,000 members.

Mr. W. McArthur called attention in the English House of Commons to the evils of the liquor traffic among the native races in the British dependencies, and moved that the government should take steps to suppress it. In a verbally modified form the resolution was agreed to.

Athens, Ga., has tried high license four months. The Journal, of that city, has compiled a table from the police records showing the comparative arrests during four months of local option and four months of license. This table shows an increase in four months of high license from 272 arrests to 818.

Up to date 310,000 sets of Gen. Grant's book have been sold, and Mrs. Grant has received $111,000 as her share.

Mr. Ruskin's profits on his books are said to be now about $20,000 a year.

In 1880 the population of Brooklyn was 566,689, but now reliable estimates place the population at 774,870. The increase in 1887 was 29,762.

The English-speaking races occupy one-fourth of the dry land of the earth and own nearly two-thirds of the tonnage of the ships.

The gross income of the British and Foreign Bible Society the past year was $1,251,000 and its expenditures $1,125,000.

The American Bible Society has been in existence seventy-two years, and in that time has issued 31,829,563 volumes, an average of 632,077 volumes a year.

The circulation of the publications of the American Tract Society amount to 5,000,000 copies a year, and the receipts of the past year exceed $126,000.

In Dr. Munhall's recent evangelistic service in St. Paul, Minn., nearly fourteen hundred persons made a public confession of Christ.

Dr. Mackenzie receives $15,000 a quarter for waiting on the Emperor of Germany.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

A WOMAN'S FACE; OR, A LAKELAND MYSTERY. By Florence Warden. D. Appleton & Co., New York. For sale by Exrich, 13 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, twenty-five cents.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. By Noah Brooks. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York; Exrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, $1 75.

This is a biography written expressly for young people. Noah Brooks is a very popular writer for young folks, and, no doubt, they will be much interested in this biography of Mr. Lincoln.

BERRY'S TRIUMPH: The Story of a Georgia Cracker. By George G. Smith, of the North Georgia Conference. J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Ga.

This is a bright, beautiful story for boys. It shows in a clear style how a plucky boy of the long ago won his way over many serious obstacles. The descriptions of "old-time Methodist meetings" are very fine, and it is just the book for a Methodist boy of to-day.

PERIODICALS.

—Pearl of Days. This is a monthly edited by Rev. J. H. Knowles, and published by W. B. Keetham, New York, in the interest of the Sabbath. Price, $1.

The Homiletic Magazine, for May, has theology, exposition, homilectics and practical homiletics. E. B. Treat, New York.

—The Century, for June, has many articles from the best writers in the land. This is a universal favorite, and needs no commendation from us. Century Company, Union Square, New York. Price, $4.

—The Sidereal Messenger is conducted by William W. Payne, Northfield, Minn. Price, $2.

—The American Magazine, for June, with a well-filled table of contents, comes early in the month. This is an illustrated monthly, containing much interesting matter. It has a fine engraving of Charles Dickens, Jr. The American Publishing Company, New York. Price, $3.

—The other day we received for the first time since we have been in this office the Sunday-School Quarterlies and Monthly Magazine, published by our House in Nashville. We are glad to know the "folks at the center" have thought of us at last, and we will notice the quality of these periodicals at some future time.

—Wide Awake, for June, is full of good reading and bright pictures, and only twenty cents a number. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers is in one preparation, and never fails to color the beard a beautiful brown or black of a natural shade.

Notice.

The Annual Convention of the Woman's Missionary Society, Louisiana Conference, will meet in Alexandria, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 22-24. Every auxiliary is earnestly solicited to send at least one representative. Delegates will at once inform Mrs. B. F. White, Alexandria, that arrangements may be made for their entertainment.

MRS. C. J. FOSTER,
Cor. Sec.

Teachers during vacation, farmers' sons when work is slack on the farm, and any others not fully and profitably employed, can learn something to their advantage by applying to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

Notice.

The collectors of the Jackson District Parsonage Fund will please bring or send what they have collected to the District Conference, so that the committee which was duly appointed may make their report. The District Conference convenes in Raymond, June 21.

T. W. COOPER

Now is the time to make up your mind as to where your son should attend school another year. Send him to a healthy and quiet place. Such is Hiwassee College, Tennessee. The postoffice there is "Hiwassee College."

Summer Tours.

Round-trip excursion tickets at low rates are now on sale via the Burlington Route, C., B. & Q. R. R., from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis, to Denver, Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Salt Lake City, Ogden, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and resorts West and Northwest. The "Burlington" is the only line running sleeping cars from Chicago to Denver without change. It is the only line by which you can go from Chicago to Denver and be but one night on the road. It is the picturesque line to St. Paul and Minneapolis. It runs daily "fast trains" to Kansas City, St. Joseph, Atchison, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Cheyenne and Denver. The Government Lands are located on its new lines in Nebraska. It is the best line by which to reach all principal land points in the West and Northwest. Tickets via the Burlington Route are for sale at all of connecting lines. Send 2c postage to Paul Morton, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent C., B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Ill., four cents for a copy of the Burlington Route Guide, or six cents for an illustrated book about Colorado and the Garden of the Gods.

Excursions to Chicago.

One fare only for the round trip to Chicago, via Queen and Crescent route, on June 15, 16 and 17. Tickets good until June 20, in which to return.

E. DANZIGER.—We call the attention of country merchants to the advertisement of E. Danziger in this issue of the ADVOCATE. A postal-card request for a catalogue will receive prompt attention. Extra inducements are offered during this and next month.

An Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

A contemporary has an article on "Wild Cat Insurance Companies." Who, for mercy's sake, wants to insure wild cats?

DANIEL PRATT COTTON GIN.—In this issue will be seen the advertisement of Messrs. J. H. Wolfe & Co., the agents of the celebrated Daniel Pratt Cotton Gin. Examine into the merits of this gin before purchasing elsewhere.

One man sees an opportunity, but doesn't seize it; while another seizes it as soon as he sees it. Pasar!

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa. 25c. a bottle.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

A FELLOW'S MOTHER.

BY M. E. SANGSTER.

"A fellow's mother," said Fred the wise,
With bl- rosy cheeks and his merry eyes,
"Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump, or a bruise, or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has lugs and strings,
Rags and buttons, and lots of things;
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care, not much, I mean,
If a fellow's knee is not always clean.
And if your trousers are torn at the knee
She can put in a patch that you'll never see.

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
But only sorry if you are bad;
And I tell you this, if you're only true,
She'll always forgive what'er you do.

"I'm sure of this," said Fred the wise,
With a manly look in his laughing eyes,
"I'll mind my mother, quick, every day,
A fellow's a baby that don't obey."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl twelve years old. My ma takes your nice paper. I go to Sunday school. Pa is superintendent; sister is my teacher. Mr. M. H. Moore is our preacher this year, and we all like him very much. Mr. N. J. Roberts was our preacher last year. We hated to give him up. I will ask a few questions: Which is the middle chapter and the least in the Bible? How many times does the word "Jehovah" occur in the Bible? I hope to see my letter in print. I wrote one some time ago, but failed to see it in print. I remain,

Your little friend,
MARY KING.
NORTH WILKINSON, Mississippi.

Dick's Signature.

Little Dick Howell was a boy who often surprised people. They called him "Lazy Dick," because he loved to get into sunny corners and think, and he was not always ready for work such as little fellows can do. But one day he said: "Pa, I want lots of money."

"Yes, Dick, I known other folks who felt so. Go to work and earn it."

"How?" asked Dick, who really was in earnest, for he longed for a little express cart.

"Oh! weed the garden," said Mr. Howell, growing absent-minded, as he often became. He remembered suddenly a business letter he must write, and so when Dick said:

"Will you give me a penny for every big weed?" his father said, "Yes."

Well, that night Dick amazed his father by presenting him with four hundred big weeds, and eagerly claimed four dollars. Mr. Howell never broke his word to a child; he said he did not think what he was promising, because he knew there were too many weeds in his garden for such a bargain; but he paid the money down, and Dick had the prettiest cart in town. Not long after his father said:

"Dick, you and I ought to have made a written contract about those weeds. If we had, I should not have agreed to such terms as I made. A man thinks when he signs his name. If I had been dishonorable, too, I could have said I never agreed to pay you a penny a weed, and you could not have proven that I did. You must learn to write your name before I do any more business by contract with you. Then we can each sign our names." And so Dick's father went on to tell him that solemn promises not to be broken were made in writing; and men who broke such promises were men whom nobody could trust.

Dick hated to read, and could not write a letter, but after that he used to climb up on the woodshed roof with his dear little sister Nelly. She did her best to teach him, and the first word he ever wrote was Dick, the next was Howell. Such funny business contracts as Dick made that year with his father, and such a pile of nickels as he earned! First, five cents for every week that he never forgot to shut a door and never slammed it; ten cents for picking over a barrel of apples; and so up to a dollar and a half in three months. Every time he signed a written contract to do what he agreed, he tried his very best to do it. How proudly he used to sign "Dick" with a big, inky flourish!

When Dick was twelve years old he was asked to sign a temperance pledge. He took it to his father, who talked it all over with him, and proposed that they sign it together—a contract that neither would break. Dick did not know then, or until years after, that his father was taking too much wine. They signed the pledge—"Richard Howell, Senior"; "Richard Howell, Junior." And then Dick's father told him to kneel by his knee, and, laying his hand on the boy's head, he prayed God to help them both to keep the promise they had made.

"You have signed your name a great many times, my boy, but never to a paper that meant so much as this."

"Oh! I don't ever want to drink, father. It is easy to promise, and I shall never go back on my word," said Dick, gayly.

Years went by. Dick grew up, and many and many a time he was tempted to take a glass of wine or beer. He never yielded, for he had signed his name and was on his honor. A few more years, and he had seen the curse of drunkenness, and was so glad of that boyish pledge—so glad of a father who made him feel the sacredness of a promise.—Temperance Banner.

Housekeeping Boys.

There were four boys in the family whose activity was exhausting. The mother was a wise little woman who believed that much ill-directed force might be utilized by a judicious division of labor, which would spare her nerves and increase the family comfort.

So the oldest boy washed dishes when he was just tall enough to wear his mother's apron tied around his neck. He swept, dusted, and even cooked a little. If storms or sickness kept them in the house they were given needles, thread and thimbles, and taught to replace buttons, and set at other slight repairing which they learned to do quite skillfully.

When the third brother (who is the hero of this story) had grown to fill the apron, the first was honorably released. His deft-handed successor, more ambitious or more teachable, became that rarest of artists—a good plain cook who was welcome at campings-out and other festivities of a Bohemian character. He was undaunted by biscuit and triumphant over steak. This "third brother" could also mend neatly, and even made his own neckties to afford himself more variety.

A time came when this training was worth a small salary. He found himself with an invalid wife, a boy of three years, and a hand so badly injured that he was obliged to change his employment. Something suited to his altered circumstances was not easily or quickly found—but the man who had washed dishes had other resources.

He did not, as well-meaning friends advised, give up his home and waste his substance on hired nurses and boarding-houses.

Through a whole discouraging year of waiting, he nursed the sick wife, cooked for the small family, and kept the house bright and tidy with an occasional day's help. When the right position was offered at last and the housekeeping fell again into natural channels it was evident that a man could assist his own family without loss of dignity and at the same time avoid the discomfort, and perhaps debt, caused by additional cares while the real care-taker was unable to meet them.

In a partnership each member of the firm should be able to perform, or at least direct, the other's work; and there is no reason why a man should not understand some of the details of housekeeping, or a woman learn to drive a nail straight and use a saw if necessary.—Louis Hall, in Wide Awake.

Whatever you may be sure of, be sure, at least, of this, that you are dreadfully like other people. Human nature has a much greater genius for sameness than for originality.—Dr. Spring.

An Appeal to Mothers.

America's greatest need to-day is what France's was in Napoleon's time—mothers. Mothers to form, and mold, and guide, and teach with unremitting vigilance, and while all this is being done, to watch as carefully lest thorns appear with the beautiful blossoms; lest evil thoughts, false principles, imperfect views, creep in as insiduously as the serpent approaches.

O ye mothers of our land, if everything else is neglected, if all other duties are slighted, I beseech you, in the name of all that is high and holy, do not neglect the character of your child! Consider what life means to us, what is before the young; and consider also what lack of mental and spiritual culture implies. I think that nothing in the way of culture and aspiration in after years can compensate for the loss of this during the formative period. Teach the boys and girls what life means; that this existence from the cradle to the grave is but the segment of a circle that shall encompass the eternities—that their characters here and their destinies hereafter have an infinite correlation; that their achievement must be commeasurate with their principles and purposes. Teach them that if they sow "wild oats" they must expect to reap the same, and nothing else; golden fruitage never comes from seeds of thistles.

God may sometimes work miracles in character-transformation, but he oftener works by means of fixed laws and through human agencies. And mothers are his special agents.

When we see a boy just verging into young manhood, with powers untrained, principles latent, faculties slumbering, his entire growth false, we do not reasonably expect that he will ever distinguish himself by brilliancy of intellect or deed, or marked nobility of character. Such a sequence would be a miracle; but while I do not deny that such have been and may be, I repeat that we have no right to expect it.

For the right formation of character there must be some centre of attraction around which the soul may describe its infinite circle, and this central power should be God.

Religion is a life, not a garment to be put on or off. It must be interwoven with the very fibres of the soul, and must be developed as the muscles of the body are developed by exercise. It must flow out to other lives in order to bless our own, and the child-heart should be taught the beauty of such a life. This should be the atmosphere through which all else should be viewed; all else should be subservient to its high demands.

O mothers, if you would but teach your children thus what a world of misery might be saved—what a flood of crime stayed!—Christian at Work.

HOW TO TAKE CARE OF SILVER.—To know how to take care of silver is a very important thing when one has any silver to take care of. A good deal of valuable ware is reduced to a condition where it is fit only to be melted by improper cleaning or careless handling. Silver articles, when not in use should be kept in a dry place, and if likely to remain a long time, the silver should be perfectly clean and the bags closely wrapped in stout paper. For daily care of silver it is best to use hot water, castile soap and a stiff brush and chamois leather. In using plate powder to restore the brilliancy one should always go to a reliable silversmith for a good article, as much of the powder indiscriminately sold is no better than a fine saw or a lot of quartz sand to wear off the surface of the metal. Gilding ought to be rubbed as little as possible, and silver, etched, decorated with colored alloys or oxydized, can be kept in condition by rubbing with a damp linen cloth with a very little plate powder.—Chicago Herald.

CHEAP IRRIGATION FOR A FAMILY GARDEN.—Take emptied fruit-cans, place the open end on a hot stove a short time to remove the top, punch about four small holes in the edge of the bottom, set them half their depth in the ground, and plant your seeds around them. Fill with water or liquid manure as often as need be. Cucumbers and the like will take a quart can full every day if does not rain. No baking of surface, no weed-seed, and speed in watering are some of the advantages.

PEARSON—WELLINGTON CARTER PEARSON, son of Simon H. and [illegible] Pearson, was born September [illegible], in St. Helena parish, La., and died May 19, 1888.

[illegible] is a sad case. He passed into [illegible] without a moment's warning: [illegible] way unknown to the friend [illegible]ing by, in an effort to stand the [illegible] friend, it fell and took off a part [illegible] heart, from which he fell dead. [illegible] was a member of the Methodist [illegible] Church, South, and had [illegible] for several years, and we trust [illegible] ready and waiting. He was a [illegible] boy, a dutiful son, a kind and [illegible]tionate husband and genial friend, [illegible] leaves a young wife and one child [illegible] mourn over what seems to us to be untimely death; but as the Bible [illegible] that "precious in the sight of the [illegible] is the death of his saints;" "therefore [illegible] it was "not without this notice," [illegible] the kind Father that feedeth the ravens which cry, comfort and [illegible] her and the little one and [illegible] a way for them in their bereavement, for some kind hand to [illegible] the widow and orphan and, with [illegible] many relatives, bring them to [illegible] together in heaven, where parting will be no more!

[illegible]NNINGTON.—On the morning [illegible] 18, 1888, we buried in the Hennington family cemetery, near Crystal Springs, Miss., the wife of our [illegible]ther, Tom. H. Hennington, now [illegible] of the empire of Brazil. Miss [illegible]rida Villa Lobo was born of [illegible] parents at Obidos, Brazil, [illegible] 1861; was married at Santarem, [illegible] July 17, 1883, to Mr. T. H. [illegible]gton, of Mississippi. But, alas! [illegible] worked more rapidly than he anticipated, and she died on the [illegible] at Milan, Tenn., May 17, 1888, [illegible] twenty-fourth year of her age. [illegible] reared in the Catholic faith, [illegible] access to the open Bible, which [illegible] studied carefully and prayerfully; [illegible] convinced her of the errors of her [illegible] and the truth of the claims [illegible] Protestantism. She died a firm [illegible] in the Protestant faith and at [illegible] with God. She leaves a husband and two little girls, aged two [illegible] four years, to mourn her death.

Sister Briscoe was married to [illegible] Briscoe, of Claiborne county, [illegible] October 1, 1863. She was left a [illegible]w in 1878. She joined the [illegible]dist Episcopal Church, South, [illegible] in life at fifteen years of age—[illegible] Pleasant Valley, Copiah county, [illegible] and remained a member of [illegible] same until released by death, [illegible] made a member of the [illegible] triumphant. The writer visited [illegible] several times during her last [illegible] and talked with her about the [illegible], and heard from her own lips [illegible] death long since had lost all of [illegible]. She was taken with consumption in May, 1886, which [illegible] upon her system for one year three months until August 26, when she fell on sleep at the [illegible] of her father, and was interred in the Pine Bluff Cemetery, [illegible] 28. WENTWORTH—MRS. LUCRETIA WENTWORTH, of Mendville, Miss., was born in March, 1822; died May 18, 1888. She was a little past sixty-six years of age. Sister Wentworth had been married but once; and that was in 1838; thus her married life, all told, was about fifty years. She had been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, here in Mendville, for thirty years. She was, therefore, well known in this place and had been for a long time. The general testimony, from relatives, friends and neighbors, was that she was a good Christian woman; not one who took prominent part in church affairs or in general matters, but one who lived a quiet, industrious life, constantly engaged in fulfilling the many duties of wife, mother, hostess, and neighbor. Sister Wentworth "kept silent in the churches and did not attempt to usurp authority over the man," but was adorned with "a meek and quiet spirit," which she carried with her at home and abroad. Many a heart and home has been brightened by the pleasant smile and kind words of our departed friend. Her kindness was not confined to "cheap and easy offices," but expressed itself in constant care and daily support of the orphan children thrown, by God's providence, under her roof. A large attendance of relatives and friends from this place and from quite a distance, expressed their sympathy and interest by following the body to the church and grave, by offerings of flowers and tears and other acts of Christian courtesy.

Her gentle voice is hushed, but not forever; her busy hands and feet are still, will never again be employed in errands of mercy and love in this world: but we firmly believe she has gone to heaven, where, if we are faithful, we shall meet again.

H. BRADFORD.

WILLIAMS—JOE F. WILLIAMS, son of Rev. J. L. and F. A. Williams, was born in Claiborne parish, La., August 11, 1872; died in Lincoln parish, La., December 25, 1887. He attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in his eighth year and was consistent all the time. One thing may be said of him, that can not be said of many church members of his age—he was never known to let an opportunity to partake of the sacrament pass without partaking. Being possessed of a clear, lively conscience, a naturally quick perception, and a never-failing moral courage, he was led into but few of the errors common to youth. He always shunned bad company and immoral conversation, while he delighted in the society of the good and in reading good books. He loved the Sabbath-school and was a regular attendant. He unhesitatingly chose to do right regardless of what others might say. When teased by his playmates for being so strict he always met their taunts with kindness. To his associates he was ever polite and obliging; to his teachers, obedient, respectful and helpful; to his brothers and sisters, kind and indulgent, and his devotion to his parents was something real and beautiful. During his last illness, though long and painful, he never uttered a murmur. When told that he might never get well, and was asked what he thought about death, he replied: "I would be sorry to leave pa and ma, little sister and brothers; but I am willing to die if it is the Lord's will." May his sorrowing parents take comfort from the fact that while they have one jewel less on earth they have one more in heaven!

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

MILLER—Died, at the home of his father, on Dry Creek, Calcasieu parish, La., May 27, 1888, WILLIAM JERRIE, son of L. A. and Margaret L. Miller. He was born November 29, 1872, and was, therefore, fifteen years, five months and twenty-eight days old. Jerrie had been always a delicate, frail boy, and suffered much during his short life. Yet in this brief pilgrimage, that was so suddenly and sadly brought to an end, he endeared himself to all around by his winning ways and kindly deeds. In our Sunday-school he took a deep interest, attending regularly and saying his lessons well. He was especially fond of reading. "The Story of the Bible." Before he became unconscious he said he "was not afraid to die." And so he passed away, on a bright Sabbath morning in May, yielding up meekly his pure young spirit to that same Jesus that he had read and studied about, and who has said, "It is not the will of your Father, which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish."

G. E. GREENE, Pastor.

CUNYNS—JOHN N. CUNYNS was born in Perry county, Ga., September 28, 1811; died at his home near Edwards, Miss., April 18, 1888. Bro. Cunyns was a steward in the Methodist Church. He loved his church, her doctrines and polity. His was a kind, generous and affectionate nature. Integrity, industry and hospitality were elements prominent in his character. In his home he possessed the magic power of making friends and strangers feel perfectly welcome and at ease. His hospitality was not assumed; but was the development of his noble and sympathetic nature. Christ was often welcomed at the beautiful home in Bethany, and the same spirit in our brother welcomed the itinerant pastor. His home was a Bethany for God's servants. Bro. Cunyns trusted in Christ, and we have the assurance that he has entered into that rest which awaits the people of God. As a citizen, Christian, husband, father and friend he will be sadly missed. "He giveth his beloved sleep."

HALF A CENTURY OF RAILWAY WORK.—Mr. Edward Woods, president of the English Institution of Civil Engineers, entered the service of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Company more than fifty years ago. At that time the so-called "fish-bellied" rails were used, weighing thirty-five pounds to the yard, and were laid in iron chairs supported on stone blocks. Such beds proved too rigid, and were laid with heavier rails. Then wooden sleepers, being more elastic, were adopted instead of stone, and a wooden wedge, instead of an iron one, for holding the rail in the chair. The steel sleepers now coming into vogue in place of wood are so formed as to give great elasticity, and avoid the blunder of a rigid road. The essential characteristics of the locomotives, though great improvements have been made in them, have not been changed; but a wonderful economy has been effected in the consumption of coal. A larger traffic is now performed with three thousand one hundred tons of coke per annum than was then carried on with twelve thousand six hundred tons. The traction power of engines has increased tivefold, and inclines which were at one time considered too severe to be worked by locomotives are now easily surmounted. The average of speed has been increased considerably, but the maximum not greatly. In all the accessory details of railway work, such as signaling, switching, braking, etc., there has been a great and important advance.—Popular Science.

A WONDERFUL PRINTING MACHINE.—The American Bookmaker describes a machine which takes in paper at one end and turns out completely bound books at the rate of 5,000 copies an hour. There are three great iron cylinders, segmental in form and each having a diameter of 6 feet, and weighing about 3 tons each. On one of these are the forms which do the printing in quadruple series, the other two acting solely as impression cylinders. In combination with the cylinder carrying the printing forms are ink fountains, form and distributing rollers, while in combination with the impression cylinders are novel appliances for handling (automatically), revising, assembling, folding, covering and delivering the complete books. This remarkable contrivance requires 8 tons of paper, with a corresponding amount of printing ink, and this it turns into books in a single day, and it requires 12 box-cars, of 30,000 lb. capacity each, to transfer the output for a single week. This machine is built in Philadelphia by its inventor and patentee, at whose establishment the visitor may see in daily and nightly operation no less than six of these mammoth machines turning with surprising rapidity and regularity their miles of paper into printed matter ready for the perusal of the reader.—New York Proof Sheet.

SIX HUNDRED SHOTS A MINUTE.—The Maxim machine-gun has a capacity for firing six hundred rounds a minute, or at least three times greater than that of any other machine gun. It has only a single barrel, which, when the shot is fired, recoils a distance of three-quarters of an inch on the other parts of the gun. This recoil sets moving the machinery which automatically keeps up a continuous firing at the extraordinary rate of ten rounds a second. Each recoil of the barrel has, therefore, to perform the necessary functions of extracting and ejecting the empty cartridge, of bringing up the next full one and placing it in its proper position in the barrel, of cocking the hammer, and pulling the trigger. The barrel is cooled with a water-jacket, is adjustable in every direction, and has a maximum range of eighteen hundred yards. The gun weighs only one hundred and six pounds; it can be taken apart, folded up, and put together again. The latter operation being possible in ten seconds.—Popular Science.

Conformity to the will of God is the only certain condition of our best well-being. It is sometimes hard for us so to conform ourselves in the pressure of surrounding circumstances; but in the end God will cause all things to work for good to those who have fearlessly sought to do and suffer his will, even at the expense of what has seemed to be for their advantage.—Words and Weapons.

God on the Market.

There are vast accumulations of money in the financial centers of the land to-day. Capitalists East and West are seeking for safe investments, and the papers are filled with the advertisements of loan agents and investment companies. Amid this anxiety of some to place their wealth where it will be safe and yield a good percentage, and this persistency of others in commending the bonds or stocks which they represent, comes adown the ages the voice of God, saying: "Trust your gold and silver with me. I, too, am in the market. I offer you liberal dividends and ample security. Accept the drafts which the poor and needy present in my name, and I will honor them in the great day of reckoning. Give to my cause on the earth, and you will find treasure laid up in heaven." Thus the appeal of true benevolence, of almsgiving in the gospel meaning of the word, is to our own highest interest; not to the low and narrow selfishness which looks only to the things of earth and of the hour, but to that self-love which seeks our own highest good, our happiness for the present and the future.

The time has fully come to put this matter, of what we ignorantly or meanly call our charities, on its true basis. God is not a beggar. His friends are not beggars. His cause comes not with beggarly appeals to our pity. No, no. God is a great king, engaged in the grandest enterprise in the history of the ages. He is leading his sacramental host to the conquest of the world. But, like the kings of the earth, he proposes to negotiate a loan. He puts his bonds on the market. He affords us the privilege of taking as many as we can pay for. He pledges as security for these bonds his Word, which has never been forfeited, and all the riches of his material universe. The wealth of this nominally Christian nation is increasing with unprecedented rapidity. It all comes from the hand of God. He gives it to us in trust. He wants us to use it wisely—to use it for him and also for ourselves. He wants us to trust him as he trusts us. We are his stewards, and yet he will make us full owners if we take his advice in regard to our investments. The faithful servant who doubled the ten pounds that his Lord entrusted him with was made ruler over ten cities. So we may multiply our wealth an hundred-fold if we put it in the bank of faith—if we lend it to the Lord. He will pay it back again with compound interest.—Interior.

The peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation of Hood's Sarsaparilla makes this medicine different from others, and superior to them all in actual curative power. Sold by all druggists. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

The young need religion to save them from false and misleading views of life. If they think that the low delights of earth can yield a full supply of joy to satisfy the soul made in God's image, they must be doomed to painful disappointment. If they imagine that yielding to the frivolous and dissipating follies of the world will do them no harm, they shall find, in due time, that all departures from the true and right way weaken the moral energy of the soul and benumb the conscience. Nothing but the joy of God's salvation can lift the young above the power of the sinful pleasures of an ungodly world. Nothing but the spiritual strength, which comes from fixed convictions of truth and duty and living communion with God, can enable the young man to cleanse his way and conquer the temptations that assail him. Nothing but the light of the truth of God received into the understanding by faith can safely guide the inexperienced feet through the dangers to which the young are exposed.—Christian Guardian.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GET IT! If you have a Mother, Father, Brother, Sister, Son or Daughter at Home or Abroad, on whom you would bestow a GIFT that would at all times prove a WELCOME GUEST of rare worth and lasting benefit, GET IT!!

The Detroit Christian Advocate says: We scarcely can tell which is most attractive about this volume, its par-excellent title, its 400 literary gems on the themes named, its brilliant array of distinguished writers, or its beautiful mechanical execution. It is a splendid book every way. A copy should be in every home, where every mother and every mother's friend can have access to it.

Prices as above, Post-paid to Subscribers.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5.

WITH STANDARD SELECTIONS,

BY DRS P. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN AND GEO. F. STEBBINS.

224 Hymns as Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings.

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single Volumes, viz:

Price per 10, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:

Music Edition, Board Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 5 00
" " Board Covers..... 10 00
Million Page Board Covers..... 10 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

☞ Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Cleveland and Thurman were nominated for President and Vice-President by the National Democratic Convention, which met in St. Louis, last week. Both nominations were unanimous. There was no opposition to Cleveland; Thurman being selected on first ballot. The platform of 1884 was reaffirmed.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, of Boston, Mass., the well-known Unitarian divine, died June 8.

Commencement day exercises were held at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, June 8. Gov. Knott, of Kentucky, delivered the oration filled with sound advice to the cadets, and Secretary of the Navy Whitney presented the diplomas.

The strike of the brewers' employees was declared off, June 8. It is now definitely settled that the employers may hire anybody they please.

The Annual Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana met in Baton Rouge on the eighth instant.

Four steamships landed at Castle Garden, on the eighth instant, 2,521 emigrants.

The President has approved the act of Congress providing that pensions heretofore or hereafter granted to widows of soldiers of the war of the rebellion shall commence at the date of the death of their husbands.

Norway, Mich., was almost destroyed by fire on June 9. Thirty buildings were swept away, including the main business section.

Walt Whitman, the poet, is dangerously ill at his home in Camden.

A meeting to organize a National Convention of Colored Young Men's Christian Associations of America was held in Louisville, Ky., June 10.

The "General Terry," with 500 men of the Fifth Regiment on board, bound for Texas, sunk near Omaha, Neb., on the tenth instant. All the passengers reached the shore in safety, but all the clothes and household goods of the officers and men and their wives went down. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

The Senate, in executive session, June 11, confirmed the nomination of ex-Gov. S. D. McEnery to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of Louisiana for the term of twelve years, vice R. B. Todd, whose term has expired.

Prince Roland Napoleon Bonaparte called at the White House, on the eleventh instant, and paid his respects to the President.

The Annual Convention of the International Typographical Union assembled in Kansas City, Mo., June 11.

FOREIGN.

Destructive forest fires were raging on the south shore of Conception Bay, Newfoundland on June 7. Many families have been burned out, and several persons burned to death.

The destruction caused by a storm on June 7, at Ottawa was terrible and widespread. Enormous damage was done to the crops.

King Leopold opened the International Exhibition, at Brussels, on the seventh instant.

The London Times says Bismarck in a recent audience told Emperor Frederick the Cabinet would not resign even if his majesty decided against the quinquennial bill.

In the Chamber of Deputies M. De Lounay questioned the government regarding the recent municipal elections, which he asserted had been conducted improperly and influenced by illegal acts of local tyranny.

Mr. Parnell has invited his followers to dinner to meet their colleagues imprisoned under the coercion act.

The Chamber of Deputies, Italy, agreed to abolish capital punishment.

It is said negotiations are on foot between France and Germany to lessen as much as possible the harrassing of the German passport edict.

Herr Von Puttkamer, vice-president of the Prussian Ministerial Council and Prussian Minister of the Interior, has resigned.

At the sitting of the council general of the Seine, M. Vallant gave notice that he would introduce a resolution in favor of the organization of the people of France into a national standing army, with the object of counteracting the efforts of the monarchical coalition.

The Remarkable Cures

Which have been effected by Hood's Sarsaparilla are sufficient proof that this medicine does possess peculiar curative power. In the severest cases of scrofula or salt rheum, when other preparations had been powerless, the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla has brought about the happiest results. The case of Miss Sarah C. Whittier, of Lowell, Mass., who suffered terribly from scrofulous sores; that of Charles A. Roberts, of East Wilson, N. Y., who had thirteen abscesses on his face and neck; that of Willie Duff, of Walpole, Mass., who had hip disease and scrofula so bad that physicians said he could not recover, are a few of the many instances in which wonderful cures were effected by this medicine.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

The fare over the following roads—Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, and Mobile and Ohio—will be 1¾ cents per mile.

For further information address W. J. Hearin, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Price, keeper, Illoni, Miss.

W. J. HEARIN, Pres.
J. G. GRANT, Cor. Sec.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888, on Topisaw Camp Ground, will commence on the second Friday (tenth) of August, 1888, and continue several days. The camp ground is delightfully situated on Topisaw Creek, nine miles east of Summit, Pike county, Miss. The public, and especially ministers of our denomination, are invited to attend.

H. H. FALORE, Pres.
W. H. FELORE, Sec.

The Providence Camp Meeting will begin July 26. All ministers are cordially invited to attend. Conveyance will be furnished from and to Hazlehurst every day during the meeting free of charge to ministers.

W. L. LINFIELD, P. C.

The established rule for thirteen years of Bennington Camp Meeting is to begin on Thursday before the full moon in August of each year. This year the time is the sixteenth of August and will continue one week. The public, and especially ministers, are invited to attend.

GO OR SEND.

BY K. L. R.

Hark! a sound of calling, calling,
From a land beyond the sea;
'Tis a cry from out the darkness
That is borne to you and me:
Come, O come, dispel the blackness,
Christ, the light, we long to see.

See, the light is breaking, breaking,
Soon will come the perfect day;
Hasten now to be a herald
Of the first, bright, royal ray;
Prove thyself a worthy subject
Of thy King, the Lord of day.

Now the time for going, sending,
Now the door is open wide.
Will you dare refuse Christ's bidding?
He will be your shield and guide.
"Go and preach," or send the tidings;
God will bless, whate'er betide.

"Turn on the Light!"—Part II.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

Regretting the necessity which compels me to bring the hardships, toils, privations and sorrows of the worthy people whose names are found upon our roll of claimants, before even an interested and concerned class of readers, I proceed with the difficult task of presenting their several necessities in connection with the action of the Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference in each case. Our information may have been incorrect. If anybody detects any inaccuracies, I hope they will write to me personally, and not rush into print, and thereby jeopardize the interests of these worthy claimants. It is not a personal matter of mine, and I do not want anybody to try to make it personal. But, to continue the list:

24. A widow, thrifty, industrious, and a good manager. Aided by two daughters, she is striving to educate her two youngest sons. Her eldest son is on trial in the Conference. Her husband was one of our grandest preachers. She owns a home. Allowance, $87 60.

25. Another widow whose husband came to us from the Methodist Protestants in 1870. Although her need was great, her allowance could only be $87 60.

26. Another widow. Her husband was in the Conference only a few years. She owns a good farm and a comfortable home, and is cared for by her son-in-law. She needed a little help, and got $21 90.

27. A young widow, whose gifted husband was probably the most promising young preacher in our Conference at the time of his sudden death. Their baby girl came after his death. The widow and baby make their home with relatives of limited means. Allowance, $58 40.

28. Five orphan children, scattered here and there; both parents dead. Allowance, only $131 40 for all.

29. A widow, whose husband died in the harness and in poverty. A little home was bought by her with money paid by the Conference Brotherhood. I do not recollect the number of children. Allowance, $131 40.

30. A widow, needing more help than some, but not so much as others, was allowed $87 60.

31. A thrifty widow, striving to make a living for herself and children by keeping a boarding-house. Not needing much help now, she was allowed $43 80.

32. A widow, old and infirm: her good husband "gone on before:" her daughters and her children rise up to call her blessed: a small farm and a little home; much poverty cheerfully borne "for Christ's sake." Allowance, $131 40. Why not $300?

33. A young widow, whose young husband died with the flush of victory on his brow, leaving his wife and tender babe to the care of the church. Their home is with her father. Allowance, $43 80.

34. Another veteran, whose head has been whitened by many winters, yet so full of zeal is he that he is unconscious of the infirmities apparent to others; not caring to die except with harness on; counting the souls won to Christ by hundreds; poor and needing much help, that he may have a home in his old age. Allowance, $131 40. O, that it could have been $500!

35. A man not quite old enough to be superannuated, yet forced by circumstances to accept that relationship, after forty years' faithful labor, and leading over 3,300 souls to Christ; now poor and needy, feeling himself neglected, but striving to make a living as best he can for himself and wife. Allowance, $87 60.

36. Another old veteran, not now in need, having, by thrift and economy, laid by a little in store for the evening time of life, expecting just a little in recognition of past services, and to help him "make both ends meet." Allowance, $30.

37. Another old veteran, whose whole life has been consecrated to God, now trying to make a living for himself and loved ones by teaching a country school; unable longer to itinerate. Allowance, $87 60—not near so much as was actually needed.

38. A widow, most deserving of aid: properly a claimant on the North Mississippi Conference, but rejected by those brethren. Her claim was generously allowed by a large majority vote of our Conference, and her name ordered to be placed on our roll. For her the members of Conference voluntarily contributed $31. She will need more this year.

To this long list have been added the following names by action of the last Conference and the providence of God:

39. A widow, who has a home and is trying to make a living by doing sewing at starvation prices; health not good. A daughter is teaching school for a small salary. I do not know the number in the family.

40. An old man, for many years active and useful: then for twelve years or more supernumerary: now, unable to work or to preach because of age and mental and physical disease, he is placed among the superannuates. He has probably a home.

41. An old man, who preaches wherever he can, who has always dug more of his living out of the ground than the churches served by him have ever paid. Owns a little farm; has a son in the ministry; has always been faithful.

42. A widow, who has a son six years old; owns a home and a farm, from which she gets a little rent. For fifty-one years her husband was a faithful itinerant in Missouri and Mississippi Conferences; died at his post, committing his wife and precious boy to the care of the church.

Now, brethren, take these facts in connection with those in "Figures and Facts" and "At the Door," and see if we do not need to double our assessments. With one more article, "An Appeal," I shall have done with the subject, unless more shall be called for.

Letter from China.

Buffington Institute is doing well this term. Some seventy pupils have enrolled for the session. Of these, twenty are studying English, and pay board and tuition. The rest of the school are pursuing the regular course of study in Chinese. All are making very good progress. Those in the English school are studying the English language, and arithmetic in Chinese. The decision to admit mathematics, astronomy, etc., to the government examinations has led many of the young men of the country to the study of mathematics, in the hope that they can, by this means, obtain a degree easier and sooner than they could otherwise. Naturally, very few of them have a clear idea of what is included in the term suan-hioh—mathematics. The most of them think that arithmetic is about all there is of it. But when they are told that after arithmetic comes algebra, geometry and trigonometry, which must all be mastered before they can be said to have laid the foundation of mathematics, they become somewhat discouraged, and many of them think it useless to make a beginning. But they will, no doubt, become reconciled to the fact, ere long, that it takes hard work, and plenty of it, to get foreign learning, just as it does to get Chinese learning. It takes fifteen or twenty years for a Chinaman to get an education in his own language, and they will soon learn that while foreign learning is, in some respects, easier to get than Chinese, yet it can not all be obtained in a few months.

The pupils in the Chinese department are doing well. The most advanced class is just entering on the study of surveying. I have recently obtained an excellent theodolite for the use of the class in surveying. The second class is about through algebra, and the third is just entering upon that study. The other branches of the course are progressing proportionately. A healthy religious tone pervades the school. Two of the boys were received into the church at the last quarterly meeting, and another at the previous quarterly meeting. Several others are candidates for church membership. One of the boys, who was formerly a pupil in Buffington Institute, and is now doing fine work teaching a day-school in Suchow, has expressed his desire to obtain license to preach, having determined to give his life to the work of preaching the gospel to his fellow-countrymen. He will probably receive license at our next quarterly meeting.

Oh, that the Lord would call many of these boys to the great work of preaching the gospel! The greatest work for Buffington Institute is to educate and train men for helpers in mission work, and it will only partially accomplish the object for which it is being sustained, if a considerable number of the pupils that go forth from the institute do not become helpers in mission work in some direct way. I ask the earnest prayers of all who read these lines that the Master would call many of these young men to the direct work of preaching the gospel.

I have just finished translating the Discipline into Chinese. It will be put to press in a week or two, and I hope to have it out in time for use at our next Annual Conference. I have been about six months getting the work done—working at it as much of the time as my duties in the Institute would allow. I have found that it required more time than I at first anticipated. To find the proper words for legal terms, and the best forms of expression for much of the peculiar phraseology of the Discipline, was a rather more difficult work than one, who has not tried it, would suppose. Still, I have enjoyed the work of translating it, and, though I am conscious of not a few imperfections in the translation, yet I hope and pray that it may be of great benefit to our little church in China. I have derived considerable assistance in this work from the Methodist Episcopal Church Discipline, translated into Chinese and published in Fuchow. Dr. J. W. Lambuth had also translated a part of our Discipline into Chinese several years ago, which we have been using up to this time. I was not aware, before translating the Discipline, to what an extent the two Methodisms have drifted apart. While, of course, the great fundamental principles of doctrine and church government remain substantially the same, yet in numerous details important differences exist. If organic union were to be seriously proposed, it would be a work of no small magnitude to rearrange the two forms of government so as to produce one harmonious whole.

The breach in the Yellow river, last September, caused much suffering and loss of life by the sudden overflow of a large district of country. But the Chinese government seems to have taken hold of the matter with a strong hand. They have taken good care of the people who were sufferers from the overflow, and are working vigorously to close the breach in the bank of the river. Some apprehensions have been felt lest the spring freshets should arrive before the breach could be mended. But the last accounts from the scene of operations indicate that the work is progressing rapidly, and hopes are entertained that it will be finished before the freshets come. Thoroughly qualified civil engineers are needed to cope with such a work as this, and, no doubt, Buffington Institute will, like the many other mission schools, do an important work toward supplying the want of the country for such men.

The Annual Meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Louisiana.

The sixth Annual Convention of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union met in Baton Rouge on June 8, and spent two days in the transaction of business. Forty delegates were in attendance from different parts of the State, and sixty-four unions reported in active operation. Seven ministers from different denominations lent their attention, sympathy and services to the good cause. The annual election for officers resulted in the unanimous reinstallation of Mrs. Caroline E. Merrick as president. Mrs. Lyons was elected recording secretary; Mrs. B. F. White, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Hardin re-elected treasurer.

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, so long corresponding secretary of the State, was compelled to resign the position because of her increasing labor as national organizer, and State superintendent of temperance instruction. No woman in the organization is so well known or better beloved. Her active canvass and persistent toil has rallied a legion of white-ribboned devotees to the new service of God and home and native land.

Meetings were held in the Methodist Church, which was beautifully decorated with choice pot plants, fresh flowers and emblems of the order, all enshrining the portrait of America's eloquent and best beloved apostle of peace and good-will—the Christian leader of 200,000 women—Frances E. Willard.

The best homes in the town opened hospitable doors and kind hearts to the generous entertainment of all delegates and visiting members of the order, and a delightful season of fraternal joy prevailed.

Mrs. Mary Hunt, national superintendent of temperance education, from Washington, D. C., added, by her presence, ready fluency and large experience, to the dignity and importance of the meetings.

The president's annual address, delivered by Mrs. Merrick, was forceful and fine, like all other efforts of her pen. The women of Louisiana owe very much to the conception of her large brain and the sympathy of her tender, motherly heart. Ill health can not restrain the spiritual activities that reach out to benefit her kind, although so much restricting her movements.

The reports of the superintendents of all departments of the service were very able. Bright thoughts and thrilling sentiment broidered all accounts of the work which so marches on in the approving light of God's smile.

The most considerable object of solicitude to the organization is the Education Bill, now pending before this General Assembly, which provides for the instruction in public schools of physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the effects of alcohol on the system. Mrs. Hunt came to aid the passage of this important bill, and the Joint Committee of the House and Senate on Education gave to her and other ladies most respectful audience. The series of graded text-books, prepared under the wise supervision of the order, were submitted for examination, and all questions answered by her that explains the advantageous operation of the provisions of the law in so many other States.

The convention sermon was preached on Sabbath last by Rev. B. F. Patterson, of Baton Rouge, to a very large congregation, and his text, "Now the ax is laid to the root of the tree," prefaced a splendid embodiment of reason, of religion, of statistics and rhetoric. All went away filled with the righteousness of the cause.

Night meetings were gemmed with elocution and music. The dialect recitations of Miss Prewit were remarkably rendered and tremendously enjoyed. Miss Lucy Bates exercised the magic of her pure, rare notes, that always enchant audiences.

The subscriptions to the Union Signal were largely increased at this convention, and efforts were made to afford every legislator a chance to have the paper for his family, himself, or friends. They were gracious and generous, and rolled up a long list. Men of Louisiana mean well, and need the sustained persistent efforts of their women in this cause, to which they more kindly listen every day.

Miss Mattie Cole, of New Orleans, deserves special mention for her work among the children of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She led a children's meeting Sabbath evening, and revealed a wonderful talent to interest and instruct them with inimitable anecdotes of dainty, moral pith and sympathetic sweetness.

Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy was untiring in every attention and help and courtesy to the noble sisterhood. His address of welcome established, at the opening of the convention, his claim to kinship with the order.

The appointed place for meeting next year is Alexandria, and Baton Rouge will hope to welcome, at some time not far distant, a yet larger body of home-guard Christians.

ANITA.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana.

From Mansfield, La.

MR. EDITOR: It may not be amiss to give you a few items about these commencement exercises in advance of a regular report. Rev. Dr. Scruggs, of Shreveport, is on hand; preached two sermons yesterday, with great acceptability, to large and appreciative audiences. At four P. M. he made an appropiate address to the Juvenile Missionary Society. His sermon in the morning to the graduating class was timely and opportune. After emphasizing the great importance of intellectual development, until one might have thought it the most important thing of all others to be gained in order to elevate society to a higher plane of civilization and honor, he insisted, with great earnestness and emotion, that intellectual development, without moral reconstruction and religious culture, is absolutely unavailing, and is the means of a greater degree of corruption and degradation. He also insisted that the church school, under the control of religious teachers and a religious government, is responsible for the proper development of the moral and religious culture of the young.

Dr. F. M. Grace, with these exercises, closed a term of five years' connection with Mansfield Female College as president.

Statistics show that this college has been operated thirty-three years, and has graduated one hundred and sixty-eight pupils. Dr. H. C. Thweatt, its founder and first president, was in charge of it five years, and had, during his term, twenty-six graduates—an average of five a year. Rev. C. B. Stuart was president fourteen years, and made fifty-seven graduates—an average of four a year. Rev. Thomas Armstrong was president six years, and made twenty-eight graduates—an average of four a year. Rev. J. Lane Borden was president three years, and had fifteen graduates—an average of five a year. Dr. F. M. Grace has been president five years; has had forty-two graduates—an average of eight a year.

From the above it will appear that Mansfield Female College, now numbered with the older institutions of the country, has had a gradual growth from the beginning, and that it has accomplished a great and good work. To-day it is worthy the patronage and commendation of all our people.

Rev. A. D. McVoy, of Meridian, Miss., has been elected by the Board of Managers successor to Dr. Grace as president of the college. He comes highly recommended, and with a large experience as an educator in the first-class female colleges.

A WORD TO THE RICH.—One of the happiest instances of ministerial skill and fidelity is recorded in the memoir of Rev. Thomas Brainard, D. D., for thirty years a pastor in Philadelphia. At a meeting of leading members of three city churches, called to raise money for an important new enterprise, there was little response in the way of subscriptions, though all applauded the object. Dr. Brainard rose, faced the rich men, and thus addressed them:

"Brethren, the Lord has denied to you the privilege of exercising many of the most precious graces of the Christian character, which, in his infinite mercy, he has vouchsafed to the rest of us. You never knew what it was to repose absolute, unassisted faith in God for the things of this world. You never had to go to sleep at night without knowing where your breakfast was to come from. You never had a sick child wasting away for the want of costly luxuries. You never had to deny yourself the gratification of the impulses of pity, when a sufferer came to your door. You never had to endure the humiliation of being dunned for an honest debt without knowing whether you could ever pay it. All these unspeakable advantages in developing Christian character an inscrutable Providence has taken from you and bestowed upon us poor men. The one solitary grace of the Christian life which has been denied to us and given to you is, the grace of liberality, and if you don't exercise that, the Lord have mercy on your souls!"

That bold appeal did the work. A smile crept over the face of one of the rich men, he drew to him the subscription paper, put down $10,000, others followed his example, and this meeting accomplished what all the preceding meetings for consultation had failed to do.—Dr. A. T. Pierson, in N. Y. Observer.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ISRAEL.

Exodus xxiv. 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT: I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. Heb. viii. 10.

TIME.—B. C. 1491, in the early summer.

PLACE.—Mt. Sinai. Has Safsafeh, with the [illegible]

INTRODUCTION.

The Old Testament lessons for last year closed with the giving of the law on Mt. Sinai. Immediately after the proclamation of the great Decalogue, Moses "drew near to the thick darkness where God was," and received from him what some have called the moral Decalogue—seven groups of the ten precepts each, expansions of seven of the "ten words," and forming the fundamental polity of the commonwealth of Israel. These "judgments" are recorded in Exodus, chapters xxi, xxii and xxiii. At the close of the interview Moses was bidden to announce to the people these supplementary regulations, which, with "ten words," were to form the basis of a national covenant, to be formally accepted and ratified on the part of the people.

1. He said unto Moses, Come up unto the Lord—That is, after thou shalt have previously gone down, and propounded to them the foregoing laws, obtained their answer, and sprinkled the blood, etc., as related from verse three to verse nine. Thou ... Aaron ... Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy ... elders—Moses and Aaron ascend as the prophet and priest of God; Nadab and Abihu, as the elder sons of Aaron, henceforth to be associated with him in the priesthood; the seventy elders as the representative heads of the people. Worship ye afar off—We may search from end to end of the legal ritual, and not find those two precious words, "draw nigh." Ah! no; such words could never be heard from the top of Sinai, nor from amid the shadows of the law. The words, "afar off," are as characteristic of the law as "draw nigh" are of the gospel. Under the law the work was never done which could entitle the sinner to draw nigh.

2. Moses alone shall come near the Lord—Not without Joshua his minister, as some conceive from verse thirteen, though even there Moses seems to ascend into the mount without Joshua. Neither shall the people go up—The people remained below at the base of the mountain; the elders advanced upward, perhaps half-way toward the summit; but Moses himself ascended quite to the top of the mount, and entered into the dark cloud which rested upon it. For the law was to be given "by the hand of a mediator."

3. Moses ... told the people—All the legislation, with the "seven decades of regulations," contained in the preceding four chapters and afterward written in the Book of Covenant. All the people ... with one voice—The unanimity with which the Israelites here pledge themselves to the divine worship partakes of the sublime, and we willingly forget for a moment how little they remained faithful to this promise, even in the time immediately following. Said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do—This they so readily and rashly promise, because they were not sensible of their own weakness, and because they did not understand the comprehensiveness and spirituality and strictness of God's law, but thought it consisted only in the external performances and abstinences expressed.

4. Moses wrote all the words—It must have occupied a considerable part of the day, and, perhaps, of the night also. Builded an altar under the hill—This is the first altar erected in compliance with the precept in chapter xx. 24. The altar indicates the presence of God in covenant with his people. Twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes—The twelve pillars, placed probably in a circle round the altar, indicate the presence of the twelve tribes in this great organization of the covenant. Accordingly we have here the first outward representation of the church. Here we have the idea of the tabernacle, afterward more fully developed in the temple, and realized spiritually in the church of Christ, the tabernacle or temple of the New Testament.

5. Sent young men—Moses was on this occasion performing the office of a priest, the family of Aaron not being yet consecrated, and he employed young men whose strength and skill qualified them to slaughter and prepare the sacrifices. The law did not regard these acts as necessarily belonging to the priests, and it is probable that they were regarded in the same way in earlier times, when the sacerdotal character belonged especially to the first-born sons. Which offered burnt-offerings ... peace-offerings of oxen—The burnt-offerings belonged more exclusively to the altar, while the peace-offerings were the people's. The two together represented the mutual relations of altars and pillars, of God and his people; the burnt-offerings being the surrender of the people to God, the peace-offerings symbolizing the bestowal of the divine blessing upon the people.

6. Moses took half of the blood ... in basons—To be reserved for sprinkling the people as the last act of this ritual of ratification. Half ... he sprinkled on the altar—As Moses here says the altar was sprinkled, but makes no mention of the book, and as Paul speaks of the book being sprinkled, but says nothing of the altar, the presumption is that the book was laid upon the altar, and thus the account of both writers is true. This sprinkling of the blood was a symbolical act, implying that the party which should violate the covenant should have his blood poured out in like manner. The altar is the meeting-place between God and his people, as is declared in the first part of the book of the covenant itself. But God and the sinner can not meet except on the ground of atonement, and so the altar must be sprinkled with the atoning blood of the sacrifice. As soon as the altar is sprinkled with the atoning blood, the people may meet with God, and receive his blessing there.

7. He took the book of the covenant, and read—He had simply reported "the judgments" before; now, that they may have a clear perception of what they are binding themselves to do, he solemnly reads the covenant. All ... will we do, and be obedient—This unanimous consent, after a second deliberate hearing, is the formal acceptance of the covenant.

8. Sprinkled it on the people—As the sprinklings and purifyings under the law were usually performed with water, scarlet wool, and hyssop, such also, as we learn from the apostle, was the case in the present instance. Blood of the covenant—The two halves of the blood are to be regarded as one blood, which was first of all sprinkled upon the altar and then upon the people. In the blood sprinkled upon the altar the natural life of the people was given up to God, as a life that has passed through death, to be pervaded by his grace; and then through the sprinkling upon the people it was restored to them again, as a life renewed by the grace of God.

9, 10. Then went up Moses, etc.—Now, when the covenant has received its solemn and final sanction, the people have access to God. Hence by their representatives they enter into the presence of God. They saw the God of Israel—This title is very appropriately given to Jehovah here, because he, the God of the fathers, had become in truth the God of Israel through the covenant just made. Many think that in this private scene was discovered, amid the luminous blaze, the faint, adumbrated form of the humanity of Christ. Under his feet ... paved work of a sapphire stone—That is, a tesselated pavement, apparently constructed of solid blocks of transparent sapphire, moulded into the shape and size of bricks. By its color and transparency, therefore, it differed from any pavement which Moses had seen in Egypt, and formed one of the most splendid objects which the imagination can conceive. There is something sublime and significant in the restrained and reverent way in which the glory of the Lord is referred to. No attempt to describe the vision itself, nothing which could supply even to the imagination the materials for the construction of any likeness of the Almighty. Simply a suggestion, chaste and yet glowing, of the glory "under his feet." As it were the body of heaven, etc.—Nothing less than the spotless purity and luster of the skies above is fit to be compared with the inexpressible beauty and grandeur of that which was beneath the feet of the God of Israel.

11. Upon the nobles—The separated or select ones—that is, the persons who were singled out to go up with Moses. Laid not his hand—Did not consume them with the fire of his holiness. No emblems of judgment were seen by them now. He who had before covered himself with clouds, and indicated his presence in tempests, is now arrayed in light. Also they saw God—When the heads of the people venture to draw near their God, they find his presence no more a source of disturbance and dread, but radiant in all the bright loveliness of supernal glory; a beautiful sign that the higher religion and state of conformity to law, now established, shall work onward to eternal blessedness. And did eat and drink—Feasted on the peace-offerings; on the remnants of the late sacrifices and libations. This feast had a prophetic bearing, intimating God's dwelling with men.

12. Come up to me into the mount—This may be understood to imply that Moses and the others had descended to partake of the sacrificial feast. But Moses was now to ascend farther. And be there—Continue there for a season. I will give thee tables of stone ... law ... commandments—Maimonides and many of the Jews understand the "tables of stone" to denote the ten commandments; "the law," the law written in the Pentateuch; and "the commandment" to denote the commandment, the oral or traditional law, which was in after ages put into writing in the Mishna and the Gemara. That thou mayest teach them—In the original we have here the same root that is contained in the word rendered "law." God's law is a doctrine, a philosophy, a theology.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Moses was the mediator of the old covenant; Christ of the new.

2. Under the old covenant, God was revealed in terror; under the new, in love.

3. Under the old, man was kept aloof from God; under the new, he is brought nigh.

4. Under the old, the blood of beasts "sanctified to the purifying of the flesh;" under the new, the blood of Christ purges "the conscience from dead works to serve the living God."

5. The old was but the shadow; the new the reality.

Church Amusements.

MR. EDITOR: If you have never published the enclosed article, wont you give it a place in your paper, prefaced by your own comments?

If our Christian mothers could only be persuaded to drop into the treasury of the church the dollars they intend to spend for ices, cakes and berries, and, more than all, the money spent on the fancy dresses that their young daughters may pose as beauties in a public tableau, how much will have been effected! Certainly, Doctor, you must see as clearly as I do that the portrait of a young girl, dressed or undressed, as the selected tableau may require, or as she stands arranged for some national dance, is as unlike the picture of the "young woman" painted by St. Paul (whose pencil, we believe, was guided by inspiration) as it is possible. Our young people can no longer go into the vineyard of their Lord and work one day for love to him, but must be coaxed to the duty by promise of amusement in the evening. Are not our weak churches and lukewarm members proof that God's blessing is not with them, and are we not lying under the threat, "God will spew us out of his mouth"?

Respectfully,

MARY BARD.

(We have given our correspondent's letter as better than any comments we can make.—ED.)

"The church has gone into the amusement business largely. In the days of primitive simplicity, it was thought that the world and Satan had a monopoly in that line. This, however, is 'an age of progress,' so called, and the church has entered the market, and is in competition with these great caterers.

"The discovery has been made that the church, in order to hold its young people to its altars, must provide for the natural craving for amusements. It used to be held that Jesus and his work furnished ample resources to meet the loftiest aspirations of a saved soul. It was sung:

"'Thou, O Christ, art all I want;
More than all in Thee I find.'

That sort of sentiment is now thought not to be up to 'the times.' Sad as it may appear, judging from the new order of things, Jesus is not equal to the occasion. A little amusement must be thrown in. In order to keep the people from the theatre and opera our churches must be made into semi-theatres and semi-operas.

"The holidays furnish occasion for the ingenious and progressive sons and daughters of Zion to make full proof of their new vocation. They prepare dramas, farces (very farcical); suppers, fairs and entertainments of every sort. They are spending their wretched strength for naught. So far from preventing attendance upon a full-grown theatre and operas by these efforts, they are whetting the appetite of the people therefor.

"The church-theatre is a preparation for the world-theatre. Satan is delighted with these inventions. But this is serious business, dreadful business. It is eating out the life of the church—it is destroying our young people, rendering them unfit for all true spiritual exercises. We counsel every follower of Jesus resolutely to discountenance these church amusements. Be kind, but firm. Loyalty to Jesus demands it. Give your money liberally for every laudable church object, but stand aloof, positively, evermore from the unholy festivals."—Guide to Holiness.

Why We Educate More Girls Than Boys.

MR. EDITOR: I am surprised that a man of your broad conception should ask contributors to give opinions: Why are there more colleges for girls than boys? Have you not learned that it is woman that forms the plastic clay and moulds it for the Master's use? Some great man spoke the truth when he said, "that one woman was equal to seven and a half men;" another, that "one woman was equal to fifteen men." We all know that it is woman that shapes the character and destiny of the world. "The one that rocks the cradle rules the world." All great and good men give to their mothers (some, their wives) the credit of making them what they are. It is woman that keeps up the churches. See her work in the Roman Catholic Church. It is true, they do not come to the front. "The power behind the throne is greater than the power on the throne." The church knows this; hence the effort to educate our girls. They are the ones that will bring up the world, the church, so that it will be "the light of the world."

Yours, etc.,

W. HOOVER.

From the Work.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Andrew Chapel, on the Fannin circuit, is one of Bro. J. N. Tucker's seven charges, and the only organization on his work without a church. There are only seventeen members, and the schoolhouse, near the spot where Andrew Chapel formerly stood, is now used as the place of worship. Andrew Chapel was built and organized in 1857, and was the most flourishing, most largely attended country church in all this section. Rev. J. A. Godfrey was its first pastor. After an interesting history of more than twenty years, it was discontinued as an appointment, and was sold, by order of the Quarterly Conference, in January, 1880. It was reorganized in May, 1881, but was thrown out again in 1885, and during the year 1886 had no preaching.

Bro. N. M. Clark, of the Fannin circuit, hearing of the situation, voluntarily added this work to his already full hands, and gave us monthly sermons, and protracted a nine-days meeting in the summer with gracious results. "We were strangers, and he took us in," and our gratitude and prayers will always follow him, no matter where he is called to go, in the Master's vineyard!

We are still graciously blessed in the ministry of our present pastor, who has already revived the class meetings and added several names to the ADVOCATE'S subscription list.

Bro. J. F. Robinson, a local minister of this county, also preaches for us the fourth Sunday of every month. He has other work for the Master in the forenoon, and rides seven or eight miles to give us an evening sermon, and we feel that our Father's loving care is specially over our "little flock" this year. We have an interesting Sabbath-school, and use the International Series. I must tell you of our plan for keeping up the finances: We country people don't have many nickels; so everybody that attends is expected to bring an egg, and, by selling them at market price, we keep well supplied in literature.

On the fourth Sunday of last month we observed "Children's Day," using the programme, and had an interesting occasion. The nickels and eggs amounted to $1. Our orator, Bro. Robinson, was detained at home on account of extreme illness in his family; but Mr. Garver gave an earnest talk to the little ones. Next Sunday is to be a "red-letter" day in our history. We are to have our presiding elder, Bro. P. A. Johnston, Bros. Tucker and Robinson, and the sacrament of our Lord's Supper is to be administered. "Our Zion is looking up," and we thank God and take courage. S. H. P.

NEAR BRANDON.

M'COMB CITY, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: On Friday evening, June 1, our people enjoyed the blessed privilege of listening to a most impressive sermon, delivered by our esteemed brother and former pastor, Rev. J. W. McLaurin. He selected as the subject of his evening's discourse Ephesians v, 1, and therefrom drew a most interesting and important lesson. His whole sermon was fraught with eloquent expressions of divine love, and by the very earnestness which he manifested, made each of his hearers feel spiritually elevated. After service quite a number of the congregation went forward to speak to our visiting brother, showing in what high regard he is held by the people among whom he has labored so zealously and successfully. Bro. McLaurin is now engaged in a work that necessitates his being away from us; but his visits to us are like bright rays of sunshine, shedding, as he does, joyous light and happiness to all around. He may rest assured that he will always meet with a hearty welcome here. The prayers of the Christians of the community are constantly made that he may be gloriously successful in the noble work he has undertaken.

Fraternally,

WM. M'FADIN.

SHILOH CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I think we are getting along reasonably well this year. While we can not make as good a financial showing as some other works, yet I think, taking everything into consideration, we are doing very well. We have added to date about eighteen members (lost some by transfer). We are just finishing one good church, and are building two more. Will have them ready for use by August 1; both will be good houses. We also built last year a splendid parsonage—well located, with splendid water in the yard; but we owe a right smart debt on the parsonage yet. Dr. C. R. Norman, a large and liberal-hearted layman, advanced the money, and the circuit owes it to him. I hope the circuit will not betray the confidence imposed in them, but will, during this year, pay every cent of the money back.

On account of parsonage debt and church buildings we will not make as good collection as we would otherwise do, but will do the best we can under existing circumstances.

We had a drought—I believe, about eight weeks—commencing early in April and running almost through May, making crops backward, late coming up, though crop prospect now tolerably good. With late fall we will be all right. Health not first rate—some flux and fevers, and a few deaths.

Well, before closing I will say we have large congregations, and a good interest manifested. Hope and pray for a general revival throughout our bond this year.

And, now, I will avail myself of this opportunity of inviting you to our camp meeting (Shiloh), second Sunday in October. Come over, Doctor, and see us there. We have a fine camp ground, located ten miles southeast of Brandon Station (Vicksburg and Meridian railroad), and about twenty-two miles from Jackson; nearest station, Pelahatchie, six miles from camp ground. We have about forty tents, and more to go up this summer. Generally have about twenty-five hundred in attendance on Sunday, and a large attendance all the time. Will you come, Doctor? I also now invite ministerial brethren, both traveling and local. Brethren, please put down in your day-books: Shiloh Camp Meeting, second Sunday in October, 1888.

Success to the ADVOCATE, with its editor and publisher.

A. D. MILLER.

ANACOCO, LA.

MR. EDITOR: As I pen you these lines, my heart overflows with joy. Our church has been visited with showers of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We came to this work by the appointment of Bishop Key at the last session of our Conference. The people of this circuit have received their preacher in the spirit of the gospel. I have made the rounds, and, after dwelling among them for four months, I can say I have never seen a more generous people. They all seem to appreciate their preacher, whoever he may be. The Board of Stewards made a very liberal assessment for their preacher. We are going to build a parsonage at Holly Grove—one of my appointments; which we expect soon to occupy.

T. R. WIMBERLY, P. C.

TOPISAW CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: It is with a feeling of real pleasure I write you that this pastoral charge is manifestly on the up-grade, and I do indeed believe that one of the prime causes of it is: the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has a more extensive circulation than ever before. Twenty-five have been added to the list of subscribers on this circuit up to date, and I intend to add as many more before the year closes, if it be possible. My Sunday-school superintendents say that their Sunday-schools were never so good as now. The prayer meetings are good to "the use of edifying," and are increasing in number. Family altars are also becoming more general, but are yet too scarce by half. The collections ordered by the Conference are well up, though the preacher's salary is badly behind. God helping me, I intend to report at our next Annual Conference two new houses of worship and a parsonage, and all the collections entrusted to me paid in full.

We are now on the border of the seasons for revivals. I read the signs of the times as indicative of a glorious revival over my entire field. I know this work is on the eve of a great awakening. I feel the fire now in my heart that is soon to catch from heart to heart and raise the shout of "glory."

The Lord has strangely blessed me this year, for he has given me a large field to cultivate and no home to live at, and requires me to preach much to an intelligent people without any book for reference. I have not seen my book this year. What a privation! Ah, me! It shall not be so with my successor.

Our camp meeting (Topisaw) is to embrace the second Sunday in August. We expect a grand time. It would send a thrill of joy through every heart to see your genial face in our camp, Mr. Editor, come, and we will level the hills and raise the valleys to give you a happy time. The Lord be with you!

J. G. SIBLEY, P. C.

ADA CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Our circuit has kept steadily advancing since Conference. Quite a number had joined the church before we had held any special protracted services. On the night of May 20 we commenced our first protracted meeting for this year, continuing five days, resulting in twenty-two accessions, a goodly number of conversions, the church where the meeting was held (Fellowship) greatly revived.

Not many years ago there was no church at this point. Bro. Wynn and others would preach occasionally under the shade trees to a few Sunday hunters and fishers. To-day we have a neat little church, and a live, working membership numbering 75.

The brethren who have traveled through this country when it was known as the Rapides circuit, or mission, would hardly recognize it, so changed are the people in respect to religious movements of every kind. In that part of the circuit known as Point Meager, where it was once thought unsafe for a minister to go, we now have two as fine and well-behaved congregations as one would wish to preach to. The membership at these two points number 150, with class meetings, prayer meetings, and Sunday-schools well attended.

On the night of the first instant we closed a meeting that had lasted six days, held at Gray's Creek; nine accessions, and a general forward movement in church enterprise.

We have received into the church since the month of March 54 members. In most instances we have succeeded in putting our new recruits to work at once. I am fully convinced that many valuable members are lost to the church from a failure to enlist them immediately in some laudable church enterprise.

Verily, Ada circuit is building up, and will soon have reached that point of prosperity, under the blessing of God, where it can be formed into two circuits, either one of them to be coveted by our best circuit riders.

J. L. HOFFPAUIR.

LIVINGSTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am encouraged to say I think we are getting along pretty well. We have nine appointments, all of which we have met regularly with few exceptions; some of them sixty miles from our home in East Baton Rouge, where we lived till the middle of April, when we moved to the new parsonage, which is a comfortable house and nicely situated near the Live Oak Church, it being built by the good brethren and friends of said church. We expect to have a new church at Port Vincent soon; the committee are at work. At Manrepas we will have the new church ready to be dedicated by our beloved presiding elder at our second Quarterly Conference, at which time we expect to protract for a few days. We are praying for a grand time. We have on this charge six Sunday-schools doing good work, four prayer meetings well attended and very interesting. Upon the whole, we are moving up in Livingston. I think the spiritual and financial condition of this charge very much on the up-grade. The good people have provided well for their pastor and family. We have gotten a few new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, and hope to get some more soon.

Well, I will close by asking the brethren to pray for me and mine. Yours,

ROBT. W. TUCKER, P. C.

Athletic Games vs. Mental Culture.

BY DR. J. H. HANAFORD

It is manifest, in these modern times, that there is a growing tendency, a furore for the mere development of the muscles, with too little reference to the legitimate tendency of reasonable physical training in aid of mental and moral improvement. While the body, mind and soul constitute a grand whole, sustaining intimate relations, each suffering as the others are impaired, it is unquestionably true that moral obligations demand that our whole beings should receive due attention, obedience to the laws which were intended to secure the best possible condition of the whole man, health and harmonious development. The normal exercise of our powers is admirably calculated to promote strength and vitality, while indolence and violent activities, abuse, must produce the opposite effects.

There are various influences connected with the games which are so usual, unfortunately, among our students, in our colleges, as well as in the lower grades of schools, which forbid anything like normal physical development. In the ball games, the rowing matches, the walks, and the like, physical exercise is ignored, each being controlled by a spirit of rivalry, looking toward the "championship." It is to be feared that, in far too many instances, the mere development of brute force is sought, one not differing materially from that of the pugilists, the student sinking to the level of the Sullivans, who, in the matter of strength and agility must be regarded as second to the Gorilla tribe, mindless and soulless! The violent exercises of the games naturally produce rheumatism and kindred diseases, while impaired digestion is a legitimate consequence, since the vital force demanded at the stomach, that food may be naturally digested, is withdrawn to the limbs and muscles, a fact of much importance to the student, added to its withdrawal from the brain, to too great an extent. In moderate exercise, and abundance of which the student should secure, this withdrawal is not thus marked, the blood and vitality being appropriated more nearly as they are needed, while the system is not checked. Ordinary farm labor, or walking, with no incentive to violent exertion, are far more conducive to health and mental culture than the more fashionalde games, now, in many instances, proving but dissipation, a curse to mentality.

Dr. B. W. Richardson, as good an authority as I can quote, says: "There is no sign, there is no evidence that the greater culture of the physical strength has favored the longevity of an individual, or the vital tenacity of a race. The observations made by the physicians of the Greek, Roman, Arabian and Italian schools respecting physical exercise and the maladies incident to it admit of but one rigid interpretation, namely, that such exercises ensure premature decay and early death. The facts to be elicited in modern times from the statistics of this country as well as of France and of Prussia, lead to the inevitable conclusions that removal of excessive physical endurance tends to health and length of life."

We look in vain for physical training, that on which the best health can be based, resulting in the most harmonious development, connected with the games, at all comparable with the physical state of the agriculturalists of Scotland, the oatmeal consumers of the Highlands—robust, firm in structure, intellectual, and manly in form. The same is true of the Jews, the abstemious, pork-rejecting laborers.—Watchman.

The National Controversy.

There is something which touches the sublime in the thought of a great people, already sixty millions, strong, living under a government of the people, by the people and for the people. This is indeed a representative government, but at every election the primal sovereignty reverts to the people. Hardly more than a century ago such an experiment would have been deemed foolhardy; certain to issue in misrule and confusion, and even now there is no one who appreciates too keenly how much of intelligence and cultivated moral courage are necessary in order that the great experiment may not disappoint the great hope, the great hope for all the nations.

Last week the Prohibition and Woman's Suffrage party held its convention, agreed on its platform, nominated its candidates and flung its banner to the breezes. This week, as we go to press, the Democratic party is assembled in convention at St. Louis, and before this reaches our readers, President Cleveland will have been nominated for his own successor. Week after next, the nineteenth, the Republican Convention will meet in Chicago. We are, therefore, on the eve of exciting times. Again great popular agitation and discussion on questions deemed vital to the good of the republic begin. With whatever incidental evils, these are periods of national education, and afford opportunities of the utmost value. As Christians we can not be indifferent. The duties of Christian patriotism rest upon us all. It is not discussion, it is not agitation that is to be dreaded; it is only the unfairness and bitterness of partisan prejudice that are to be deprecated. It is a time for personal caution, and for every Christian to fix it in his heart that, for himself, whatever his earnestness of conviction or sense of the importance of party issues, he will not be uncandid, or allow himself to be the victim of a prejudice, and that he will not try to aid any cause, however good, by any immoral or unworthy means. It is a good time for prayer, to pray that the Spirit of God may rest on the minds of all the people; and that in the supreme interest of the kingdom of Christ in this and in all countries, God's gracious providence—which knows so much more than we all—may rule and overrule all parties and all popular movements throughout the great contest.

The platforms of all the several parties will enumerate some grand truths, and plead for certain issues fitted to stir patriotic emotion in every honest heart. The standard of personal and political judgment which each party sets up in judgment of the other will be edifying, or would be, if they would apply a similar test of personal honesty and consistency to themselves. The personal element will, of necessity, enter largely into the controversy over the several candidates who shall be chosen as the standard bearers of the parties which they represent. The man can not be lost in the official. To hold up before the people for their admiration and promotion to stations of chief honor and responsibility any man known to be a person of depraved life, would of course be profoundly demoralizing to the people. It would be in the highest degree fortunate for the country, if all parties should place at the forefront as candidates men of such purity and nobility of personal character as will serve to ennoble in all minds the ideals of character and civic devotion.—Advance.

Going Back.

A writer in an English journal recently gave the history of an eminently respectable merchant of London, a man noted for his morality, his dignity of demeanor and his strict observance of the smallest rules of decorum, who, on account of his health, was advised to emigrate to a tropical climate.

He bought a ranch in South Africa. After two years, spent with no other associates than the natives, he was found by a friend bare-footed, unshaven, wearing filthy clothes, and, as regarded his morals, in a state of savagery no higher than the heathen about him.

Other instances were adduced of men who, when surrounded by civilization, were civilized and enlightened, but who had lapsed into barbarism as soon as the restraint of public opinion was removed; and the theory was urged that the original savage blood is so strong in all of us that the best man, if compelled to live the remainder of his life among savages, would abandon the habits and teaching of Christianity and return to the primitive conditions of human, ity, just as the finest apple-tree, it neglected, will gradually deteriorate and bear wilder fruit.

This theory, if carried to its full extent, would put us all rather below the level of the average Indian. For those who have been taken from savage surroundings and educated at Hampton or Carlisle, do not usually return to the ways of their tribe on returning home, but retain the civilized customs they have acquired. Instead of becoming units in a band of savages they are like the nerve centres, the ganglia, in the lower animals, which communicate intelligence to the whole body.

But all speculations are fanciful and useless which generalize and base theories on single cases. There is no way of ascertaining how many men are compelled to lead decent Christian lives simply by the pressure and fear of public opinion.

Nevertheless there can be no doubt that the fear of God and of our brother man is a potent factor in the control of both individuals and of communities, and that it is one which is almost put out of sight in modern manners and teaching.

The young man who professed atheism or who led an openly immoral life, fifty years ago, was certain not to be admitted into decent society, and was taught to expect eternal punishment after death.

Now he will probably find a circle of foolish young people ready to applaud him in this world, and it is the fashion to ignore all idea of punishment in the other.

Mercy and tolerance and love have their work in the world: but so also have law and justice: and the thoughtful man knows that there is an evil spirit in his soul which God curbs and conquers by scourging and pain as well as by happiness and tender mercies.—Youths' Companion.

A STORY IN A WORD.—Sincerity is one of the most beautiful words in the English language; and, like many other words, it has a history. It comes from two Latin words sine and cera, without cement: and its origin was in this wise: In the golden days of Roman prosperity, when her merchants were very affluent, and dwelt in marble palaces on the banks of the river Tiber, there was a very natural sort of emulation in the grandeur and artistic adornment of their dwellings. Their successful wars had made many of the gems of Grecian art the possessions of the Roman people. A taste for sculpture had been awakened, and the sons of Rome set to work themselves in the school of design. Good sculptures were quickly drawn up. But dodges sometimes took place then as now. For instance, if the sculptor came upon a flaw in the marble or if his chisel missed its aim, he had a carefully constructed cement with which he filled in the chink, and so cleverly fixed it as to be imperceptible. In time, however, and after the purchase had long been completed, heat or damp or accident would affect the cement, and it would reveal its presence there. The consequence was that, when new contracts came to be signed for commissioned works of art, there was a clause put in that they were to be sine cera, or without cement. What a picture-story in a word! What a moral meaning in it—namely, that true characters should be sincere, or without cement!

In every community there are a number of men whose whole time is not occupied, such as teachers, ministers, farmers' sons and others. To these classes especially we would say, if you wish to make several hundred dollars during the next few months, write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they will show you how to do it.

The great interest and beauty that pertains to the book of Psalms as devotional reading, is that it comes home to common life pervaded by an intense humanity, affording comfort to the soul in all times of tribulation, and giving wisdom to all who look for divine guidance, thus making for themselves a new record in the experience of Christian men and women who have found in them expressions of the deepest penitence, and the highest notes of praise the human soul can utter.—Religious Herald.

Briefs.

According to the New York Evening Post, the percentage of increase in the population of that city in the last five years has been 15.38. The percentage of increase of the members of Protestant churches has been only 13.03. The percentage of increase of individual denominations is thus set down: Episcopalians, 31.74; Presbyterians, 8.20; Baptists, 5.06; Methodists, 1.12. The Lutherans barely hold their own, while the minor sects "are none of them as strong as they were five years ago." A writer in the Watchman, referring to this, says: "Few preachers have a congregation of 500, and some ministers who are widely known preach to not more than fifty in the evening."

The most interesting article in the June number of Christian Thought is a paper read by Sir William Hunter before the London Society of Arts, in February last, on the subject: "The Religions of India." In this important paper the author discusses in a lucid manner the three great religions now prevalent in India, giving the distinctive characteristic of each. The three are Mohammedanism, Hinduism and Christianity. Giving the rate of increase of each, the author says: "The general population increased in nine years preceding 1881 at the rate of 10.89 per cent.; the Mohammedans at the rate of 10.96, the Hindus at some unknown rate below 13.64, the Christians of all races at the rate of 40.71, and the native Christians at the rate of 64.07 per cent." The author further says: "Islam is a great teetotal society. Among Hindus to touch liquor is the sign of low caste. I, for one, believe that if Christianity is to be an unmixed blessing in India, it must be Christianity on the basis of total abstinence."

The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations at 40 East 23rd street, New York, has just issued the association "Year Book for 1888." There are now, according to this annual report, 1,240 associations in America and 3,804 in the world. The American associations have a membership of 170,000: they own buildings valued at $5,609,265, and have a total net property of $7,261,658; last year they expended $1,181,338 in local work, and $104,949 in general work. 752 men are devoting their entire time to the local, State and international work as secretaries and assistants: there are 23 State Committees that employ one or more traveling secretaries, and the International Committee's secretarial force numbers fourteen. 77 of these associations are engaged specially in work among railroad men; 10 among German-speaking young men; 273 are in colleges; 29 are colored and 18 Indian. 226 associations report educational classes in from one to fifteen branches of study; 287 report special attention to physical culture through gymnasiums and out-door sports; 398 Bible classes, 367 Bible-training classes, and 661 weekly prayer meetings are among the services for young men only, which are reported.

The Universities of North Carolina and Missouri have conferred the degree of "LL.D."-upon Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of our church.

The Presbyterians on Giving.

Our Presbyterian brethren have proper views of the subject of giving and the courage to publish them. In the Assembly at Philadelphia the Committee on Systematic Beneficence, among other wise things, said this:

Your committee would also emphasize the fact that the giving of money for church furtherance is as much a matter of worship as prayer and praise. Sacrifice and gifts go together in the service of God. Hence, systematic giving on the Sabbath, according to ability, belongs to the sanctuary, and with its recognition other services shall have larger acceptance and richer blessing.

That is the doctrine of the Scriptures from beginning to end.

Another point which the committee emphasized needs to be brought prominently before our own denomination, inasmuch as many of our people confine their gifts to certain channels. The committee said:

We urge that the churches be enjoined to give to all the Boards. They are all the instrumentalities of the Assembly for the carrying forward of its great work, and loyalty to our church and to the Head of the church requires of us a liberal remembrance of them all. It is a reproach that so many of the churches are not contributing, and that so many of those that contributed confine their liberality to one or two objects. Upon this subject there should be repetition of rebuke and admonition till reformation recurs.

The recommendation that there be "repetition of rebuke and admonition till reformation recurs" shows that those brethren are earnest enough to speak out brave words of warning.

Two resolutions, recommended by the committee and passed by the Assembly, seem to us, if properly attended to, will be of special value in the future. They are:

That the admirable practice of some Presbyteries through their Beneficence Committees be approved, in publishing tables of the churches' gifts compared with previous years, for information and stimulus.

That sessions be advised to make frequent report before their several churches of the amount contributed in their benevolent offerings, and the disposition made of the same.

We now call attention to a resolution of paramount importance, the neglect of which is, perhaps, the great cause of the smallness of the church's gifts. It is this:

That every minister be charged to instruct his congregation in the duty and grace of liberality for Christ's sake, and in scriptural principles of giving; to keep them informed as to the work of our Boards, and the needs of each cause.

That every member is earnestly advised to adopt proportionate giving as the practice of his Christian stewardship.

That a general circulation of the periodicals and other publications of our church be strongly urged as an invaluable help to Christian giving.

The whole subject of church finance will be solved only as these last recommendations are earnestly and judiciously acted upon. It is an indication of progress and a prophecy of permanent success to see all the churches coming to a recognition of the fact which God announced ages ago—that all "the silver and gold is mine, saith the Lord;" and, at the same time, devising ways and means to bring them into his treasury, that thence through the channels which his church has opened they may pour out in perennial streams of blessing to all the races of men.

The Baptist Year Book, just issued, records a membership of 2,917,315 in the 31,891 churches. During the year 158,373 were added to the membership, and 608 new churches were established. It appears that only 697,081, or less than a third of the aggregate membership, are in what are called the Northern States.

Ingersoll's Prophecy.

The following quotations are from an oration delivered by Robert G. Ingersoll, at the City of New York, on May 30, at the ceremonies attending the decoration of the soldiers' graves:

A vision of the future arises. * * * I see a world at peace, adorned with every art, with music's myriad voices thrilled, while lips are rich with words of love and truth; a world in which no exile sighs, no prisoner mourns; where work and worth go hand in hand. * * * I see a world without the beggar's outstretched palm, the miser's heartless, stony stare, the piteous wail of want, the livid lips of lies, the cruel eyes of scorn. I see a race without a disease of flesh or brain—shapely and fair, the married harmony of form and function; and, as I look, life lengthens, joy deepens, love canopies the earth, and over all in the great dome shines the eternal star of human hope.

What a resplendent representation of the possibilities of human perfection! What a radiant vision! What a prophetic picture of the Christian millennium! But who is the prophet that lifts the veil of futurity, and, catching a glimpse of this glorious consummation, thus portrays the scene to his fellow-mortals with the exquisite coloring of his unequaled eloquence? What a paradox that such a panorama of the coming conquests of Christianity should be furnished by the chief champion of its professed foes!

From the high pinnacle of intellectual eminence to which he has ascended Mr. Ingersoll foresees and announces the approach of that universal reign of righteousness, peace and prosperity predicted of old by the ancient prophets of God. Beholding the gathering glory of the millennial light—the herald and harbinger of happiness that gilds the horizon of human hope—he re-echoes in polished periods of refulgent rhetoric the prophecies promulgated in the past, and points to the pleasing prospect which presages their final fulfillment. The artist has faithfully depicted the scene prefigured before him, and which is unfolding itself to view, though he fain would ascribe its coming accomplishment to the so-called "majesty of man." Mr. Ingersoll has mistaken the source of his own inspiration. Though towering like an intellectual giant amongst his fellowmen, he but radiates the light received from a more exalted sphere, reflecting its brightness without absorbing the warmth kindled by its rays. The snow-clad summit of the lofty mountain sheds no light on the level plain below until its icy pinnacles are crowned with a lustrous glow borrowed from the brilliant beams of the rising sun.

The eloquence of this ornate orator is as much a gift from God as the breath he breathes in combatting the Christian cause—that cause which alone has conduced to the development of an Ingersollian intellect, erratic though it be. Man is merely a mirror, and, until freed by faith from faults and imperfections, reflects but a distorted image of his Maker's majesty.

The picture presented by Mr. Ingersoll is a striking one, and it will in the future ripen into reality, notwithstanding his opposition to the cause which will effect its consummation. The failure of infidelity is confessed in the insidious, but futile attempt to appropriate to its purposes pictures purloined from the portals of Heaven's glorious gallery. Long familiar to the eye of faith, the portrait held up to view possesses charms for the Christian which the painter himself can not appreciate. What a meaningless mockery it must be to him who has no hope or expectation of participating in the pleasures of its final fruition! And what a transcendent travesty on the teachings of truth to attract man's attention to the dawning splendor of that "eternal star of human hope" if its light is to be obliterated and its lustre dimmed by the dismal darkness of an endless death!

W.

ABBEVILLE, Louisiana.

With the People.

On several occasions of late have we been with Rev. James J. Billingsley in his out-door preaching. Though the efforts made last summer were eminently successful in reaching the multitudes with the "glorious gospel of the blessed God" and in establishing mission Sunday-schools, still we think the Board of Managers of the City Mission did wisely in securing the appointment from the Louisiana Conference of a minister especially set apart unto this delightful work. Ably assisted by Bro. Westerfield, who superintended the fitting up of the gospel wagon, and by a devoted few of pious men and women as a singing and praying band, the city missionary anchors for a week or two his "church on wheels," as some one has called it, at some eligible point for securing an audience of non-church goers. Twenty to thirty Christian workers are accommodated on the spacious platform built above the wheels of the cotton-float, and with a protecting awning over them, and the organ in position occupying a part of the speaker's stand, running well to the front; the preacher, organist and all filled with the Spirit and a burning desire for the saving of precious souls; the audience of hundreds of deathless beings with upturned, inquiring faces—each soul worth as much in God's eyes as the soul of a Vanderbilt; thus, ready for action, God's workers begin the service by singing: "Rescue the perishing." Prayer follows—not a rhetorical, stilted prayer, for no man with any sense of the fitness of things could pray after that manner for the multitudes of dead souls before him—but a short, pointed, simple, trustful, pleading prayer that prevails with God and man and secures the victory at the start of the meeting. Another hymn—"Whosoever will may come." How quiet they are during the singing, and how surely does God's Spirit carry the songs and with it the gospel invitation straight into the hearts of the burdened sons and daughters of toil, and sin, and misery! Then the missionary, with Bagster Bible in hand, announces his text—"Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have, give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." Discoursing for twenty-five minutes, perhaps, another sweet hymn is sung, and a visiting brother prays and exhorts for a few minutes. The people have been all attention, and many resolves have been made, and brands are being plucked from the burning by just such unpretending, yet earnest reaching after the masses. The doxology sung and the benediction pronounced, the people crowd around the wagon to shake hands with and to thank the missionary for his interest in their souls, and to receive from him a tract to read, and also a surrender and consecration card to read, sign and return to him the next night. Thus does Bro. Billingsley find out where the wounded of the Spirit live, and he and the nearest pastor visit them and talk and pray with them in their homes. A number of souls were awakened at the Sonat street meeting, and we have faith to believe that God will awaken and save souls at the Louisiana avenue meeting now in progress.

Dear brethren and sisters, while we labor for souls around our church altars, we fail, criminally fail, of our whole duty if we do not, as far as we can, give our sympathies, prayers and labors to the saving of souls who are "not of our fold," but are yonder in the great "white-unto-the-harvest" field of the neglected multitudes of the city. If you have any doubts, or fears, or peculiar notions as to the propriety and profit of this work, go and take your seat on the gospel wagon, and throw yourself into this thoroughly Methodistic style of labor, and you will be convinced that it is of God. Let us, one and all, with prayer and labor and money stand to the back of our chosen missionary and his faithful handful of helpers, and surely God will give us hundreds of souls right out of the midst of the unsaved, unchurched masses of our people.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

ACME, La., 1888.

"Confirming the Souls of the Disciples."

MR. EDITOR: For many weeks I have been trying to establish the hearts of disciples and "confirm the churches" by the divine Word. My visits have been to Yazoo City, Canton, Brandon, Natchez, Anguilla, Shreveport, Arcadia, La., and Ruston, La., besides some side work. In these cities and towns I have preached often—some more, and some less. As to fruits and results, I leave that to be ascertained by others. Only this: We can not fail if we "preach the Word" to "confirm the souls of the disciples." To that end I constantly aim. The church needs strengthening, comforting, cheering. "The Lord confirmed the Word," as the apostles preached; and signs still follow when the Word is sown as pure, unmixed seed, for the "seed is the Word of God." I do not feel that my work has been fruitless. I found the pastors of the flocks full of earnest consideration for the health of the churches and the prosperity of Zion. Attention has been specially given to the condition of education at several places. The future must be cared for; the past has many lessons and some warnings. Railroads have revolutionized all the plans, and often ruined all the labors of many years in both church edifices and institutions of learning. What fifty years ago—yes, what thirty years ago—looked like an immovable rock has been left out of sight and often gone out of mind. New cities have sprung into existence, and country places have > "Gone back to the dust from whence they sprung."

But the church grows, and the cause of education flourishes, and the future is full of waving harvest for our cause.

A grand classical institution will in the near future be established for young ladies at Shreveport. Dr. Scruggs has this largely at heart. At Arcadia, in North Louisiana, there are two flourishing academies, with about 300 pupils. At Ruston is an embryo college—or, better, a fine classical school, and over 200 students. This is a great center. Ruston must have a distinctive church high female academy for young women, and it must be built in the near future. We selected the grounds—that is, Bros. Harper, Parker and the writer; and the work must go on. We counted the pupils, and from Ruston to Shreveport there are in schools one thousand youths, and that in less than a reach of eighty miles. They will soon have a railroad built from Ruston to Columbia, on the Ouachita river, and then the town will win her battles.

At Canton, Miss., lots have been selected for a great male academy. This is to be a feeder, if not more, to universities and other institutions. Canton is central, and the surrounding country now vacant. I can send 300 boys and young men to the place and rob no other locality or seat of learning. Lots and grounds for academies ought to have been secured twenty and thirty and forty years ago, and held and kept sacredly for the new age. Then they could have been had for asking; now it takes a snug little pile of gold dust to obtain them. But all will go well for the future if we wake up and work diligently while the day lasts.

Yours,

C. K. MARSHALL.

Notes.

There can be no measurement of our influence if it is consecrated thoroughly to Christ. Abraham's consecration to God has been felt all along the ages. "The blessing of Abraham" long ago passed beyond the limit of Israel and is still widening. The lad turned over his five loaves and two fishes to Christ, and lo! thousands of hungry people were filled with food, and the boy had more left than he could carry.

The Northern Presbyterian Assembly, at its recent session, passed a resolution recommending the sessions of Presbyterian Churches to refuse to admit into their churches persons who are engaged in the liquor business. Thus the work of prohibition, like John Brown's spirit, "is marching on." The dikes are being built in every direction to hedge in and restrict the sphere of the operations of this hydra of modern times. After awhile the Hercules will appear on the scene, and then off will come the heads which have so long devoured the peace of modern society! May God hasten his coming!

The London Methodist Times thus summarizes the "drink bill" of old England:

England's drink bill for the year 1887 was £121,952,680. Weight of the amount in sovereigns, 978 tons. Time to count it, at the rate of one sovereign per second, 3 years, 11 months, 21 days. The height of a pillar, if the sovereigns were placed face to face, 116 miles. The length of a chain if the sovereigns were placed edge to edge, 1,725 miles.

And still there are people in the world who affect to be unable to see the benefits that would result from the abolition of the liquor traffic. "There are none so blind as those who will not see."

When the Revised Version renders that familiar passage in Paul after this manner, "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ," it gives a somewhat different color to the meaning of that awful revelation. There is quite a difference between, "We must all appear," and, "We must all be made manifest." Appearance and manifestation lack a good deal of being the same. Our characters may be hid behind appearance, but they come out clearly in manifestation. What the apostle means is, that as we are will be shown at the judgment seat of Christ, in order that we may be justly rewarded.

In his call for a State Convention of the prohibitionists of Mississippi, Bishop Galloway gives this encouraging fact: "The special importance of this convention arises out of the unexampled progress and present position of the great movement." The history of our country fails to show any movement that has grown so rapidly as the prohibition movement. Another matter for congratulation is thus stated by the Bishop: "Our cause was never so strong in the intelligent convictions of the people, and is augmenting with every morning and evening sun." This fact is the ground for the closing sentence in the call: "We need calm and patient counsel together to meet its widening opportunities and multiplying exigencies." "Calm and patient counsel" is now the need, the special need of the hour!

Louisiana and New Orleans are constantly talking about the necessities and advantages of education, yet nothing has been more inimical to this cause, nothing can possibly do it more harm than the action of the city and State in not paying the teachers a large part of their dues. It is a truly shameful record, and if education is not making the progress here it should be doing, we will not have to look far to find the cause thereof.—Times Democrat.

The showing made before the Judiciary Committee of the House, the other day, reveals the fact that the School Board of this city is indebted to the public school teachers for the years 1880, 1881, 1882, 1884 in the sum of $155,000. If that is not "a truly shameful record," we can not conceive of anything shameful! Teaching, when properly done, is the hardest kind of work and merits the very best pay. The cheapest thing a man or woman ever obtains is a good education, no matter how much money it costs. Our "record" on this subject is not only "truly shameful," but it presents our State and city as acting unjustly toward a class of meritorious and self-sacrificing public servants! Are any other public officers as far behind in their salaries?

Emperor Frederick.

One of the saddest cases in history is that of the Emperor Germany, just deceased. bout three months ago he ascended the throne. He was a man in the full maturity of his intellectual powers. He had been reared and trained for the government of one of the greatest empires of modern times. He had proved his ability to successfully handle large bodies troops in the greatest war of age. He was well equipped, every sense, to make a successful civil ruler. But he came the throne with the hand of death upon him, and after three months' heroic struggle he has gone down beneath the power of last enemy. On last Friday, in the midst of his weeping family, he passed into the great future. He is succeeded by his son, under the title of William The new Emperor is twenty-nine years of age.

Report of Visiting Committee.

The Methodist District High School, located at Black Hawk, Miss., closed its last annual session on Tuesday night, June 12, Rev. Prof. B. P. Patterson, assisted by Misses Belle Foster and Jennie Askew, have done good work during the past session. They have succeeded in enrolling forty-two names. The examinations showed that the boys and girls have made progress, some of them rapid progress. The written examination lasted two days. On Sunday, June 10, Rev. J. S. Oakley, former pastor at Black Hawk, preached a very appropriate sermon on the text—"Set thine heart toward the highway." Monday was the day for the public examination of the classes, and eye and ear witnesses seemed to be pleased. Monday night the little folks had a concert, and the verdict was, they did well. Tuesday was commencement day proper. The advanced pupils competed for the prize in declamation, and the audience was highly entertained while the boys and girls aired their eloquence. The morning exercises were made very interesting by the delivery of two eloquent speeches, which were pronounced fine specimens of oratory. The concert, Tuesday night, was enjoyed by the vast throng of people who were crowded into the hall. Two medals were given—one for the best declamation, the other for the best English report. Harry Estes, Jr., captured the first, and Walter Brewer the second.

Prof. Patterson has resigned to go into another field of labor in the church of God, and now has a splendid opportunity for the energetic professional teacher to do great good for a great people and a deserving people. This is emphatically a Christian school.

Black Hawk has maintained a moral good name through all the years of her past history, in times of war and years of peace, when prosperity smiled or adversity frowned, and God alone can tell how much this school has contributed to this result. The property, teachers, trustees, except one, most of the patrons and pupils are Methodists. This school ought to be liberally supported by the people who live near Black Hawk. It is a fine place to prepare our boys and girls for college. The Methodists of Mississippi must live up to the interests of Christian education.

We have always known that our paper was a very popular one wherever it circulated in this mundane sphere, but had no idea of its popularity in the celestial sphere, until the other day, there came an order enclosing $2 from the Moon, requesting us to send the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to a Starr. It was sent, and now the Moon and Starr and ADVOCATE mingle their light in peaceful complaisance.

We take pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of the North Texas Female College in this paper. It is under the management of Mrs. L. A. Kidd, so long connected with Whitworth College and so favorably known to many of our readers.

The fact that an editor puts one article in and leaves another over does not mean, necessarily, that the one left over is inferior to the other. In the editor's judgment, but, being compelled to choose between the two, he holds over the one which will damage least by reason of delay. Correspondents sometimes complain at the delay in the publication of their articles, but an editorial experience of a week or two would open their eyes to the fact that when a newspaper is full nothing more will go in—until another week.

STUBBLE OR WHEAT? A Story of More Lives than One. By S. Rovard Hall. Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 48 West 23d street, New York. D. 16mo., cloth, $1 25—sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of price.

The purpose of this book is to face the tide of pessimism that is sweeping through our literature, and ask men to listen to both sides of the question. The plan of the book is to tell a simple domestic story and show the outcome of a life modelled on the pessimistic philosophy; and how, under ordinary circumstances, an earnest nature will be led who adopts this as the guiding influence of his life; the inevitable trend of its teachings. In contrast to the story of the writer's friend, we are shown the lives of others interwoven with his, affected by the same circumstances, and each one led to look on life according to the source from which he seeks his light. The story of the young man's life, around which the main incidents of the book cluster, is carried on through school and college and after graduation. Incidentally the methods of discipline in different colleges, and the question of college athletics, are warmly debated in a way to interest college men. The exhibition of the pessimist's theory, contrasted with that of a sound Christian philosophy, suggests the answer to the question of the title: which makes of life a field of barren stubble, and which a harvest of ripened grain.

THE HEART OF THE CREEDS: Historical Religion in the Light of Modern Thought. By Arthur Wentworth Eaton. P. Pattegin's Sons, New York; Eaton, 159 Canal-street, New Orleans. Price, $1.

This book seems to have been written by an Episcopal clergyman who holds to the Nicean creed. There are nine chapters, treating of God, Man, Christ, the creeds, the Bible, the church, the sacraments, the liturgy and the future life. The author evidently belongs to that class of thinkers who would free with the Bible, interpreting it as it may suit the fancy. The confusedness with which its history is turned into myth or allegory is amazing. The author holds the same view of the doctrine of the Trinity as the late James Freeman Clarke enunciates in his book—"Ten Great Religious of the World." After a careful reading of this book, we incline to the opinion that it has pretty thoroughly taken all the heart out of the creeds.

Endowment for Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: Please open a column in the ADVOCATE for subscribers to the Endowment Fund of Centenary College. Head the list with the name of Bishop J. C. Keener for $100; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Taylor, $100 (jointly). The plan for the endowment of the college is a very simple one. It is this: Anyone giving their note for any amount can have four years to pay it in, without interest, and in case of death the note is not collectable. As fast as the notes fall due, they are to be paid and the money turned over to the Board of Trustees, to be safely invested as a permanent endowment fund.

Now, will not one thousand Methodists and friends of Centenary College give their notes for $100 each, to be paid in four annual installments for the endowment of the college? Come, friends, do not all speak at once, but steadily and quickly until the $100,000 is raised. Send to me at Forest, Miss., and I will send you the blank notes to be filled out.

The trustees have elected Rev. W. L. C. Humphett, D. D., president, and he has an able and well-qualified faculty at his side to help him. We trust the college has tided over its worse difficulties, and will speedily be on the highway to prosperity. Good work was done the past session in the way of education and the religion of Christ. Let every student return and bring one student with him. Let each preacher be sure and send one student; if he is not able to pay his tuition, pay it for him by raising it from his members. If the preachers of the two patronizing Conferences would do that for one year, we will bring back the college to its former power and usefulness and the agent could reclaim the college in less than five years. Come, friends, what say you?

P. A. JOHNSTON,
Agent Centenary College.

Seashore District.

The outlook on Seashore district is encouraging. Second round finished. The laborers pretty well adjusted to the work in this part of the vineyard and doing just work, and just about as much in the main as they are able to do. And I have just been a little beyond my borders. I attended the closing exercises at Norvilla Collegiate Institute, Greensburg, La. Under the guidance of that highly enlarged Christian gentleman, Prof. C. F. Emery, the institute is flourishing. It is doing a good work among the rising generation of Greensburg and surrounding country. I met a lady there that, perhaps, had passed her fiftieth birthday. She told me her father was named Thomas S. West. I told her I was willing to call her sister. At Amite I met Rev. Dr. West, from the North. We tried to trace up a kinship. I told him my very great-grandfather was named Adam. He said his was the same, so we called each other brother. He said, though a Presbyterian, he was not a Woodrowrite. The people at Amite seem much pleased with their new preacher, Bro. Keen. I took tea with him; had the pleasure of meeting his queen.

They guarantee perfect satisfaction or money refunded.

If your druggist hasn't PISO'S remedies, send to the manufacturers and get them direct. See advertisement.

To Our Subscribers.

The very low offers found in our club list, and the special offers sent out in circular form from time to time, are far below the usual rates given by newspapers, and have been made for the benefit of subscribers. The agent gets no commission, and subscribers taking advantage of these offers should see that the agent is fully paid all postage fees. To all of our patrons who have received notice of expiration of subscription we would request that they immediately forward reply in the directed envelope.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit-raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

An Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

The Methodist Protestant General Conference changed one word in the eighth article of faith, as follows: "We have no power to do good works pleasant and acceptable to God without the grace of God preventing us." In place of the word preventing, the word enabling was substituted. That is a sensible change. What is the use to hold on to words which to-day mean the opposite of what they once meant? The word "prevent" means now just the opposite of what it did when used in formulating the articles of faith.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

That settles it! I am opposed to "trusts," said the editor, when the mucilage formed a "trio" on his table.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

A QUEER LITTLE WOMAN.

BY EMMA C. DOWD.

There's a queer little, dear little woman,
The smallest in all the town,
With her tiny green head, her bodice of red,
And her cream-colored, wrinkled gown.

Her household hangings are velvet,
Crimson, and blue, and gold,
And a mild perfume fills her wee, wee room
With more sweets than it can hold.

But I pity this poor little woman,
Though her home with beauty is rife,
For through cold and heat, with imprisoned feet,
She must stay there all her life.

"Who is this strange little creature?"
I'll whisper it low in your ear:
Pull the petals apart from a pansy's heart—
You will find her there, my dear.

—Youth's Companion.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy twelve years old; and my dear aunt, who lives in New Orleans, has sent me a beautiful watch for my birthday gift, and written me such a lovely letter, I thought I would send you a copy of it to publish for the benefit of all the little boys who read your paper. The ADVOCATE comes to our house every week, and we like it very much.

GEORGE B. AUGUSTUS.

MACON, Mississippi.

(Copy of the Letter.)

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana.

Dearest George: You are now getting to be old enough to be reasonable, and to appreciate the value of time; and in order that you may know that I am watching your growth and rapid advance towards the period when you will be held accountable for the way you spend your time, I send you a watch as a birthday gift. Improve your time, my darling boy; be true and brave and try to perform the duties assigned you with faithfulness and pluck. Don't be a trifler that your parents can not trust. Try to make them happy, and let them have the satisfaction of seeing you endeavor to do the things they require of you with right, noble and obedient spirit. Scorn a lie, and resolve that you will be such a boy now as will be obliged to turn out a good and honorable man. God bless you.

Your affectionate aunt,

A. E. H.

MRS EDITOR: Please allow me the privilege of writing a few words. I hope your readers will not criticise this, as it is my first attempt. I feel that I have nothing to say to interest any of your readers. I never was very much interested in foreign missions until a few Sundays ago. Our preacher preached a sermon on foreign missions. I became very much interested in it. Then I have heard so many people say they did not believe in foreign missions, so I began to think it was nothing, until I heard the preacher preach about it. I hope at the end of the nineteenth century there will not be an unconverted person in the land. We have no Sunday-school or prayer meeting here. My father is dead. I am eleven years old. Our preacher's name is Bro. R. Selby. Everybody is very well pleased with him. I will ask which is the longest and shortest verses in the Bible? I will close. I hope to see my letter in print soon. Yours respectfully,

LIDA V. BARBEE.

MARTIN, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: This is my first attempt to write to your good paper. Mamma takes the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I like to read it, especially the cousins' letters. I am going to school to my aunt, Miss Ella Herring. I like to go. I study spelling, geography, grammar, history, arithmetic and fifth reader. I am eleven years old. We have preaching the first and third Sunday, and prayer meeting Wednesday night. Our pastor is Rev. Mr. Munholland. We have Sunday-school every Sunday. Our superintendent is Mr. J. E. Morris. My teacher is Mrs. M McLain. I have three sisters and two brothers. I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket. With good wishes to the ADVOCATE, I am,

Your little friend,

LIZZIE HUTSON.

Pure and Manly.

Gen. Robert E. Lee was a thoughtful boy, for his mother had taught him to practice self-denial and self-control, and to be economical in expending money. His father's death, when the boy was but eleven years of age, made him a "little man." He did the marketing, managed outdoor affairs, and looked after the comfort of his invalid mother. As soon as school closed for the noon recess he rushed away from the frolicsome boys, and hurried home to arrange for his mother's daily ride. Young as he was, he carried her to the carriage, arranged the cushions, and seating himself by her side, tried to entertain her, gravely reminding her that the ride would fail to benefit her unless she was cheerful.

"Robert is both a son and a daughter to me," the mother used to say.

He was the most methodical of managers, and the neatest of housekeepers. Unlike many boys, he did not think it beneath him to attend to details, or to do little things with as much carefulness as if they were large. While studying conic sections, he drew diagrams on a slate. Though he knew the one he was drawing would be rubbed out to make room for another, he drew it with as much accuracy and neatness as if it were to be engraved.

After his return from the Mexican War, his wife on opening his trunk found every article of clothing he had taken with him, and a bottle of brandy, which had been put in for medicinal use, unopened.

He never drank brandy or whisky, and rarely a glass of wine; and he never used tobacco. To apprehend the meaning of this fact, and its powerful illustration of the lad's self control, one must recall the rollicking life and drinking customs of Virginia during Gen. Lee's boyhood and youth.

During a school vacation, he was a guest in a country house, where the host, a fascinating gentleman of culture, lived a gay, wild life. Young Robert, who had been trained to self-control and self-denial, was shocked. He made no comment on what he saw, but he refused to join in the revels.

The unspoken rebuke brought to his bedside, the night before his departure, the penitent host. The youth's abstinence had shamed him, and he, a man of the world, came to confess to his youthful guest sorrow for the wild life he was leading.

Earnestly he warned him to beware of acquiring drinking habits, and urged him to persist in his temperate course of life. On leaving him, the host promised he would try to reform.

Yet this methodical, self-controlled, affectionate, serviceable boy was no "goody." He was the son of "Light Horse Harry" of the Revolution, and inherited his father's martial spirit. He chose the army for his profession, and friends and relatives approved his choice.

He entered West Point at the age of eighteen, graduated second in his class, and during the four years of cadet life he did not receive a demerit mark for any breach of rules or neglect of duty. He avoided tobacco and intoxicating liquors, never uttered a word to which a woman might not have listened, and never did a deed which his mother could not have approved.

Lads who think it effeminate to be good, and manly to be bad, are asked to harmonize their notions with the pure, noble boyhood of Gen. Robert E. Lee.—Exchange.

To one in need it is a blessed thing to receive; yet the Bible tells us that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." There may be no virtue in simply receiving; but giving with the proper motive is always a virtue. He who helps others not only improves his own character, but also promotes his own happiness. He may be happier in affording the help than they are in receiving it.

NIGHT TRANSPLANTING.—It is claimed by some that trees, if transplanted at night, will do better than if reset in the daytime. We know that the sun has an influence upon certain plants and flowers, but to what extent it affects trees is not definitely known.

A party who desired to ascertain whether or not there is any difference between daylight and night planting, transferred ten cherry trees while the same were in bloom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon, and planting a tree every hour until one o'clock in the morning, and the result would indicate that the dark hours are better for the work than the light. Those transplanted during the day shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted in the dark maintained their condition fully.

He did the same with ten dwarf trees, after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the day shed their fruit; those transplanted during the night perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of those trees he removed some earth with the roots.—American Farmer.

A WORD FOR BANANAS.—The banana has a high recommendation as an article of food because of its nutritious character. One authority announces that one pound of this fruit has more nutriment than three pounds of meat or as many pounds of potatoes, while as a food it is said to be in every sense superior to wheat bread. The natives of the West Indies and other tropical countries subsist largely upon them and find them, as chemists do, a food containing a large amount and variety of nutriment. A friend of the writer makes them a special and exclusive article of food when he has work requiring considerable and particular attention and accuracy at a time when a regular meal and other food would weaken the action of the mind. He finds that the banana in such case digests easily and makes no diminution of mental concentration, while, at the same time, the required sustenance of mind and body is obtained.—Good Housekeeping.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may be quite so rapid as in others; but, by persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials.

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving various medicines a fair trial without benefit, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I used two bottles, healed the sore, and, without any other medicine, I recovered my health."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Hot Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly. My mother and sister were similarly afflicted. In the spring of 1886, Dr. Tyron, of Dallas, Texas, recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continued its use for five months. I took it faithfully, and not had a blemish upon me for the last three months."—F. B. Wood, 5 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my head, did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse, until it became almost unbearable. During a part of this time, disease of the stomach and liver increased so much that I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the disease disappeared and I was entirely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. WALKER—CHARLES M. WALKER was born in Mecklenburg county, Va., January 18, 1817, and moved with his parents to Clarke county, Miss., in 1833, where he died of consumption, March 4, 1888. Bro. Walker was an invalid for much of the time during his early life. After being in Mississippi for several years he returned to Virginia, hoping that a change of climate would improve his health. After remaining there one year, he came back to Mississippi. While in Virginia he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his conversion was clear and satisfactory. He often spoke of his conversion, referring to it with delight. On his return to Mississippi he engaged in business at Enterprise, Clarke county, and on April 8, 1872, was married to Miss Mamie Lyerly, with whom he lived happily until God called him to his reward. His wife, three children and aged mother survive him, mourning their irreparable loss. He was their stay and support. They looked upon him for many comforts. Bro. Walker was a good business man, especially so with his laborers and employees; a good master, wanting every one to be justly treated; always kind and generous to the poor. He will be missed very much in the community where he lived.

Bro. Walker was a very frail man; he had been a sufferer nearly all his life; was never free from a cough. He was taken down last October with pneumonia, and in December had a relapse a little; then in January he was confined to his bed again. His sufferings were great, but he endured them with much patience and fortitude, often expressing anxiety for the welfare of those who visited and nursed him. He expressed a willingness to meet death, or any of the future without fear, although he wanted to live for the loved and who were so dependent upon him. May the God of all comfort and sustain the devoted grief-stricken wife, uphold and bless the heart-broken mother, and may the great Shepherd "temper the wind to the shorn lambs!"

D. C. LANGFORD.

TANNER—Mr. J. B. TANNER was born in Madison county, Ala., October 26, 1836, and died at his residence, Chicot, in St. Landry parish, La., March 23, 1888, aged forty eight years. His disease was consumption. Several years his experience with it was bitter, until he was brought down into the valley and shadow of death. Death from earth has placed him beyond disease and afflictions. Death, which it is regarded as a great evil, is an angel of mercy. He was converted at his own residence, and on the second Sabbath in May, 1886, he walked seven miles to the Methodist Church, where he joined and remained a faithful member until death. The writer had the pleasure of visiting him several times during his illness. And I always came away feeling, as the wise man says, that it better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting, for in death had lost its sting, but seemed to say, The righteous suffer here the sweeter rest above. He died like an infant going to sleep. With a sadness that makes the better, we meditate on this mysterious of beauty and pain, of unselfish and suffering, of love and sorrow, of suffering and resignation. Providence conspired with grace, in our loving Father's own strange and mysterious way, to fit a soul for the Interior of the saints in light. His wife and little son weep most because they will miss him most.

WILLIAM M. FULTON.

BROOK—GROVER BROOK, little son of G. and E. D. Brook, was born January 21, 1887, and died, of thrush, about three weeks' very severe suffering, June 3, 1888, being at the time of his death one year, three months and eleven days old. Little Grover was a sweet little boy, too good for earth's sorrows, so God took him to live with the angels. No effort was done for the little sufferer that kind hands and a skillful physician could do, but all to no effect. God's sustaining grace be with the dear brother and sister in this sad bereavement, is the prayer of their pastor.

WIMBERLY—J. L. WIMBERLY was born in Twigs county, Ga., September 30, 1826. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1866; died at his residence, in Bleuville parish, April 13, 1888. Bro. Wimberly was confined to his room the greater part of eleven months. His disease was of a lingering nature, yet he never murmured. He believed that these light afflictions that are but for a season will work out for us a far more and exceeding weight of glory. Bro. Wimberly loved his church. He was truly Methodistic. He was an able and willing supporter of the church. His talents and means were all consecrated to Christ. He was a wise counselor, a safe man, a disciple indeed in whom there was no guile—and, as a matter of course, died in full assurance of a glorious immortality. Surely a father in Israel has left us. But why should we weep? Will we not meet again? Yes, if we follow his example and trust in his Savior. Bro. Wimberly leaves a large family of grown sons and daughter, a widow (his second wife) and two baby boys. May the grace of God sustain them in the hour of trouble and enable them to meet him in heaven!

LOFTEN—ISAAC LOFTEN, a citizen of the parish of Red River, La., was born in the State of South Carolina on March 29, 1813; passed away on April 19, 1888, being seventy-five years and ten days old. He moved from South Carolina to Georgia, from Georgia to Louisiana. He was married, April 13, 1836, to Miss E. H. Dupree. They were blessed with twelve children—eleven of whom have gone to the glory land; the only surviving daughter being Mrs. Breeder, now residing in Texas. Bro. Isaac Lofton was a man of executive energy; he was benevolent to the poor, a kind husband, and an affectionate father. He professed faith in our blessed Redeemer, and was baptized and received in the Congregational Methodist Church on March 31, 1888, and expressed a bright hope up to his death. His faithful wife, one daughter and two grandchildren are the only near relatives to mourn his departure, with many friends. May the good Lord bless those weeping, sad hearts!

HALL.—CATHARINE HALL was born in Adams county, Miss., April 18, 1801, and died in Franklin parish, La., February 12, 1888. She was a member of the Baptist Church for forty years. For six years she had been a confirmed invalid, leaving her bed but once in that time. She was thirty years a widow. From wealth she had been reduced to extreme poverty; but in sickness and health, "in poverty's vale, or abounding in wealth," she ever exemplified the religion of Jesus by a cheerful submission to the divine will, and a ready obedience to the divine command.

Official Railway Guide.

An article on "Bradshaw's Railway Guide," in the Cornhill Magazine, which we copy in full in another column, says: "An ordinary page of a novel contains about five and twenty lines, each line holding from eight to ten words; so each page might be set down roughly as containing say three hundred words. But a page of Bradshaw contains some eighty lines, each line having about forty characters; the whole therefore displays about three thousand characters, and is therefore equivalent to some ten pages of the novel. Four hundred pages of the guide would be equivalent to, say four thousand pages of a novel, and as an ordinary novel 'runs' to three volumes of three hundred pages each, this amount will be found to contain the matter of some twelve octavo volumes. There are besides sixty pages of advertisements, equivalent at least to a couple of volumes more."

The May issue of the OFFICIAL RAILWAY GUIDE contains five hundred and fifty-eight pages of maps and time-tables, of which number one hundred and two pages are filled with maps; there being eight maps of two pages, fifty-six of one page each, twenty-one of a half-page each, and the remainder in odd sizes. Four hundred and fifty-six pages are occupied by time-tables or other similar matter. Each page in the GUIDE contains a little over two and a quarter times as much matter as a page of Bradshaw. There being fifty-six more pages of time-tables in the OFFICIAL GUIDE than in Bradshaw's, our book is a little over two and a half times as large as that publication. The time-table pages of each issue are therefore equivalent to thirty of the octavo volumes of which Bradshaw's is equivalent to twelve.

The entire number of pages in the May issue of the OFFICIAL GUIDE is seven hundred and thirty, and these are equivalent to within a small fraction of fifty of the same octavo volumes. "The twelve months' numbers of the Official Guide are therefore equivalent to the issue of two octavo volume novels, of three hundred pages each, for every working day throughout the entire year.

In addition to the OFFICIAL GUIDE there is also published at this office the pocket edition of the same, called the "Travelers' Ready-Reference Guide," popularly known as "The Red Book," which has two hundred and seventy-four time-table pages, each page containing just fifty per cent. more type than a page of Bradshaw's Guide. The amount of matter in "The Red Book" is therefore a trifle greater than the contents of Bradshaw, disregarding the size of the type used.

Atmospheric Strata.

The tendency of the air to form strata of different density and of different temperature is often indicated by a column of smoke rising through the still morning air to a certain height, and then spreading out as a cloud. Naturally the warmer air, being the lighter, will be above the heavier cold air; but as the atmosphere gets all its heat from the surface of the earth, the warmed air is at first beneath.

It takes more force to break up these layers of air and start currents of circulation than is popularly supposed. This will be discovered by those who have occasion to be abroad on country roads in the early morning. Driving into a thick wood, or even under the lee of woodland, they will, on a chilly August morning, suddenly come into a warm streak clearly left over from the heat of the day before. It does not rise and give place to the colder air; though it is sensibly lighter.

Some observations made on the east coast of Greenland by the German Arctic Expedition, in February of 1870, yielded most interesting results. The first report is from an elevation of nine hundred and eighteen feet. At that height the temperature was a fraction more than twenty-five degrees below zero, while, at the level of the sea close by, the thermometer indicated at the same time a temperature of about twenty-eight and one-half degrees above zero.

Here was a difference of almost fifty-four degrees within less than a thousand feet elevation, and the warmer air was beneath. In this instance there was a strong north wind blowing at the top of the mountain, no sign of which was had below.

Another observation, made on the fifteenth of the same month, is of interest when taken in connection with the one mentioned above. In this case, at a height of more than one thousand nine hundred and sixty feet, the temperature was found to be twenty-seven degrees above zero. Below it was near zero.

Here, the difference in elevation was double what it was in the former case, the difference in temperature half as great, but now the colder air is at the bottom. Nothing is said as to the wind at the time.

A comparison of the two observations, however, will show a decided stratification of the air in high latitudes. Such an arrangement over deserts is shown by mirage and other phenomena.—Youth's Companion.

PAPER BOTTLES.—Bottles for holding spirits and acids are now made of paper. The glued paper is rolled by machinery into such a tube as is required, and the tube is cut up into suitable lengths. The tops and bottoms, of wood or paper, are cemented in, and necks are added when required. The interior of the bottles are then lined with a heated fluid composition that sets hard and will resist acids and spirits. The bottles are practically unbreakable, have a minimum of weight, and require no packing material in transit. The manufacture is said to be carried on extensively in Chicago and has been introduced in England.

We have long had paper boxes, barrels, and car wheels, and more recently paper nails, wash basins, and other vessels; but now comes a further evolution of paper in the shape of paper bottles, which are already extensively used for containing such substances as ink, bluing, shoe dressing, glue, etc., and they would seem to be equally well adapted for containing a large variety of articles.

They are made by rolling glued sheets of paper into long cylinders, which are then cut into suitable lengths, tops and bottom are fitted in, the inside coated with a waterproof compound, and all this done by machinery almost as quickly as one can count. They are cheaper and lighter than glass, besides being unbreakable, and consequently very popular with consumers, while the fact that they require no packing material, and are clean, handy, and economical, commends them to manufacturers. Unlike glass, they can be manufactured and shipped at all seasons; and, being made by machinery, the supply is independent of labor troubles, which are additional advantages to manufacturers who use bottles.—Science of Health.

The Priestly Benediction.

We have two special benedictions in the Bible, the priestly and the apostolic. The first is recorded in Numbers vi, 24-26; the second in II Corinthians xiii, 14. In the first the word "Lord" is repeated three times. But though the same name, yet it is not the same. There is a little mark under it called the "accent," and this is different in each case; the first is a curve like our comma, the second is a v half inverted, the third is a diminutive s. As the old Hebrews studied that benediction, how they must have longed to pierce the mystery hidden under that change of accent! "Is the Lord who blesses and keeps, the Lord who makes his face shine and is gracious, and is he also the Lord who lifts up his countenance upon us and gives us peace?" The letters seem to teach this; and yet the accents seem to distinguish the one from the other. In the apostolic benediction the mystery is revealed: There it is the grace of Christ, the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost. And there is another noteworthy resemblance in those two benedictions. The priestly represents God the Father as blessing and keeping. The apostolic tells of his love. Both refer to his providential care and goodness. The priestly represents God with the second accent, or God the Son, as gracious; and the apostolic tells of the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. Through him comes mercy to the sinner. The priestly represents God with the third accent, God the Holy Ghost, as giving peace; and the apostolic tells of the communion of the Holy Ghost, of his sweet indwelling as our Comforter. Thus in both benedictions we have the triune Jehovah blessing the penitent and trusting soul in the three-fold work of providence, redemption and sanctification. How wonderfully were the glorious doctrines of the new dispensation foreshadowed in the old!—Interior.

Keep your troubles to yourself, and do not publish them abroad. Especially avoid making them known to strangers who know nothing of you, and who, of course, feel no interest in your affairs. Whatever troubles or difficulties you have, communicating them to others will not remove them. Sometimes it is proper, in case of doubt and perplexity, when a person hesitates as to the course he should pursue, to privately and in confidence consult a true and tried friend, on whose judgment he can rely, and who will regard the confidence reposed in him as a sacred trust. This you may sometimes do prudently and profitably. But do not make a confident of everyone. A man who can not keep his own secrets, can not expect others to keep them for him. And, then, the publication of our troubles, instead of relieving them, very often makes them worse. It is a comfort to know that there is one Friend to whom we may take our most secret trouble, to whom we may make known our every sorrow, and who can comfort us in our deepest affliction, and who has promised to guide us by his counsel. Instead of pouring our complaints into the ears of men, let us go to our Heavenly Friend and cast our burden and care on him.—Methodist Recorder.

Christ came to make known to the world God's mercy and love. There are not wanting evidences of benevolent designs in nature and what men call providence; but there is nothing that teaches more than submission to the divine will therein expressed. But Christ's gospel was of God's love for men reaching down from heaven to lift them out of sin and degradation into holiness and eternal happiness. This is the distinguishing mark of Christianity. It has been too little apprehended in the past, but the Christ of the gospels is being recognized as the friend of humanity, and it is compelling a reconstruction of the old fatalistic theologies.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:

Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address.

For The Nervous The Debilitated The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senator Chandler has stated that he would not call up the resolution to investigate the Louisiana election for two or three weeks to come, and that he would give notice to the Democrats

Indianapolis had a $100,000 fire on June 13.

At Chancellorsville, Va., the monument that marks the spot where Stonewall Jackson received the wound from which he died was dedicated, June 14, with imposing ceremonies.

Mr. Matsu, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States from Japan, is in Chicago, en route from San Francisco to Washington.

The south-bound Missouri, Kansas and Texas express was robbed, June 15, in Indian Territory. Seven robbers boarded the cars, shot and robbed the mail agent, killed a passenger and escaped.

The International Typographical Union, which was in session in Kansas City, Mo., adjourned June 16.

Mr. Randall, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, reported the sundry civil appropriation bill to the House, June 16. The total estimates submitted for the bill amounted to over $31,000,000, but the bill appropriates $22,700,000 against $22,555,000 in round numbers for the current fiscal year.

The Denver excursion party, composed of eighty representative merchants of this city, reached Fort Worth, June 17.

On June 18 two monuments commemorative of the late war were dedicated near Richmond, Va.—one at Emmanuel Church cemetery over the remains of seventy-six Confederate dead, and the other on the spot where the Confederate cavalry leader, Gen J. E. B. Stuart, fell.

The town of Dubuis, in the northern lumber regions of Pennsylvania, was almost wiped out of existence, on the eighteenth instant, by a conflagration. Nearly 300 houses are in ruins and 5,000 people are homeless.

The members of the Naval Committee have had urged upon them the importance of having a navy yard and dock established on the government property on the right bank of the Mississippi just below New Orleans, and the naval appropriations bill which is nearly ready to be reported to the House will contain an item of $50,000 for the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the President to make investigations as to the most suitable location on the gulf for the establishment of such government work.

The Republican National Convention assembled at Chicago, June 19.

FOREIGN.

Several members of the Irish National League have been arrested in Ireland. The arrests were the result of secret inquiries.

The Russian government refuses to take part in the exhibition to take place in Paris, next year.

Mr. Parnell gave a dinner in London, June 13, in honor of his colleagues lately in prison in Ireland. Mr. O'Brien was the chief absentee.

At San Diego, in the state of Nuevo Leon, Mexico, June 13, a railroad train plunged through a bridge and two Americans were killed.

Lord Roseberry, in a speech at Inverness, on June 14, said he thought that a local government measure ought to precede home rule for Scotland, but it was unwise to associate that question with Irish home rule.

United Ireland threatens to circulate for signatures a petition to the church Bishop O'Dwyer of Limerick for his course in connection with the papal authorities asking them to remove rescript.

Emperor Frederick of Germany died on June 15. All Europe tendered consolation and sympathy. The son of the dead Emperor succeeds him, under the title of William II.

Emperor William has issued an address to the army, appealing to memory, tradition and patriotism. Most of the Paris papers regard Emperor William's order to the army as having a warlike tone, contrasting singularly with the rescripts of Emperor Frederick.

The Novoe Vremya, of St. Petersburg, predicts a cessation of the uncertainty which has prevailed during the last six months and a decisive settlement of the pending questions, notably that of the continuance of the peace league.

The Neue Freie Presse publishes a letter from Prof. Virchow, dated Berlin, March 25, dealing with the attacks upon Dr. Mackenzie, wherein he declares that he (Dr. Mackenzie) with his great experience certainly agreed with the diagnosis of his German colleagues, and in concealing the nature of the malady from the Emperor acted in such a case. Deception in such circumstances, he adds, is a moral act.

The second mortuary service of the remains of the Emperor of Germany was called at the Friedrichskron castle June 17; Dr. Koegel, court chaplain, officiated. Emperor William, the Empress, the dowager Empresses Augusta and Victoria, all the members of the German imperial and royal families and the entire household were present.

The Pope will soon issue an important encyclical, dealing with the true and false liberty.

M. Floquet, president of the ministerial council, addressed the members of the municipality of Marseilles on June 16. He said it was the ambition of the government to effect internal progressive reform and maintain a peaceful policy abroad.

No foreign officers will be allowed to attend the Russian military maneuvers this year, and Russian officers have been forbidden to attend similar maneuvers abroad.

The "Felt Tooth Brush," manufactured by the Horsey Manufacturing Company, of Utica, N. Y., is meeting with an extensive sale. It is a thorough cleanser, and far superior to the bristle brush.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

The fare over the following roads—Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, and Mobile and Ohio—will be 1¾ cents per mile.

For further information address W. J. Hearin, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Price, keeper, Biloxi, Miss.

W. J. HEARIN, Pres.
J. G. GRANT, Cor. Sec.

The Sam Jones Camp Meeting begins August 17, and will continue about ten days. With two restaurants and additional dormitories commodious for the crowds, it is expected that perfect satisfaction will be given.

J. F. CASSELLS, Pres. Association.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888, on Topisaw Camp Ground, will commence on the second Friday (tenth) of August, 1888, and continue several days. The camp ground is delightfully situated on Topisaw Creek, nine miles east of Summit, Pike county, Miss. The public, and especially ministers of our denomination, are invited to attend.

R. H. PALOKE, Pres.
W. H. FLOWE, Sec.

The Providence Camp Meeting will begin July 26. All ministers are cordially invited to attend. Conveyance will be furnished from and to Hazlehurst every day during the meeting free of charge to ministers.

W. L. DANFIELD, P. C.

The established rule for thirteen years of Huntington Camp Meeting is to begin on Thursday before the full moon in August of each year. This year the time is the sixteenth of August, and will continue one week. The public, and especially ministers, are invited to attend.

E. P. LOCKWOOD, Pres.
J. W. M'NEIL, Sec.

IN MEMORY OF WILLIE AUGUSTUS ODOM.

(Born July 12, 1881; Died July 27, 1885.)

BY E. M. O.

Dearest Willie, God hath claimed thee—
Claimed our sweetest blooming flower;
Plucked thee from the hearts that loved thee,
Placed thee in his heavenly bower;
There to bloom more sweet than ever,
Wafting perfume to our hearts,
Offering sweetest consolation,
Saying, Death no sting imparts.

Darling Willie, heaven seems brighter
Since a starry crown you wear;
And the golden gate seems wider
Since thy form hath entered there.
Still we'll show thee, darling Willie,
How we loved our precious one,
And we'll meet thee up in heaven
When this troubled life is done.

Dearest Willie, mother loved thee—
Loved to press her lips to thine—
Loved to draw thee to her bosom,
That round her neck thy arms might twine.
Be with us, Angel Willie;
Let thy spirit hover near,
Breathe sweet words of consolation,
Let us feel that He is dear.

Farewell, Willie, till we meet thee
In the realms of heavenly bliss
Where we tune the golden harp-strings
For the angel that we miss.
Now I feel the music wafting,
Now I hear his precious voice;
Savior, keep our souls securely
Till we join his heavenly joys.

To the Rev. Dr. Abbey, of the Mississippi Conference.

Foreknowledge having always been the chief difficulty in the way of a theodicy that shall satisfy the human mind, the following thoughts are respectfully submitted to your theological criticism:

1. The foreknowledge of an event depends upon controlling its cause. This is the law of the human mind, which was made like the divine, and it is reasonable to suppose it to be universal.

2. Arminian theology relies upon the sophism that "the foreknowledge of an event does not cause it," when, so far as we can see, the foreknowledge of an event depends upon causing it or controlling its cause. If the fall of Adam was known at the creation, and the Creator, having such knowledge, did, nevertheless, make the man, it is impossible for the human mind not to attribute the evil in the world to the Great Cause, instead of the minor cause. It is useless to try to escape this conclusion; escape is impossible.

3. In making man like himself, God made it impossible for him to know how the delegated power would be exercised. Adam could not anticipate the divine will. Is it saying too much to assert that neither could God anticipate his will? God has nowhere said he knew Adam would fall, and why should theology attribute to him more than he has ever claimed? We are compelled to believe that God was perfectly sincere when he gave his law to Adam, and pronounced death as the penalty for disobedience, and that he confidently expected obedience. We can not for a moment entertain the belief that he gave the law and pronounced such sentence when he knew that Adam would violate it, and incur the dread sentence. We are compelled to resort to something more satisfactory than that "the foreknowledge of an event does not cause it." We can not believe that when God saw to what an awful degradation men fell, he affected to be sorry he had made man, if he knew all the time that man would do that very thing. The repentance of the divine Being in such case is preposterous. No. God truly repented having made man, and we are necessarily forced to conclude that had he known how man would act, he would not have made him. This is the common-sense view, from which there is no escape.

4. It is said by good authority that Adam was the most wonderful being whom God had made; for, while beings of every grade of excellence and power had been made, man alone was made in the divine image. It is impossible for us to form any correct notion of the wonderful beauty, power, excellence and glory of the man from whom the human race has descended; and we can estimate the extent of the fall only by the sacrifice which has been made for man's redemption. Man was certainly a free originating cause or creator, whose acts had their origin in him alone, and for which he is absolutely responsible. His fall was his act exclusively, which being non est at the creation, and not in the divine plan, could not have then been known except as a contingency against which it was necessary to provide. At the creation all future events possible; from any cause, whether man should fall or not, were clearly contemplated; but this does not prove that God knew Adam would fall. It is highly probable that since the fall God exercises more extensive interposition in human affairs than he would have done had man remained obedient. He raises up men and nations, and brings them to nought, to suit his own wise purposes. He has purposed the redemption of the world, and all his acts here are in furtherance of that grand consummation. We should not argue foreknowledge of the fall from his constant interference with men now. No doubt he is all the time abetting or thwarting human schemes, and arousing or restraining human wills, to effect his all-wise designs. Man could have remained free and governed himself; now he needs to be governed.

5. The prophecies of the Bible, which have been regarded as fatal to this scheme, may be classified as follows: Events which were divinely decreed are unconditionally foretold. All other predictions are conditional. We can predict the ruin of a man whom we see indulging grossly in evil habits. God can predict the event precisely to the very hour. We predict from our knowledge of the effects of sin. The divine prediction is based upon a perfect knowledge of the man's strength, and of the effects of sin. The Supreme Governor knows exactly when it will be right to arrest and punish the offender. Both predictions might be made, and yet fail of fulfillment; for who knows that the sinner will not accept the offered mercy, and turn and be saved? The Bible sustains this view of the prophecies. The fact that some conditional prophecies are complicated with unconditional, need not deter the theologian from attempting "to skillfully divide the word of truth." Better to be puzzled in unraveling the apparent mystery of a prophecy than to cut the Gordian knot, fall headlong into the sea of absolute foreknowledge, and charge our God with foolishness, in humbly and eloquently appealing, year and year, to his "stiff necked people" to turn and repent, when he knew, all the while, they would not.

6. To avoid the difficulty of foreknowledge some have resorted to the absurd theory that there is no past or future with God, but an eternal now. If this were true, the difficulty remains the same, and we are forced, by such theory, to regard time as a fiction, and that birth and death occur simultaneously. The planets do not revolve on their axis or in their orbits, and summer and winter are here at the same time. The fall of man and his creation were not separate, but occurred at the same moment. This would settle the Arminian doctrine quickly; would it not? Everything might be regarded as a fraud; for "falsum in uno, falsum in omne." Our very senses would be deceptions, all reasoning from the objective to subjective a baseless fabric, and we mistaken in our consciousness of any existence at all. A theory, indeed!

7. To those who shall read this with interest I beg to say: Remember that we are generally safe in reasoning a fortiori, and that such a course or method inevitably leads the mind to the conclusions herein made. The anti-foreknowledge doctrine leads to a full and correct understanding of man's responsibility, to a better understanding of the Scriptures, and to a correct appreciation of the sacrifice made for us by the Son of God. This doctrine does not limit the divine Being, for it is no limitation of him to say he can not do what he himself hath made impossible. I invite your closest attention to the proposition, "The foreknowledge of an event depends upon controlling the cause of it," to the view of the writer in regard to prophecy, and to the argument from the following statement:

Admitting Adam to have been a free, original cause, if the Great First Cause knew how this minor cause would operate, and yet caused it, who is responsible for the consequences? Does not such view reduce the universe to a mere drama, and man to the condition of a helpless actor, whose part was written down before he rehearsed it?

In Memoriam.

REV. T. J. HOGUE.

BY REV. S. J. DAVIES.

"When a good man dies earth is poorer and heaven is richer." The former more lonely and desolate, because the precepts and example of an upright life is no longer before it; the latter richer, because the light of that life beams there. So as we stand here in the visible presence of death, with his "mark upon each brow, his shadow in each heart," we glance backward along the track of this man's life now lying so still and silent before us and think upon his life. I realize that no eulogy on my part can add anything thereto, for out of the eternal silence that wraps him, he to-day speaks more eloquently to us than I am able to do.

I think, first, of the lessons he taught us—lessons of hopefulness, of courage, of energy, of patience and long-suffering. How faithfully he performed his duty in the various positions where he was placed, and in the different vocations which engaged his time and talents, let those who knew him best testify. If ever recreant to any trust, I never heard of it; if ever a failure anywhere, it was never known. To know him was to revere, to honor him, or—if I may use a truer, tenderer expression—to love him. A faithful, efficient minister of the gospel wherever sent, he was a living expression of this "power of God unto salvation." Consequently an impression was always made and a good report filed at the end of the Conference year. He was pre-eminently a useful man.

I think, again, of him as a father and husband; and here I pause, realizing how sacred is this circle. Like the prophet, when he saw the bush aflame with God, with bared head and unsandaled feet, I know I am upon holy ground. Let the faithful wife and daughter bear testimony, if any be desired, of how true and loyal he was there.

God called upon him to suffer. Through weary months and slowly moving weeks, through days of care and nights of pain, he fought disease and death. He fought, manfully he fought, bravely to repel their insidious assaults. He struggled with an unquenchable light beaming in his eyes, with an indomitable will and unconquerable purpose. It was, indeed, a Thermopolean conflict, for every physical energy died at its post. He fought until there was little left to fight for. It was a poor victory death won after all—a poor trophy of the physical man he bore away to his shadowy realm.

Thos. J. Hough to-day preaches to us his last sermon. Not in the resonant tones of a living voice, not with the culminating force of a logician's power, not with the well-chosen similes and choice diction of the rhetorician, nor with the pathos and mighty force of oratory; but from the everlasting silence, that shall wrap him until Christ shall call him from it, he speaks even more forcefully, more eloquently. He reaches hearts to-day and convinces men in their inner consciousness how potent for good is a well-spent life, how divine a thing it is to suffer and be strong. For the God who sent him has called him home, and he must needs bend over heaven's parapets to-day when he pronounces the benediction.

The poet's vision dawns upon me. He sees a great highway, broad, rough and stony. On either side the cliffs rear themselves upward, sheer and steep. Countless numbers are upon the way, all pressing toward the barrier gate over which is written, "The Way of Death." A pilgrim passes through—all must pass—and looking backward reads on the further side of the portal, "The Way of Life." So death to us is life to our dead if they, like us, be in Christ. "Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

"Because they rest, because their toil is o'er,
The voice of weeping shall be heard no more,
In the eternal city, neither sickness nor death nor dying,
For God shall wipe away all tears.
Rest—rest."

From Our Mission Rooms.

BY SECRETARY J. W. JOHN.

Bro. D. L. Anderson, presiding elder of Suchow district, China, writes: "The people are beginning to understand why we are here, and the door before us is constantly opening." "We very greatly need a building in Suchow, on our lot on Palace avenue. It would add greatly to our working facilities. But our great need is men. May a good number come out this fall!" The Board provided for the building. May its altar witness the conversion of multitudes! By October 10 one brother, who has been waiting for years, and, we trust, three others as deeply imbued with the missionary spirit as himself, will answer roll call at the China Mission Conference at Shanghai.

Rev. C. B. Mosely, of the Japan Mission, has been sick, and was compelled to take a sea voyage. He went over to Shanghai. Dr. Lambuth writes that he is improving, and will soon return to his post. He adds: "Bro. Waters is doing picket duty at the extreme west end of the Inland Sea."

Our China mail brings the "Statistics of Protestant Missions in China, December, 1887," from which we gather the following items: Societies at work in that field, 38. They report 489 men; 320 wives of missionaries; single women, 231, making a total force of 1,040—an increase over 1886 of 121. Native ordained ministers, 175; unordained native helpers, 1,316; communicants, 32,260—an increase of communicants, over 1886, of 4,260. Pupils in schools, 13,777. Methodism is well represented by six branches of the family, viz: Methodist Episcopal Church, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Wesleyan Methodist New Connexion, United Methodist Free Church, and Bible Christians. The Methodist Episcopal Church was first in the field, opening work in 1847. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, followed in 1848, and the Wesleyans in 1852. The aggregate report from these societies gives us the following: Missionaries, 71; wives, 50; single women, 33—total, 154. Native ordained ministers, 51; unordained native helpers, 201; communicants, 5,724. The China Inland Mission reports the largest force: Men, 123; wives, 52; single women, 90—total, 265. The American Presbyterian ranks next as to force, having 45 men, 34 wives; single women, 19—total, 98; but reports the largest membership, viz: 3,786.

Temperance in Mississippi.

BY W. C. BLACK, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: The temperance workers of Mississippi have long felt the need of more compact and thorough organization. We have been too much like an army fighting by regiments. This want of close organization lost us several counties during the local option contests of 1886. Realizing our lack at this point, the State Prohibition Executive Committee some months ago took initiatory steps toward supplying this desideratum. The sub-committee, having the matter in hand, have perfected a plan of organization. A State Prohibition Bureau has been organized, with headquarters in this city. The affairs of the Bureau are to be managed by a Board of Control, consisting of nine members, three from each of the chief temperance organizations of the State, viz: the State Prohibition Convention, the Good Templars, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The personnel of the Board, as at present constituted, is as follows: Dr. E. A. Rowan, Wesson; W. H. Patton, Shubuta; John A. Lewis, Meridian; W. C. Black, Meridian; J. B. Gambrell, Meridian; D. S. Harmon, Meridian; Mrs. M. M. Snell, Columbus; Mrs. W. T. Hurlbutt, Meridian; Mrs. H. B. Kells, Meridian. The officers of the Board are: W. C. Black, president; John A. Lewis, secretary and treasurer; and J. B. Gambrell, corresponding secretary. The revenues of the Bureau are to be derived chiefly from annual memberships at five dollars each. We hope to get, at least, a thousand annual memberships within the next three months. This will give us five thousand dollars. In addition to this we hope to receive donations in larger sums. With such a fund in hand we can secure speakers, procure literature, and do various other kinds of work that is much needed. We hope our friends throughout the State will at once rally to our support. Don't wait for a personal solicitation to contribute. Send your contribution at once to the treasurer, John A. Lewis, Meridian, and you will receive by return mail a certificate of membership in the Bureau. Friends of the temperance cause, it is important that you give us your hearty co-operation, and that promptly. Local option contests will be brought on in several counties during the summer. The enemy are wide awake and thoroughly organized; and if we play the part of the sluggard, we may expect reverses. There is no ground, however, for discouragement. Our greatest danger is not in the enemy, but in ourselves. What we have most to fear is sloth, indifference and over-confidence in our own ranks. While we are asleep the foe is secretly working among that element of our population which is always the source of danger in a crisis like this. Those of us who occupy a vantage ground for overlooking the whole field have indubitable evidences that the friends of the liquor traffic are seeking to build up a whisky party in the State through the agency of the ignorant and vicious colored vote. I say the ignorant and vicious colored vote, for the better class of the colored people are with us almost to a man. I have not the space to give, and it would hardly be best for me to give just now, the facts upon which I base this assertion as to the intentions of the liquorites. Suffice it to say, however, that there is no doubt about the matter. If the good people of the State are not willing to see corrupt men, who are tools of the liquor traffic, ride into office on the back of ignorance and vice, then it is high time for them to bestir themselves. Facts may be given in the near future that will be startling to many of our people. Papers friendly to the cause are requested to copy this.

Below is the Constitution of the Bureau.

CONSTITUTION OF MISSISSIPPI PROHIBITION BUREAU.

1. The location of the Mississippi Prohibition Bureau shall be Meridian, Miss.

2. The objects of the Bureau are to gather in and disseminate information concerning prohibition; to publish a paper devoted to the cause of prohibition; to effect a more perfect organization of the prohibition forces of the State, and especially to aid in prohibition contests throughout the State.

3. Any person may become an annual member of this Bureau by paying five dollars to the treasurer, and no discrimination shall be made against anyone on account of religion, sex, or politics.

4. There shall be a Board of Control, consisting of nine, elected annually, who shall have full power to manage all matters connected with the Bureau, and they shall serve until their successors are chosen. And they shall, from the members, select a president, a vice-president, a recording secretary and treasurer, and a corresponding secretary.

5. The Bureau shall publish annually a full report of all its transactions.

6. The Board of Control shall have power to adopt, from time to time, by-laws for their guidance, not inconsistent with this constitution.

Workmanship and Authorship Harmonize.

DR. BARBEE: From the earliest times precious treasures have been encased in beautiful and becoming caskets. You have not departed from the venerable custom in bringing out "The Problem of Methodism," by Rev. J. M. Boland, D. D. As a book, it will do to look at. It demonstrates what your workmen are capable of doing. Nothing superior in paper, typography, correctness and finish, have I seen. The workmanship and the authorship harmonize.

"The Problem of Methodism!" This is a momentous discussion, and it has been handled in a bold, frank, incisive way, with a temper as gentle as Fletcher's, and with a blade as keen. My only regret is that it had not been given to the church fifty years ago. I have had no other belief on the problem for forty years.

With care, and a prayerful frame, I have read every line, and indorse it as a whole. It must be read. It is a remarkable production. Read it will be. When I had reached the end of the second chapter I felt that if that one chapter could be issued as a tract, and sent over the church like leaves of autumn, it would not, could not, fail to produce blessed fruits. As I read on, I said and felt the same at the end of every chapter. The book will prove a great blessing to thousands of misled, tried, perplexed, yet faithful followers of Christ.

I especially entreat all our young ministers to read it, and to do so at once, and then spread it as far as practicable.—C. K. Marshall, in Nashville Advocate.

MOTTO.

BY MARGARET BOURNE.

Our years are crown'd with silver gray,
And on his gentle face
The golden lines of many a year
I reverently trace.

I gaze half sorrowful, half glad,
On each daily duty;
I learn looks with wistful questionings
Where sunset glory burns.

My other wears a crown of gold,
And with her eager eyes
She sees the future, bright and clear,
In radiant beauty rise.

While one looks back with longing gaze,
One forward looks in hope;
Life lies behind, before, beyond,
How limitless its scope!

THE GOLDEN CALF.

Exodus xxxii. 15-26.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Little children, keep yourselves from idols.—1 John v. 21.

TIME.—B. C. 1491, or B. C. 1300, according to Bunsen, in the month of July.

PLACE.—Mt. Sinai.

INTRODUCTION.

Without attempting the foolish and wrongful task of palliating the sin of making the golden calf, it is right that the matter should be placed in its true light. The prolonged absence of Moses had awakened peculiar fears in the people. They had seen him pass more than a month ago into the luminous cloud that covered the mount. "And the sight of the glory of Jehovah was like a devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel." What more natural than for those who waited, week after week, in unexplained solitude, within sight of this fire, to imagine Moses had been devoured by it? Their leader was gone, and the visible symbol of Jehovah was high up on the mountain-top, like "a devouring fire." They must have another leader.

15, 16. Moses turned ... went down from the mount—With Joshua, who had tarried patiently for him outside "the cloud of thick darkness." Two tables of the testimony ... in his hand—These tables were of stone, by which we are doubtless to understand a substance similar to that of the precious stones; beautiful and splendid in the highest degree, as well as durable, that it might correspond with the remaining articles of the tabernacle furniture. Written on both their sides—The two tables were probably designed to close together like the lids of a book, and by their being written on both sides is meant that their right and left-hand leaf or side were each of them to be occupied with letters. Tables were the work of God—That is, the preparation of the materials, the stony tablets, by which they were brought into a state suitable for receiving the purposed inscription, was as purely the work of Jehovah himself as the engraving of the characters which appeared upon them.

17. When Joshua heard the noise ... as they shouted—Often in descending this "the so-called "Hill of the Golden Calf," close by the spot whence the law was given), while the precipitous side of the ravine hid the tents from my gaze, have I heard the sound of voices from below, and thought how Joshua had said unto Moses as he came down from the mount: "There is a noise of war in the camp." A noise of war in the camp—The sounds that struck his ear were so different from those with which the camp had thus far been familiar, that he seems at once to have concluded that an attack had been made upon the host by some of the wandering tribes of the desert, and that what he heard was the cry or shout of onset, such as was usually made by an eager soldiery rushing into combat.

18. Not the voice ... that shout for mastery—The victor's shout. Neither ... the voice of them ... overcome—The cry of the vanquished. The noise of them that sing—That sing in alternate or responsive strains, one choir answering another, as the original properly implies. Moses does not tell Joshua of the divine communication that had been made to him respecting the apostasy of the people, but only corrects his impression by calling his attention to the kind of noise which they are making.

19. Saw the calf—This idol seems to have been the god Apis, the chief deity of the Egyptians, worshiped at Memphis under the form of a live ox, three years old. It was distinguished by a triangular white spot on its forehead and other peculiar marks. Images of it in the form of a whole ox or of a calf's head on the end of a pole were very common; and it makes a great figure on the monuments, where it is represented in the van of all processions, as borne aloft on men's shoulders. And the dancing—Dances and music were usual at the religious festivals of the Jews. Dancing, as a religious act, dates indeed from the earliest ages, and prevail in some countries even at this day. Very possibly the idea is not unfounded which traces such rites to an imitation of the heavenly bodies. Anger waxed hot—It is recorded as a high characteristic of Moses that he was pre-eminent in meekness. With all his gentleness and patience he could tolerate nothing that reflected or cast a stain upon the divine glory. His own insults and injuries, the ingratitude and disrespect shown to himself during his absence, he could easily pass by. But not so the offense committed against God. Cast the tables out of his hands ... brake them—Giving at once a terrible significance for all future time to the phrase, a broken law, and a sign of man's inability to keep the law given on Sinai. For both Moses and the people, though in different ways, were showing by their acts that the first use to which man puts God's law is to break it. Both tables were broken, for idolatry had been followed by licentiousness.

20. Took the calf ... burnt it ... ground it to powder—The stock of the idol, being probably of wood, was burned, and, with the gold, reduced to a powder. It is not likely that the gold was calcined by a chemical process. As to the precise manner in which the effect was produced in the present instance, we are not informed. The powder of malleable metals can be ground so fine as to resemble dust from the wings of a moth or butterfly; and these dust particles will float in water for hours, and in a running stream for days. Strewed it upon the water—Upon the brook which came out of the rock Horeb. Made the children of Israel drink—It is not certain that anything more was intended than to express in this manner his contempt of the idol, together with his abhorrence of the crime, and to remind them that "the backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways;" or, in other words, that they had rendered themselves liable to feel in their own persons the bitter consequences of their rebellion. He shames them by making clear to them the nothingness of their god, and humbles them by such a treatment of it; they are obliged even to devour their own god—a severe punishment for the idolaters.

21. Moses said unto Aaron—Who had been left in charge, and was responsible for this behavior of the people. What did this people unto thee—What force had they put upon him? What was the necessity under which he had acted? The sin of the people is charged upon Aaron, both because he did not resist and suppress their wicked suggestion by his counsel and by the authority which Moses had left in his hand which he should have done even with the hazard of his life. That thou hast brought so great a sin upon them—Moses, in grave irony, asks Aaron whether the people had offended him in any way to induce him to inflict such an injury on them as to yield to their request. In its results the apostasy of the golden calf affected the whole future history of Israel. It was an open and flagrant breach of the covenant so recently made with God, and for the time canceled it.

22. Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief—An emphatic mode of expression, indicating that they are, as it were, settled, sunk, immersed in evil or in sin. Yet how obvious, even to a child, that the perverseness of the people was no apology for the pusillanimity of their leader. Were they given to evil? So much the more needful was it for him to stem the torrent, and by inflexible firmness withstand the workings of their corruptions.

23. They said ... Make us gods which shall go before us—As the pillar of cloud had gone. They must away to that land of promise which presented in their imagination so bright a contrast to the bleak and barren wilderness in which they lay encamped. As for this Moses ... we wot not what is become of him—Whether he be not consumed by the fire in the cloud, or taken up to heaven, or conveyed away by God to some other place.

24. Whosoever hath any gold ... break it off—It was fitting to make it of such materials, for many of these ornaments, engraved with magic characters and consecrated to some idol, were worn as amulets. Thin plates of gold formed from these sufficed to coat over a wooden figure of Moloch, Apis, or possibly of the calf Mnevis. They gave it me—Whereby they showed both their madness upon their idols and their base ingratitude to their God, who had transferred these jewels from the Egyptians to them (Exodus xii. 35, 36), which, therefore, God upbraids them with. (Exodus xvi, 11, etc.) Cast it into the fire ... came out this calf—Not that he meant or thought to persuade Moses that the melted gold came out of the fire in the form of a calf by accident, without any art or industry of his, which was a ridiculous conceit and easily confuted; but only he conceals his own sin in the forming and graving of it, and lays the whole blame upon the people.

25. When Moses saw that the people were naked—There stood before him a number of men, fresh from their orgies, in a state of licentious attire, whom even his appearance and words had not yet sobered into quietness, shame, and repentance. Aaron had made them naked, etc.—They were stripped of their defense—to wit, of the favor and protection of God; by which alone they were secured from the Egyptians, and were to be defended against those many and mighty enemies toward whom they were about to march; and that, being thus disarmed and helpless, they would be a prey to every enemy.

26. Moses stood in the gate of the camp—The camp is supposed to have been protected by a rampart after the attack of the Amalekites. Who is on the Lord's side, let him come unto me—The Hebrew is finely impressive. The verb is omitted in the impassioned summons of the speaker: "Whosoever is for Jehovah—to me!" Though tender and loving as a woman, willing, indeed, to be blotted out of the book of God, if only the sin of his people might be forgiven, Moses had, on occasion, all the sterner attributes of a strong ruler of men. All the sons of Levi ... unto him—This can hardly be understood literally, as it is clearly implied Deut. xxxiii. 9 that some of the Levites were slain, and consequently that some of them were involved in the guilt of this transaction. By "all," therefore, we are to understand, perhaps, that all who did assemble were sons of Levi, and that of them there was a very large number. In a moment of widespread treason against the Supreme Governor, to whom allegiance has been sworn, it behooves the few bold and loyal men to strike promptly and resolutely for the cause of truth and order. Such faithfulness in the day of treachery wins the blessing from that Sovereign whom there is no possibility of either deceiving or resisting.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

We can not imagine Moses coming out of God's presence-chamber, bearing his very autograph in the sentences of his eternal will, without a thrill at such precious freightage; but it should thrill us more deeply to remember him who left "the bosom of the Father" and entered human life not merely to convey God's will, but to do it; and not merely to do it, but to die for those who could not do it.

We are very apt to interpret unusual sounds in the light of our predominant feeling: Joshua's ears translate every shout into a war-cry; Moses' ears into singing.

Our idolatry is whatever, or whomsoever, in our hearts we prefer to God.

The law says, "Thou shalt not kill;" Moses said, "Kill!" Human life is so precious as to be guarded by divine commandment; but truth and righteousness are more precious still, and innumerable lives have gone down in their vindication.

North Mississippi Conference Correspondence.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence of six weeks I am again at home, and will, with your permission, give to the readers of the ADVOCATE some jottings of travel and observation.

My labors during this time have been mostly in the Greenville district, which lies in the region known as the "Mississippi Valley," or "Great Delta." This whole country is rapidly developing from the wilderness state and is getting on a high plane of improvement, materially, morally and socially. It is traversed with railroads and other facilities for travel and transportation. Townsare building and farms are developing in every direction. The solitary places are blooming with signs of intelligence and industry.

Greenville is the chief town of the Delta. It has already attained the proportions and assumed the features of a city, having a population of about 7,000, which increases daily by new-comers from various quarters. The Methodist Church here, under the pastorate of that consecrated man of God, Rev. J. A. Bowen, is in a prosperous state. The membership is 230; seventy having been added this year—one-half of them on profession of faith. Church work is well organized. The Sunday-school, Woman's Missionary Society, Juvenile Missionary Society and Temperance Sunday-school are doing good service in their several spheres. Four weekly prayer meetings are held. The poor are cared for and strangers are looked after and welcomed to the church services by the pastor and others. The church is doing well financially. Liberal provision is made for the pastor's support, and his salary paid up weekly. There has been raised for missions this year $325, including $100 for self-denial, and all of the collections are fully provided for. The church papers are pretty well taken, and I disposed of a goodly number of books during my visitation. With such a faithful pastor and loyal membership the Lord's work will prosper.

The second and third Sundays in May I spent at Arcola and Indianola with the pastor, Rev. J. H. Shumaker, and his people, where I hope that much good was done, especially for the Sunday-school cause and in the circulation of seventy-five dollars' worth of religious literature.

I spent a night and a day at Faisonia, where I found Bro. C. H. Owen, P. C., cheerful in his work and hopeful of success.

The fourth Sunday and a few days following I gave to Friar's Point, where Bro. F. P. Spencer, is pastor. His heart yearns for a revival in his charge, which is evidently much needed. May it soon come with sweeping power!

Two nights and a day at Jonestown, and the first Sunday in June at Eula were spent pleasantly and, I trust, profitably. Bro. J. W. Dorman is preacher in charge, and has his work well in hand.

Two nights and a day at Tunica, with Rev. T. J. Taylor, P. C., in a protracted meeting, closed a month of colportage and Sunday-school work in the Greenville district, which I have reason to know was not in vain. In my visitations I, of course, gave particular attention to the Sunday-school cause and to the publishing interests of the church, which resulted in the sale of $220 worth of books, and $35 of church papers, and $11 90 collected for Sunday-school work. Wherever practicable, special services were held for the children, which were much appreciated by old as well as young people.

The presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Hoppoll, is serving his fourth year on the district. During his administration, church work has been greatly developed in this part of the Conference. He and his noble corps of preachers are all at the post of duty, and will make full proof of their ministry this year.

Time and space fail me to write of the Sardis and Grenada District Conferences and commencement exercises of Grenada Collegiate Institute—all of which I attended with pleasure and profit. Others will write them up. Thanks to the brethren everywhere that I have gone for their co-operation and friendly aid.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Sardis District Conference.

The eighteenth session of the Sardis District Conference, North Mississippi Annual Conference, was held at Coldwater, Miss., June 8-10, Bishop R. K. Hargrove presiding. That choice layman, Bro. F. C. Sims, was chosen secretary. Previous to the Conference the Bishop furnished the preachers, through the presiding elder, printed slips containing sixty questions on the general state of the church—finance, Sunday-schools, missionary territory, attendance upon the ordinances, and things of like character. Their reports were handed in, and referred to appropriate committees the first day, so as to give time for well-digested reports. This method of collecting the facts is far better than a wrangling, running, oral report by the preacher. It gives everything in condensed and concentrated form. These reports showed a high state of prosperity in all the material interests of the church. The total claim on the district for the support of the ministry lacked only a few dollars of being half paid. The conscience of the church has been greatly quickened on this subject in this part of the country. There is a fair prospect for paying every dollar of the assessments for general collections. Nothing short of this will leave the honor of the church unstained.

The reports indicated a marked degree of prosperity in the Sunday-school department. This arm of the church has been greatly strengthened of late years. The one great need now is a baptism of the Holy Ghost on teachers and pupils.

These reports indicated a lack of family prayer, of attendance on prayer and class meetings, and on love-feasts. This subject demands prayerful, penitential and profound thought. It should stir the hearts of pastors and people. In many places the meeting in full of all financial obligations to the church seems to be the sole aim of the church. The purely spiritual and social means of grace seem to be falling into disuse. We need a great revival along this line.

The preaching during the Conference was eminently practical and spiritual, particularly the two sermons by Bishop Hargrove, and one by Rev. W. B. Murrah. The Bishop by his gentleness, suavity, sociability and high Christian deportment, both in the chair and social circle, greatly endeared himself to our people, both clerical and lay. Rev. G. W. Bachman, Conference colporteur, was present selling books, looking after the interests of our church papers, and taking a hand in the business of the Conference. Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., president of Grenada Collegiate Institute, represented the claims of that school. Rev. W. B. Murrah, A. M., of Whitworth Female College, presented the claims of the institution of which he is the co-president. The attendance on the District Conference was unusually large, and the interest good throughout.

The following are the delegates to the Annual Conference: Lieut.-Gov. G. D. Shands, Rev. W. H. Eckles, F. C. Sims and W. C. Sturdivent; P. C. Calicut and Dr. J. W. Sharp, alternates. Next District Conference at Sardis.

By request of the presiding elder. GILDEROY.

Grenada District Conference.

The nineteenth session of the Grenada District Conference was held at Coffeeville, Miss., June 13 and 14, Bishop R. K. Hargrove presiding. All the traveling preachers of the district were present except one, and there was an average attendance of lay delegates. The report of the Committee on Religious Literature was ordered printed in the ADVOCATE. A resolution was adopted, asking Bishop Keener to change the time of holding the North Mississippi Conference from November 14 to December 12.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: H. H. Estes, R. P. Lake, J. T. Turner and R. Thayer; B. F. Saunders and M. G. Dubard, alternates. Next District Conference at Duck Hill.

The following report on religious literature was adopted by the Conference, June 14:

Your committee, to whom was referred the subject of religious literature, beg leave to submit the following: We believe there is no subject of so much importance and as much neglected as church literature. As an evidence of this fact, sixteen pastoral charges in Grenada district, with a membership of 4,596, take 215 church papers, evidencing the startling fact that there is only one paper to every 21½ members. If other literature was equal in sparseness of circulation, there would be some relief; but this is not the case. Trashy, fictitious papers, purporting to be fashionable and literary, have found their way into the homes of our people, and are poisoning the minds and corrupting the lives of the rising generation. We are also of the opinion that the books are in the same proportion. On entering a home it is rare indeed to find a bright new book from our own Publishing House, while the news-stands and newsboys on trains are scattering all over our fair land yellow and blue-back dime novels to go on their errands of mischief and destruction. We are sure of the fact that the only way to arouse the conscience and quicken the zeal of our people is to educate, and this can only be successfully done by inducing our people to read our books and papers. In view of the above facts we offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we will encourage our colporteur by hearty co-operation.

Resolved, That we, as preachers and laymen, will preach and talk on this subject, faithfully warning our people of the danger on the one hand and their duty on the other, and will seek by earnest diligence to put a copy of one of our Advocates in every Methodist home.

Resolved, That in our opinion the Nashville and NEW ORLEANS Advocates are second to no religious papers published.

JOSEPH S. OAKLEY,
Secretary.

Greenville District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Greenville District Conference met at Clarksdale, Miss., June 7, 1888, Rev. J. W. Honnoll, P. E., in the chair. Every pastor in the district was present, and quite a number of laymen. The reports were gratifying, showing a rapid advance on all the lines of church work. This district at last Annual Conference reported every claim paid in full, and will do the same this year with increased assessments.

The District Conference was a spiritual one. The blessed Spirit was present at every session, and baptized the pulpit at every preaching service. Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, of Lexington and Durant charge, was with us, occupying the chair a portion of the time, and preached with the same unction that has characterized his long ministerial life. This is the last year of our beloved presiding elder, and the Conference passed resolutions expressing their affection for him, and appreciation of his valuable labors on the district. To his piety and marked efficiency is in a large measure due the great progress made in the delta during the last four years.

Clarksdale is a pretty town on the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad, eighty miles south of Memphis. It is growing rapidly, and, except Greenville, the largest town between Memphis and Vicksburg. We were most hospitably entertained, and will gladly go there again.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals made an elaborate report, in which mention was made of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. We resolved that we would do more than ever before for its circulation among our people. We looked for you, and were sorry that you did not come. Cleveland was chosen as next place of meeting. Yours truly,

T. Y. RAMSEY, JR.,
Secretary.

From the Work.

FAISONIA AND NEW SALEM, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am constrained, amidst the notes of joy and triumph from the field, to join the refrain, and will give some idea how we are getting along on the Sunflower.

This is my first year in what has been odiously called the swamp, but now more popularly called the valley, or the delta. Like all persons who have been associated with the highland regions, I had, before coming to this magnificent territory, evil forebodings and gloomy fears as to the consequences.

1. As to health. We have never had better health anywhere than at the Faisonia parsonage, and, in proportion to population, the health of the community has been as fine as in any section of the hills we have ever seen. There have been very few deaths in the bounds of the county, comparatively speaking, and none that I know of malarial diseases. This is a good country to imbibe malarial troubles, if one is not careful of the laws of health. So are the hills.

2. Hospitality. I have been a Methodist preacher for seven years, and have been from one side of this Conference to the other; have seen all sorts of people, and can say that I have never seen the kindness and generosity of my people excelled. I came here in the gloomiest part of the winter, which is apt to beget prejudice in the mind of a new-comer; but patience reveals a wealth of life and beauty which can not be surpassed. I came here a stranger, but was soon made to feel at home. My people know how to treat a preacher's family. Many tokens of love and friendship have been received, which will not be forgotten.

3. Piety. We have many examples of godliness and evidences of strivings after holier life, which are encouraging evidences. We have some religious journal in nearly every family in my charge. Religious intelligence is spreading, and our people are becoming eminently connectional. On the great enterprises of our church, concerning which many of our people in older sections of country are criminally ignorant, the people on this charge are like the Bereans—they search to see whether those things be so. The means of grace and ordinances of the church are well attended. We have, in the main, a people who pant for righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. We will have a revival, and souls will be added to the church before this year comes to a close.

4. Liberality. This is a grace almost universal throughout this delta. Our people are well endowed with it. They have provided liberally for their pastor. We have only two churches. A collection was taken at one of the churches, and they gave in cash and subscription nearly the whole amount apportioned to the charge, and I will get it all at that point; and we expect the other appointment to do as well. Our people do not give by assessment. They give by the measure of religion and prosperity—the Bible rule.

Mr. Editor, we are on the Lord's side, and are trying to obey the Captain of our salvation. We are trying to exemplify the golden rule. We are trying to catch the spirit of the apostolic commission. We are trying to get to the reward of the pure and the good. God bless the people of Faisonia and New Salem!

C. H. OWEN.

HOLLY SPRINGS CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have been moving on smoothly and harmoniously on the Holly Springs circuit, North Mississippi Conference, and since spring came or the winter left us, we have formed five Sunday-schools—all using our own literature. Bro. Bachman helped us to start off at Waterford early in the year, and the brethren say we are having the best school here we have ever had; and all our schools are doing good work.

We have only five appointments and five Sunday-schools. Our Missionary Societies and committees are at work, and we expect to bring up our collections ordered by the Conference. Our stewards are looking after the wants of this pastor; and, besides, a brother, not a member of our church, at Waterford, by the assistance of a good sister or two, secured of the Waterford people and supplied the parsonage a few days ago with good things—such as bacon middling, ham, sugar, tableware, etc. The brother said: "Bro. Adams, this is not quarterage, but a present to you." Therefore, you see these good people not only know how to receive their pastor kindly, but how to continue their kindness.

We feel very grateful to God and to these, our brethren, sisters and friends. We are praying and working for a powerful revival of religion, and we believe it is coming. Fraternally,

W. M. ADAMS.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

The undersigned were appointed at the last session of the North Mississippi Conference as a committee to visit Grenada Collegiate Institute, located at Grenada, Miss. In obedience to this trust, it was the privilege and pleasure of the committee to be present at the commencement exercises of this most excellent institution, over which the Rev. Thos. J. Newell, A. M., presides. The commencement sermon was preached on Sunday, June 10, to a large audience in the Methodist Church, by the Rev. R. M. Standefer, of Oxford.

Before the arrival of the committee the final (written) examination for the scholastic year just ending had been completed; but these papers were put in our hands by the president, with the request that we give them a rigid and impartial examination. With patience and care the work done by the pupils of each department was closely inspected by the committee, with results highly satisfactory. The character of these papers demonstrated to our minds that thorough and accurate scholarship is being acquired by the students in the several departments. But, in addition to this, the school was examined orally in our presence, and we have rarely seen students display greater efficiency in German, belles-lettres, mathematics and other branches that were brought before our attention. But this is nothing more, however, than we had a right to expect from Prof. Newell and such assistants as Misses Tate and Blackwell in the collegiate, and Miss Jones and Mrs. Ed. Payne in the academic and primary departments.

The school of art, presided over by Miss Annie Barksdale, deserves special notice. From the amount and quality of the work on exhibition, we judge this department to be a favorite with the students, and that it is guided by the hand of an artist born. Were we to discriminate among so much excellent work, we would, perhaps, do the unmentioned an injustice; but we were so impressed with the almost perfect attitude and expression of a crayon portrait of a child—the work of Miss Buckner, of Greenville—that we can not forbear mentioning it as a work of rare excellence for a school-girl.

To say that Miss Lou. A. Payne and Miss Kilpatrick have the music in charge is a sufficient assurance that this department is doing a work of no ordinary character.

After the reading of their interesting and excellent essays, President Newell, in behalf of the Faculty and the Board of Trustees, presented diplomas to Misses Minnie Barksdale and Julia Sage, conferring upon them the degree of Mistress of English Literature. The graduating class was smaller this year than last; but this was owing in part to the inability of several of the seniors to continue in school during the last part of the session, and also attributable in part to the higher standard of scholarship required. The curriculum has been steadily raised year by year until this institution grades with any school of like character in the country, and the committee takes great pleasure in being able to unhesitatingly say to the patronizing public that the appliances, faculty and work done by this institution is of no ordinary character, and that it is in every way worthy of their patronage.

The annual address was delivered by Hon. C. B. Mitchell, of Pontotoc. It was clear, forcible and appropriate.

Bishop Hargrove, by a fortunate arrangement of the president, was present on commencement day, and entertained and delighted everybody with a few remarks, made as he only can make them. After having stated that he spent fourteen of the best years of his life in the schoolroom, and without compunction of conscience, he tendered his sympathy and hearty endorsement to President Newell and his faculty in their grand work.

The past year has been the most prosperous in the history of the school. The new catalogue will show an enrollment of 184 pupils, with an average attendance of 136, of which 56 were in the bourding department, with twelve others bourding in the city in private families. Over and above the salaries paid to the faculty and the necessary incidental expenses of the school, the trustees are gradually reducing the indebtedness on the property, and have expended about $250 on much needed improvements. During the year there has also been given $420 in the way of tuition fees to the daughters of ministers. This of itself ought to be sufficient to enlist every minister in our bounds for this institution.

Rev. R. M. Standefer was elected to fill the place in the Board of Trustees made vacant by the resignation of Rev. W. B. Murrah. Other vacancies in the Board will be filled with suitable men. For the past year the Board has had sufficient funds to secure teachers in every way first class, and while several of these will retire with this term, their places will be filled with others equally qualified. Indeed, the school is to be congratulated on having secured for the collegiate department Mrs. Walton, late of Charlotte, Va., now of Oxford, Miss. Having spent ten or twelve years teaching in some of the best schools in Virginia, she comes highly recommended and will be a valuable acquisition to the faculty. Miss Mary V. Duval, of Sardis, Miss., who is to take charge of the academic department, is just from a special course in Parker's Normal School in Chicago. She has had several years' experience in the school-room, and is the author of the "History of Mississippi," which has recently been adopted as a text-book in the public schools of the State by the State school commissioner.

The discipline and religious training of Grenada Collegiate Institute we find also to be most excellent. President Newell has everything well in hand and receives, as he justly deserves, the confidence of pupils and patrons.

Address him at Grenada, Miss., for catalogue.

J. W. MALONE,
R. M. STANDEFER,
Committee.

A Disturbed Mind Quieted.

MR. EDITOR: Soon after the Mississippi Conference had closed its last session I received the ADVOCATE, and, of course, was anxious about the appointments. I began to read over the assignments to the different circuits, and when I came to the name of Bro. N. J. Roberts, to East Feliciana circuit, it was not more than natural for me to begin to revolve in my mind these questions, viz: Who is he? what is his ability? has he experience? whether he was a married man, what the number of his family, and last, yet not least of all, this—was he a devoted Christian, full of religion and the Holy Ghost; had he been called by God, the great Head of the Church, to take part in the grand work of preaching the gospel of the Son of God; would he be able to carry on the noble work began by Bro. P. A. Johnston, who had been with us, laboring for our spiritual welfare, for two years. While my mind was anxiously asking the above questions, I met Bro. L. S. Jones, of Clinton, La. I asked him what he knew of Bro. Roberts. He gave direct answers to nearly all the above questions. That encouraged me to hope for good results from his labors. Since then I have become acquainted with Bro. Roberts and have learned to love him. He is carrying on a "good work," preaching and visiting his flock. I am grateful that the Conference, in wisdom, sent Bro. Roberts to serve as our pastor.

Now, my dear Doctor, I ask a special interest in your prayers for Bro. Roberts and family; also for dear old East Feliciana circuit. In conclusion, let me thank you for your letter in the ADVOCATE, referring to your "school days." Then we called you "Charlie." It aroused in my mind visions of long departed forms and faces, and I lived "once again," in imagination, those happy boyhood days. We loved you then; we love you still. I close, hoping for your present and future prosperity and happiness. Good-bye until we meet again; here on earth or in the "sweet by-and-by."

Yours fraternally,

L. M. HIGGINBOTHAM.

East Mississippi Female College.

MR. EDITOR: The East Mississippi Female College, on Wednesday night last, closed its seventeenth year. Diplomas were delivered by the president to a class of five young ladies, who will reflect no discredit upon the institution. Among them is the eldest daughter of the beloved pastor of the First Methodist Church, Dr. Black. The address of President McVoy was chaste, classic and elegant, and greatly enjoyed by the audience.

A thorough investigation by the Board of Trustees into all departments of the college disclosed a good condition and a decided improvement. The local patronage, as well as the patronage from abroad, was better than for several years past. Though the college is a church institution, our citizens generally manifest great interest and pride in its success.

Announcement was made by the president, Rev. A. D. McVoy, of his election to and acceptance of the presidency of Mansfield Female College. This announcement was sad news to hundreds of our people, and to none more than the pupils of the school in all departments. Mansfield is fortunate in securing the services and citizenship of so high-toned, scholarly and useful a minister and Christian gentleman and educator as Bro. McVoy. May success attend his labors in his new field! In behalf of the trustees and patrons of the college, of which he has been five years president, and of the good citizens of our city, I most heartily commend him to our friends and brethren of Louisiana.

The Board of Trustees announced the election of Rev. R. M. Saunders, late principal of Norfolk College for Young Ladies, and a member of the Virginia Conference, to the presidency of the college. President Saunders and his wife, who is also an experienced professional teacher, come highly recommended by prominent ministers (Bishops among them) of our church. He will arrive soon, and will enter at once upon his work. The ladies of the old faculty, whose labors have been so abundant and so successful and satisfactory, will remain. Your readers shall hear more from us later. We are planning improvements which are rendered necessary by the growth and development of our beautiful, healthful and refined city (without saloons).

The great congregation that heard the (commencement) sermon of Dr. Carradine, of your city, were greatly delighted and edified. The Doctor is not a stranger in our city. We hope he will come again soon and stay longer. His honors, so worthily bestowed by Centenary, are gracefully worn.

S. B. WATTS,
Pres. Board Trustees.

THE SILENCE OF HOLY SCRIPTURE.—The silence of the Scripture may be quoted as an evidence of its inspiration. It is silent by design. The subjects upon which Scripture is silent are precisely those which irreverent curiosity would fain probe to the uttermost. We ask about the dead; what are the conditions of their existence in the world to which they are gone, and in that paradise which is but a suburb of heaven? We do not know: the Word is silent. There is a tendency to leave old beliefs behind, and press to some imagined beyond of truth that nobody has ever yet tracked.

If the silence of Scripture in these matters is good evidence of divine inspiration, then the vain talk of many teachers affords convincing evidence of their lack of that gift. For there are those who will tell us more about the condition of the dead in one sermon than we can find in the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation. If anyone desires to know the full particulars concerning the condition of those who have died, we would refer them to the pages of almost any modern hymn book, where they will find all the details. But if they only seek to know what God has revealed, they will have to content themselves with statements far less elaborate, but vastly more trustworthy.—Dr. Paushon.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars. Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Briefs.

The Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the two largest branches of the great Methodist family in the United States, report an aggregate total of 153 Annual Conferences and missions, 16,988 itinerant ministers, 14,632 local preachers, 3,160,312 lay members, being a net gain in lay membership during a single year of 181,858, and a total value of church property (churches and parsonages, but not including other connectional church property) of over $109,803,276.

We call the special attention of every pastor to this clipping from the last Missionary Reporter:

If each pastor in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, could be made to realize his personal responsibility in connection with our mission work, not one would fail to bring up every dollar of his assessment. "If I fail," others will make up the deficit." No one can do the work the Master has laid on you. We need every dollar to meet the demands of existing work. If there is a surplus, it will be used in entering doors the hand of the Master is presenting to our laborers in every field.

We suppose a little extra exertion will go far toward the accomplishment of the desired end, and that every pastor is willing to put forth that extra exertion.

We read this in the Los Angeles Christian Advocate:

Our church has assessed for missions $300,000—an average of about thirty cents per member. We of the Los Angeles Conference are paying over one dollar per member into the missionary treasury while in some of the older Conferences the assessments are from twenty to thirty cents per head. We do not complain about leading the van in this warfare—for our Conference has raised the largest proportionate collection for missions in the entire connection—but we do want the rear guards brought to the front to do some of the heavy fighting.

We have been doing our best to hurry up the "rear guards," and we believe they are beginning to move. Our own little German Church on Dryades street has already sent up more than double what it contributed last year! How will that do for improvement?

The London Methodist Times, commenting on the extension of the pastoral term to five years in the Methodist Episcopal Church, uses this language in regard to the three years' limit among the Wesleyans of England:

Every argument and every illustration that has prevailed in the General Conference might be repeated on this side of the Atlantic. English Methodism, bound and fettered by the three years' limit, has broken down in the great cities. With the exception of London, and the possible exception of Newcastle, it would be difficult to name a single English city in which English Methodism is relatively as strong as it was forty years ago. We have failed to keep pace with the population. It is quite the exception for our city chapels to be crowded, for our fugitive ministers to exert any social influence, or for the masses of the people even to know their names. Our creed was never so attractive: our general system was never so powerful. But in England, as in America, the three years' limit smashes both pastoral and social influence.

Aye or Nay! Which?

Several weeks ago we very politely asked our contributors to give the church, through the Advocate, their views as to the reason we are doing so little, as a church, for the education of our boys. Up to this time we have received only two short articles. In this we have been disappointed. Just before we gave this invitation there had been quite an extended discussion in our columns over the query whether the "Divinity suffered on the cross," and we hoped the subject of education would command as much thought as that question had provoked. We are satisfied that it deserves to command a great deal more, for it is one of the most practically important subjects before the church to-day. One of our chief shepherds said in our office, the other day, that he was very much distressed at the educational outlook of our church in this part of the world. The same distress has been manifested by many other thoughtful men and women. Other denominations are waking up to the importance of this subject, and we must sound the alarm to our Methodist brethren, "whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear." We have already given to our readers the remark of a prominent man among us: "that if the Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana do not wake up on this subject, that in twenty years we will die out." It is known to every reading Methodist in Louisiana that in the northern part of this State, within a radius of less than one hundred miles, the Baptists are doing more for the academic education of their boys than all the Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana together are doing for the college education of Methodist boys!

In view of the fact that our church has a magnificent pile of buildings in Jackson, La., called Centenary College, and not a dollar of debt; that there are comfortable dormitories for the accommodation of 200 students; that there are society halls and chapels and recitation-rooms and library-rooms; indeed, every kind of building for the successful operation of a college of highest grade; that it is only four miles from one of the great thoroughfares of the nation; that it is in as healthy a locality as can be found anywhere; that the society of the town is of the very best order; that the town has been and is and will be a prohibition town; that the tuition and board are as cheap as at any first-class school; that the course of study is as broad and the instruction as thorough as in any school of like grade; in view of these facts we have drawn up the following resolution, which we present to the calm consideration of every reader of the Advocate:

Resolved, That the existing state of things at Centenary College, showing the need of an adequate endowment, presents a demand upon the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana too urgent to be any longer passed by, and the enterprise for its endowment should take precedence of any and every other which may appeal to us for aid.

Now, brethren, speak out. If you are in favor of building up this old college, say so, and give the reasons. If you are opposed, say so, and give the reasons. We will give all proper communications a space in the paper, whether for or against. If it shall be made manifest that Centenary deserves our support, we will go to work to carry out the above resolution with all our power. If it shall appear that it does not merit our patronage, let us turn all our guns upon it, and batter it down to the ground. One or the other must be done.

It is stated that "at no period since the first century have conversions from Judaism to Christianity been so frequent as they are at present."

The Charge to the Rich.

The Alabama Christian Advocate, in an article on "Sins in Cities," presents two pictures dreadful enough to cause every Christian to tremble. The first picture is this:

Every form of vice exists in city life, and much of it is fostered and encouraged by municipal legislation. Our own city is a striking illustration of this fact. Every form of sin for which Jerusalem was noted, and for which Sodom was stamped out of existence, flourishes here. More than eighty saloons hold their midnight revelries, while houses of prostitution stand on the principal streets as a constant reminder of the corruptions that exist, and an unrebuked menace to our boasted civilization. Gambling dens without number are to be found in our midst, into whose cruel abodes of death many of our young men are nightly seduced. But a tithe of our population ever see the inside of a church, while thousands of them are almost entirely removed from those gracious influences which shape and elevate human life. The influence of the churches is scarcely felt by our vast population, though the pastors are faithful and are doing all they can.

That is dark enough to delight the most hopeless pessimist. But to our mind the other picture is even darker. The Advocate presents it in these words:

The Methodists of Birmingham, with untold thousands at their command, have failed to build churches and provide accommodation for even those who desire to hear the gospel. Still we notice that their brick blocks go up and that they have money enough to spend upon themselves.

Is it selfishness or indifference that is the cause of this state of things in our cities? Either is a sufficient cause for condemnation! What is the remedy? What power can be brought to bear upon our rich members to open their eyes to the dangers which are closing around them and will soon hurl them into the gulf of perdition? Is the ministry faithful to the rich in showing them their danger? Paul thought it needful to give a special exhortation to the faithful Timothy on this very point: "Charge them that are rich in this present world, that they be not high-minded, nor have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches, but on God who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on the life which is life indeed." We have given the quotation from the Revised Version, which we think brings out the idea a little clearer. Are we, as preachers, faithful in administering this divine "charge"? Have we not too much, of what St. James calls, "regard to him that weareth the gay clothing"? It would be well for us, as ministers, to ponder the deliberateness with which the same apostle writes: "If ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin, being convicted by the law as transgressors."

It is not a hard task to talk to the ordinary church member when he has violated some one of the rules of the church; to show him his error, to point out the necessity for repentance, and urge him both to repent and amend his ways. When this is done out of a loving heart, and in wise and gentle words, it rarely fails of success. But somehow we are abashed in the presence of the man who "wears the gold ring and the gay clothing," though we are perfectly convinced that the cancer of covetousness is eating out his life and sending him swiftly to destruction! Some of us make the mistake of supposing that church people generally know the teaching of the Bible on the subject of money. That is a subject they know very little about, though the Bible is full of it. They have never studied the particular subject of money under Bible light. The case of the rich young ruler mentioned in the Gospels has been repeated millions of times, and yet if you tell a rich Christian to-day that God's test of character in his case is the way he uses his money, he will be very greatly surprised and, doubtless, "go away sorrowing." We dislike to say so, but our observation is, that our rich church people do not go to the Bible to find out what is the best manner of investing their money. Hence the necessity upon the ministry of to-day to "charge the rich" in regard to the use of their money, as well as in regard to its dangers.

"Gilderoy" at Whitworth.

I do not often get away from home, from my own charge, my own Conference, and yet I like to see how the outside world moves along. It was my privilege to attend the commencement exercises of Whitworth College this year. It was a rare treat to me. I owe a large debt of gratitude to my friends, President Fitzhugh and Vice-President Murrah. My long-time friend, Bro. Murrah, has been dubbed "D. D." of late, but he is as gentle and as modest since the operation as before. He is full of that Christian charity that "is not easily puffed up."

It was a rare privilege to room and bed for a few days with the honored and venerable Rev. John G. Jones. How I enjoyed his talk! It was far-reaching talk, particularly so on the backward track. For once I had found a man who could tell me about the beginning—the beginning of things in Mississippi. All I had to do was to touch the spring, tap the fountain, and, lo! a flood of delightful talk poured forth into my eager ear. I'd never seen Bro. Jones before. He disappointed me in one thing—he would not look like the mental picture I had drawn of him. However, I was able to retaliate, for I did the same thing—I did not fill the pattern he had cut out for me. I found Bro. Jones with an old head and an old body, but a heart as young, fresh and tender as the heart of a boy. We wept together when he told me of his greatest sorrow some five years ago. His heart leans lovingly over the grave of his wife.

It was delightful to meet Bishop Galloway in his own home; to see Bro., now Doctor, Weems, Bros. Mellen, Cooper, Lewis, Nicholson, Andrews, Howell, Parker and others, of the Mississippi Conference, and Bro. Upton, of Louisiana. Methodist preachers are the whole-heartedest set of men living under the sun.

Well, I'd never seen Brookhaven nor Whitworth College before. Brookhaven lies like a gem in the lap of a widely wooded plain. No wonder it is a healthy place. There are no local causes for disease. The wide world of spreading trees for miles and miles in every direction would strain out a world of malaria from the regions beyond. The poison that kills a man is the best food for a tree. God made the trees to eat up the poison, and yet man cuts them down about his home and turns the poison in.

Whitworth College is a larger thing every way than I had imagined it to be. The grounds are ample; the buildings large, airy, roomy and admirably arranged—the whole indicating a broad-minded, wise master-builder. The Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences—indeed, the whole of this southwest corner of Methodism—have a fine plant in this school. The true policy of the church, particularly of our Methodism, is to foster Christian education in denominational schools. This is the work of the church. It is a part of our Christian evangelization. The State can not and will not, ought not, undertake the distinctively religious training of the young, and yet its wing of protection is stretched out over the individual and denominational enterprises established for this purpose.

Presidents Fitzhugh and Murrah are doing a great work for God and for Methodism in Whitworth College. They need and ought to have the sympathy, the prayers, the patronage and the hearty support of our people in this corner of our widespread Methodism. They propose to educate young ladies in the highest and best sense of that word, and they propose to do this work under distinctively Christian auspices. They are Methodists, and this is a Methodist school, established and controlled by the Methodist Church, and yet generously catholic in both faith and practice. Every effort will be put forth to lead young ladies to Christ, and their denominational preferences will not be interfered with.

I will not attempt a report of the commencement exercises, as this work belongs especially to the Visiting Committee appointed by the Conference.

The Methodists of Mississippi and adjourning States, taken as a whole, do not know what an arm of power they have in this splendid school. I have not been indifferent to such matters, and yet I was somewhat surprised at the largeness of Whitworth and the promise of far greater things.

I was delighted to find so many preachers at the commencement. I am sure it did them good, and enabled them to speak confidently and intelligently to their people in regard to the education of their daughters, and the facilities for their training in easy reach of home.

Allow me, then, to commend to our people everywhere the Whitworth Female College, located in Brookhaven, Miss.

Yours, GILDEROY.

The Republican Convention.

After a week of wire-pulling and intrigue, the Republican Convention has nominated its candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency. They are Gen. Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, and Hon. Levi P. Morton, of New York. The last thing the convention did was to adopt this resolution:

The Republican party cordially sympathizes with all wise and well-directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality.

That is intended, we suppose, to hold the votes of the temperance Republicans. The great contest begins now, and in the field of lying the devil will have immediate command, and his long practice will enable him to astonish even his most intimate friends.

Our Preachers' Meeting.

Last Monday our pastors had a profitable and interesting discussion on the subject of religious work in cities. Two facts of grave import were brought to notice. One, that the population of the country is tending more and more to center itself in our cities; the other, that we have so few church members engaged in actual, aggressive church work. These two facts are cause enough for serious thought and earnest prayer. The discussion was participated in by Bros. Ahrens, Walker, Carter, Parker, Kimball, Carradine, and T. S. West, of the Mississippi Conference. It is a sign for good that these great questions are being brought prominently forward.

Notes.

The receipts of the American Tract Society have been equal to $900 for every business day since its organization, and those of the American Bible Society average over $1,000 per day for all its history.

In view of the fact that this is election year, it is humiliating to read that eight out of every hundred white voters will not be able to read the names on the ticket they cast, and that sixty-nine out of every hundred black voters are in the same condition. And yet we believe in a "free ballot and a fair count."

The following is going the rounds of the papers:

Francis Murphy, the temperance revivalist, attributes much of his success to the fact that while speaking he never permits himself to say a harsh or unkind word about the drunkard or about the saloon keeper.

Perhaps if some preachers of the gospel would follow Mr. Murphy in that particular, they would achieve more success! Would they not be following more closely in the footsteps of the Master also?

Hon. W. G. Grove, in a lecture at the Royal Institution, last April, on "Antagonism," asserted that Shakespeare gave an accurate description of the law of gravitation so far as the earth is concerned a hundred years before Newton's time, and quoted this passage from Troilus and Cressida to prove it:

"But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it."

The saloons in Philadelphia have been considerably hedged by the License Court of that city. Last year there were 5,773 licensed saloons in that city. There were 3,422 applications for renewal of license under the new law. The License Court has granted renewals to only 1,258 for the current year, and it is said that some of these will go under before the year closes. Hedge them in everywhere! Root them out in all directions! They have no reason to be, and their existence is a perpetual menace to society.

A clergyman, who has been studying the "methods" of getting rich in use in this country, has said: "We are living under a social order which makes it impossible for a man to get rich, except upon methods that forfeit for him the kingdom of Heaven." Our Lord said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of Heaven." His apostle said, "They that will be rich fall into a snare and divers temptations which drown men in perdition!" But how many rich men or rich women believe in these solemn sayings?

The editor was speaking, the other day, to the wife of one of our preachers about Bro. Johnston's endowment note plan for Centenary College, and she said, "I can give $100 in four years." Her husband's salary is not near so large as that of some other preachers' either. After all, we don't know that the Methodist preachers of Mississippi and Louisiana and their noble, self-sacrificing wives can do a better and more lasting outside work than to endow their college. A better investment can not be made, for the dividends will be large and come in promptly through all the years to come.

There is something in the Scripture about "provoking one another unto good works," and in this respect we look upon our Baptist brethren in Louisiana as a very "provoking" people. They have been "provoking" us on the subject of education for some time. And now they have begun to "provoke" us unto missionary labor and giving. "Secretary Tomkies, of the Louisiana Missionary Board, says he can raise $100 for missions now where a short time ago he could not raise ten." We are beginning to fear that we have too much of that "charity which is not easily provoked." We fear that our patience exceeds that of Moses! If we could just get excited once on the subjects of education and missions—ah!

David Hume, the celebrated infidel of England, confessed that he had never met an atheist in England. When he was in deep distress over the death of his mother, and a friend expressed regret that he had not the consolations of the Christian faith, he replied: "Ah! my friend, I throw out my speculations to entertain the learned and metaphysical world; yet in other things, I do not think so differently from the rest of the world as you imagine." "Belief in God is a characteristic of humanity, spontaneous and persistent through all time and place and history. The man who believes in his own personal existence is compelled by the laws of mental process to believe in the existence of a personal God. There is no escape from the conclusion that a personal human spirit points to a personal divine Spirit, as its author.

Personals.

The Colorado Methodist, last week, gave a fine picture of our new school, the Pueblo Collegiate Institute. The first section—40x60—is up and will be dedicated by Bishop Hendrix, the first Sunday in August. It is expected that the school will be opened to both sexes the first of September. We rejoice with our Western brethren in their success in this most important enterprise.

Dr. T. B. White, of Homer, La., writes: "The crop prospects have been fine, but now the rains, more or less for three weeks, will cut off the the cotton. Corn is injured, but God is good and provident."

The Board of Trustees of East Mississippi Female College elected Rev. R. M. Saunders, late principal of Norfolk College, and a member of the Virginia Conference, to the presidency of that institution. We understand that he is a gentleman in every way qualified for the position.

The Southern University, Greensboro, Ala., has conferred the degree of "D. D." upon Rev. M. B. Chapman, of the Missouri Conference, and Rev. J. D. Cameron, of the North Mississippi Conference. The degree of "LL.D." was conferred upon Rev. Dr. A. S. Andrews. Those were fine selections for worthy honors.

We had a pleasant call, last week, from Presiding Elder J. A. Ellis, en route to an appointment across the lake. He is full of his work and hopeful of good results.

Prof. Tillett, of Vanderbilt, is said to be engaged on "A History of our Hymns." We know that work will be well done. We happen to know something of the Professor's knowledge of hymns and their history.

Dr. Allen, our missionary to China, has delivered since the first of January one hundred missionary addresses in various sections of our church. That accounts, in part, for the growing interest in missions manifested at many points.

The amenders and repealers of the Sunday Law received another defeat last week in the Senate. The amendment proposed was indefinitely postponed by a vote of 22 to 10.

We have received from Rev. J. T. Daves a circular of his "Training school," at Lake Charles, La. It affords us pleasure to know that he has succeeded in one year in matriculating one hundred and thirty-two students. He is assisted by his son, Walter Daves, an accomplished graduate of Emory College, Ga. He is planning for larger success next year, and will surely attain it.

The dispatches state that Dr. Hunnicutt, president of Centenary College, addressed a mass meeting in Jackson, La., June 20. In the interest of the college, and $1,400 were added to the endowment fund. The ball has started, and now let everybody help!

Up to May 31, the collections for missions on self-denial fund amounted to $20,502 94. The receipts for the regular fund during May amounted to $13,568 61.

Dr. George F. Pentecost, the revivalist, spent several weeks in Atlanta, holding meetings in Dr. Lee's church. A correspondent of the Wesleyan says: "Dr. Pentecost was very much disappointed at his seeming lack of success, saying this was the first time he had ever failed to reach sinners." About thirty persons joined Dr. Lee's church, as the result of the meetings.

The first honorary degree of Doctor Divinitatis from Kavanaugh College was conferred upon Rev. James M. Weems, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference. Kavanaugh has honored itself in the recognition of the merit of Dr. Weems.

The recent commencement at Whitworth College is pronounced, by those who have been attending commencements at that renowned institution, to have been the most brilliant of all. Twenty-one young ladies were graduated. This school deserves the patronage of all within its reach. We know of none that we can more highly commend.

It is said that our Bro. A. C. Coney, who was transferred several years ago from Louisiana Conference to the Montana Conference, will begin the publication of a Southern Methodist paper, to be called the Montana Methodist.

Bro. Bowen, of Greenville, Miss., writes, June 22: "We have had seventy-eight accessions to our church up to date and more to follow. Over $300 raised for foreign missions. All collections up."

Emory and Henry College has conferred the degree of "D. D." upon Prof. J. J. Tigert, of Vanderbilt University.

Dr. Fitzgerald's Biography of Dr. McFerrin has been received at this office. It is gotten up in fine style, and has a good likeness of the Doctor. Notice hereafter.

Commencement at Vanderbilt University.

The annual occasion of most interest in this city, the well-recognized educational center of the South, has just been celebrated. The commencement exercises of Vanderbilt University, an institution whose erection gave a fresh impetus to the cause of education in the South, were exceedingly interesting, outrivalling any hitherto held.

The exercises were inaugurated by the oratorical contest, on the evening of the fourteenth instant, for the gold medal founded by the Rev. Dr. R. A. Young, one of the trustees and warmest friends of the institution. Four young men strove for the mastery: Harper, of California; Keeble, of Tennessee; Moore, of Missouri; and Ragland, of Colorado. To the last named the much coveted prize was awarded.

The evening witnessed the annual moot court trial, conducted by four young men chosen from the Law Department. The case was a noted one in the criminal history of Tennessee, and the young limbs of the law evinced much talent in their presentation of the case. The contestants were Manson, of Georgia; Barthell, of Tennessee; Culwell, of Texas, and Kinney, of Tennessee. These moot court trials are a striking and commendable feature of the Law Department of Vanderbilt University.

Sunday, the baccalaureate sermon was delivered in the chapel of the university before a large audience by the Rev. William J. Young, of the Baltimore Conference. He is an alumnus of the Biblical Department of the University. The University honored him in selecting him for this great occasion, and he honored the University by delivering one of the best and most appropriate sermons ever delivered here on such an occasion.

Monday morning came an interesting contest among ten chosen representatives of the Biblical Department for the A. L. P. Green medal, founded by Mrs. Dr. R. A. Young, daughter of the late great leader in the ranks of Southern Methodism. The medal is bestowed upon the best reader of our church hymns and of the Scriptures, and was awarded to Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Virginia.

Monday was devoted to the alumni, who rallied this year in larger numbers than ever before. They are doing much to advance the interests of their alma mater. Their annual feast was served at the Nicholson House. Good cheer ruled at the festive board, and there was a happy commingling of lawyers, preachers, teachers, doctors, engineers, dentists, pharmacists, and so on.

The annual address before the Society of the Alumni was delivered by Rev. A. F. Watkins, of Brookhaven, Miss. His theme was, "What Is Demanded of the Educated Young Men of the South?" and ably did he answer it. The speech created great enthusiasm, and its publication would do vast good in pointing out the fields of usefulness open to our educated young men. The alumni are to be congratulated upon having such a sound thinker among them.

On Tuesday evening, at five o'clock, one of the most unique events of the entire week occurred. Dr. William Morrow annually gives money prizes of $40 and $30, respectively, to the two theologues who make pulpit announcements the best manner. Nearly every member of the Biblical department participated, and the contest was spirited, interesting and amusing. The successful contestants were Rev. E. H. Rawlings, of Virginia, and B. W. Dodson, of Arkansas.

Tuesday night the distinguished educator, Dr. James H. Carlisle, of South Carolina, delivered the annual literary address before the university body and the public. His address, like all of his utterances, abounded with words of wisdom to young men; nearly every sentence would make a life motto, and the whole was replete with inspiration and suggestiveness. It made a deep impression for good.

Wednesday morning occurred the regular commencement exercises. The class of graduates was the largest ever turned out, and was represented by three speakers: E. I. Crockett, of Kansas—subject, "The Mile Stone;" W. H. Harris, of Georgia—"The Spirit of Progressive Civilization;" F. F. Shipp, of Florida—"Bismarck." The addresses were well conceived and excellently rendered.

The address to the graduating class was delivered by the Hon. Robert L. Taylor, governor of Tennessee. He added greatly to his reputation as a polished orator by his address on this occasion. Among the graduates is a name well known to the readers of the ADVOCATE, Rev. W. R. Sims, of the Mississippi Conference, who was awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy—the highest conferred by the University. He richly deserves this distinguished honor.

Thus ends one of the most successful years in the history of this great institution of learning. Largely endowed, admirably equipped, well manned, having the strong support of the church and the confidence of the public, located in a most excellent climate, with expenses most reasonable, the prospects of the University were never brighter. The attention of students is being attracted from every section of our great country. They will ever find a cordial welcome here.

A Note from Bro. Weems.

The Mississippi Conference Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is now holding its ninth session in this place with a large and very enthusiastic attendance. The address of welcome by Miss Clara A. Chrisman, of Beauregard, and the response by Miss Mary McClelland, of Whitworth College, as was also the annual address by the president, Mrs. Chatfield, of Meridian, were of the highest order of composition, and most admirably delivered. We feel proud of our women.

The work on the district is moving up finely, and we expect to make a good showing at Conference. Camp meetings the second Sabbath in August at Topisaw, nine miles east of Summit; third, at Crystal Springs; fourth, at China Grove, east of Magnolia. Come. Be sure to attend one or more.

Fraternally,

JAS. M. WEEMS.

WESSON, Miss., June 25, 1888.

Notice.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please give notice through the ADVOCATE (as it is well circulated throughout this State) that delegates who expect to attend the State Sunday-school Convention, at Kosciusko, Miss., July 25 and 26, will please forward their names to me between this and July 15, so we may know how many are coming.

Respectfully,

M. T. ROSWELL.

KOSCIUSKO, Mississippi.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

LOOKING BACKWARDS. By Edward Bellamy. Published by Ticknor & Co., Boston. Sold by Wharton & B. Co., in this city. Price, paper cover, fifty cents.

This is a new novel, and, it is said, has created quite a stir in literary circles. Some of the first writers of the day have pronounced it a rare and remarkable book.

WANDERINGS OVER BIBLE LANDS AND SEAS. By the author of "Schamberg Cotta Family." J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

THE DO SOCIETY: OR, THE THREE COUSINS. By Mrs. C. B. Howard. J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

THE TWO BENS. By the author of "Brother Bertie." J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

THREE LITTLE MINNOWS. J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

These are samples of Sunday-school library books published by our House in Nashville. They are gotten up in hand-some, attractive style. The print is clear and easily read, which is an important a consideration for young eyes as for old ones. The libraries, of which these books are the samples, have been prepared with special reference to the young of different ages, and they seem to us to be admirably adapted to the purpose for which they are designed, and cheap enough.

PERIODICALS.

—The Homboldt Library, No. 100, June, has Science and Poetry, Biology in Education; Science Culture for the Masses; The Law of Likeness, by Andrew Wilson, F. R. S. E. J. Fitzgerald, publisher, New York. Price 15 cents.

—Littell's Living Age, for June 16, has Antagonism from Nature; Tramps, Mediæval and Modern, from Westminister Review; The Next Armada, from Punch, and several other articles of interest. This is a splendid weekly, giving over 3,300 pages a year for $8. Littell & Co., Boston.

—Report of the Directors of Camp Nichols, the soldiers' home of Louisiana, to the General Assembly. This is an interesting report, showing what the State is doing for the maintenance of some of the old soldiers of the "Lost Cause."

—The Magazine of Art, for July, opens with a Summer Day, as frontispiece. Then follow, Aims of Art, A Personal View of Japanese Art, Old Arts and Modern Thoughts, and other pieces of varied interest and beauty. Cassell & Co., New York. Price $3 50.

The Best and Cheapest College.

Nearly 1,000 young men from 30 States entered the Commercial College of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky., the past year. This college received the highest honor and gold medal at the World's Exposition over all other colleges for system of bookkeeping and business education. It is situated in the beautiful, healthy and renowned city of Lexington, Ky., accessible by the leading railroads. Read advertisement of this college in another column, and write for particulars to its president.

WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

THE SUNDAY LAW.—When the Sunday Law was passed by the Legislature in 1886, many, who were opposed to it, claimed that it would surely be repealed by the General Assembly in 1888; that a law which interfered with the individual rights of a man could not possibly stand. But after two years' trial it seems that the Sunday Law has gained many supporters, and is now a fixed and permanent law of the State. Its observance has demonstrated the fact, that while it may interfere with the supposed rights of a few, it gives to thousands of others, that which every man needs, a day of rest and recreation. Merchants find, in summing up a year's business, that their sales have been as large as they were when keeping their stores open on Sunday, while their clerks have had the "personal liberty" of one day of rest, after six of toil. The same applies to all branches of business. If anything is done regarding the Sunday Law by the General Assembly, let it be to enact more stringent laws for its enforcement. Baton Rouge Truth.

Fourth Week in June.

Here comes hot weather. Up goes the mercury. Most people suffer that forlorn feeling of good-for-nothing lassitude and languor which makes them feel as if they were lazy. It is not laziness, though. It is the weariness that comes of the heat, and of the clogging of the blood during the winter months. But you might as well get rid of it, and be strong, so as to enjoy the Summer. Then there are other ailments which this hot weather brings; congestion of the liver; bilious headaches; indigestion; cholera-morbus and other bowel disorders are in season. A variety of skin disorders also cause trouble about this time, showing that the blood needs purifying. Red rash, pimples and other surface indications tell of the disturbed condition of things beneath the skin.

To keep the whole body in perfect order at this season there is nothing so efficient or so pleasant as Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient. By long and successful use it has become the great household medicine. It is the King of the family medicine-chest. It is the companion of the most judicious people when they travel. On land or at sea; in the steamboat or on the Pullman car; at home or in the summer-resort hotel; Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient is always ready for instant use; always acceptable; always efficacious. Buy of the druggist, and never be without it.

The Richmond Advocate says:

There has been a large increase in the contributions to the cause of missions in the Richmond churches this year, over anything ever before known.

We believe the same may be said of a great many churches in our section. The diffusion of missionary intelligence is bearing fruit. "And therein do we rejoice."

"There is no place better for a boy than Hiwasse College." So said one who taught there for three years. Parents would do well to send for a catalogue of that school. The P. O. is "Hiwassee College," Tenn.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

"What did you do the first time you got into battle?" said a young lady to an old soldier. "Of course you didn't run?" "Oh, no, I didn't run, miss, not at all, but if I had been going for a doctor, and you had seen me, you would have thought somebody was awful sick."

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

"Ah, Jemmy," said a sympathizing friend to a man who was just too late for the train, "you did not run fast enough." "Yes, I did," said Jemmy; "but I did not start soon enough."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

"Do you think I'm a simpleton, sir?" thundered a fiery Scotch laird to his new footman. "Ye see, sir," replied the canny Scot, "I'm no' lang here, an' I dinna ken yet."

A REGULAR BOY.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

He was not at all particular
To keep the perpendicular,
While walking, for he either skipped or jumped,
He stood upon his head awhile,
And, when he went to bed awhile,
He dove among the pillows, which he thumped

He never could keep still a bit;
The lookers-on thought ill of it:
He balanced on his ear the kitchen broom;
And did some neat trapezing,
Which was wonderfully pleasing
On every peg in grandpa's harness room.

From absolute humility,
The cat approached insanity
To see him slide the banisters, so rash;
But once on that mahogany,
While trying to toboggan, he
Upset his calculations with a crash!

And since that sad disaster
He has gone about in plaster—
Not of Paris, like a nice Italian toy;
But the kind the doctor uses,
When the bumps and cuts and bruises
Overcome a little regular live boy!

—St. Nicholas.

MR. EDITOR: This is my first attempt to write to your paper. I would like very much to join in with the cousins. I like to read your good paper, and get very interested in the cousins' letters. My grandmamma takes your good paper, she is a good Christian, and papa, too. I am thirteen years old, and am going to school. I study spelling, primary geography, history of the United States, grammar and arithmetic, and also writing. My teacher is Miss Ella Herring. I have no mother, but father. I have three brothers dead, and one sister living. I am a member of the Methodist Sunday-school and also secretary and pass the basket. Bro. Morris is our superintendent of the Sunday-school. My teacher is Mrs. Minnie McLain. I like her very much. Our pastor is Bro. Munholland. Hoping my letter will not reach that horrid waste-basket, I will close in telling the cousins and yourself all good-by.

Your niece,

WILLIE H. CLARK.

WEST MONROE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I attended the memorial service at the Baptist Church last Saturday. They cleaned off the graveyard and filled up the old graves and ornamented them with flowers. They had speaking in the morning and preaching in the evening. I liked it very much. Don't you think we ought to take more care of the graves, especially our loved ones. There was an artist came there that evening and took a picture of the congregation. I will answer Ticia J. Green's question: The first Bishop was Bishop Coke. I will ask the little cousins a question, and hope some one will answer it: Where and when was the first Methodist Church built in the United States and who was the first preacher? Second question: Who was the first American preacher that joined the itinerancy? I will close, hoping my letter will miss the waste-basket.

Your friend,

LAISY LESTER.

Letters of Recommendation.

A gentleman once advertised for a boy to assist him in his office.

Nearly fifty applied for the place. Out of the whole number, he, in a short time, chose one and sent the rest away.

"I should like to know," said a friend, "on what ground you chose that boy. He had not a single recommendation with him."

"You are mistaken," said the gentleman; "he had a great many:

"He wiped his feet when he came in, and closed the door after him; showing that he was orderly and tidy.

"He gave up his seat instan to the lame old man who entere showing that he was kind and thoughtful.

"He took off his hat when he came in, and answered my questions promptly and respectfully; showing that he was polite.

"He lifted up the book, which I had purposely laid on the floor, and placed it on the table, while all the rest had stepped over it or shoved it aside; showing that he was careful.

"And he waited patiently for his turn, instead of pushing the others aside; showing that he was modest.

"When I talked with him, I noticed that his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth white as milk.

"When he wrote his name, I observed that his finger-nails were clean, instead of being tipped with jet like the handsome little fellow's in the blue jacket.

"Don't you call these things letters of recommendation? I do; and what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes ten minutes is worth more than all the fine letters he can bring me."—Selected.

JACK'S GALLANTRY.—There is a dog who lives near Boston who proves a great solace to a widow to whom he does not belong. Dogs are usually given to confining the benefits of their care to their own household, but this one, recognizing the unprotected state of the widow, who lives alone, is willing to extend his watchful services to her house. She is a little afraid of the visits of tramps, who frequently pass her house on the way to Boston.

The farmer who owns the dog, therefore, when he sees a suspicious character coming up the road, says to his dog, "Jack, go over to Mrs. H's and sit on her piazza till the tramp goes by." Whereupon the dog, who is a large St. Bernard, flies over to Mrs. H's, posts himself at the door, and, if the tramp comes up the walk, steps forward and growls pleasantly at him. As the dog is a very big one and rather forbidding in appearance, though he has never been known to bite anyone, the tramp in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred remembers that it is getting late, and that he hasn't any time to fool away along the road. When he is well out of sight the dog promptly returns home. The dog carries his gallantry to the same lady to such an extent that when she is visiting his master's house of an evening he always accompanies her home, taking her to the very door of the house.—Boston Transcript.

TRUE HEROISM.—A few years since in Illinois, a German boy, a Sabbath-school scholar, was urged by his companions to join them in an act of theft. He refused. They persisted. At length, finding it impossible to allure him into their thievish designs, they tried threatening. They dragged him into the water, and after plunging him in and holding him under as long as they dared, they raised him up and asked him if he would join them. His reply was, "No." Down he went again. This was repeated several times until, with life almost gone, he declared: "Boys, you may kill me, but I will not steal." The heroism of this boy was greater than that of the world-renowned Imperial Guard of Napoleon, who, after the defeat of Waterloo, when commanded to lay down their arms, replied: "The Old Guard can die, but they never surrender."—Iowa Methodist.

BRUNO AND THE CHAIR.—An old lady owns an intelligent Newfoundland dog, who some time since acquired the habit of occupying grandmother's chair whenever he found it empty. Threats and blows failed to start him. Finally whenever she wished to occupy her seat, the old lady would open the window and cry out, Cats! cats! This was too much for Bruno, who rushed to the window while grandmother rushed to the chair.

This worked well for some time. One day Bruno found grandmother seated. After walking about, he sprang to the window and began the most violent barking. This was too much for grandma's curiosity. She went to the window to ascertain the cause of the outbreak, when Bruno made a dash for the chair, and held possession in spite of the cry of Cats!—Selected.

A Good Thing for Boys.

Manual training is one of the few good things that are good for everybody. It is good for the rich boy, to teach him respect for the dignity of beautiful work; it is good for the poor boy, to increase his facility for handling tools, if tools prove to be the thing he must handle for a living afterward; it is good for the bookish boy, to draw him away from books; but, most of all, it is good for the non-bookish boy, in showing him that there is something he can do well. The boy utterly unable, even if he were studious, to keep up, in book-knowledge and percentage with the brighter boys, becomes discouraged, dull, and moody. Let him go to the workroom for an hour, and find that he can make a box or plane a rough piece of board as well as the brightest scholar—nay, very likely better than his brighter neighbor—and you have given him an impulse of self-respect that is of untold benefit to him when he goes back to his studies. He will be a brighter and better boy for finding out something that he can do well. Mind you, it is not planing the board does him good; it is planing the board in the presence of other boys, who can no longer look down upon him when they see how well he can plane. He might go home after school and plane a board in the bosom of his family, or go to an evening school to learn to plane, without a quarter part, nay, without any, of the invaluable effect upon his manhood that it will have to let him plane side by side with those who, in mental attainments, may be his superiors.—American Magazine.

WHAT SMOKING DOES FOR BOYS.—A medical man, struck with the large number of boys under fifteen years of age whom he observed smoking, was led to inquire into the effect the habit had upon the general health. He took for his purpose thirty-eight, aged from nine to fifteen, and carefully examined them. In twenty-seven he discovered injurious traces of the habit. In twenty-two there were various disorders of the circulation and digestion, palpitation of the heart, and a more or less taste for strong drinks. In twelve there were frequent bleedings of the nose, ten had disturbed sleep, and twelve had slight ulceration of the mucous membrane of the mouth, which disappeared on ceasing the use of tobacco for some days. The doctor treated them all for weakness, but with little effect, until the smoking was discontinued, when health and strength were restored.—British Medical Monthly.

In regard to food, the fats stand highest on the list for the nervous—cream, fresh butter, the fat of beef. By keeping up his exercise the nervous invalid will find himself able to digest more and more of these substances. Cod-liver oil is valuable, but has no especial medicinal advantages over cream. Next in value are the malted cereals, first of all wheat, then oats and corn: cracked wheat and cream is an ideal nerve food. Cornbread, the johnny-cake of New England, made of corn-meal, eggs and flour, thick, light, warm, and soaked with fresh butter, is a better nerve food than can be found on the druggists' shelves. Fresh and shell-fish are light, easily digested foods, but have no especial value as brain and nerve foods. Celery has no value whatever in nerve nutrition."—Advance.

Plenty of digestible food, and two hours stolen from the middle of a busy day are the best remedies for nervous exhaustion. Frequent feeding, such as a tumbler of milk, or a bowl of bouillon every two hours is strongly advised. In these days of extracts of beef, mutton, chicken, clam, etc., there is no need for anyone who can pay for them to go hungry.—American Magazine.

The best broom is of light green color, which indicates that the material is of the best flexibility and toughness. The cheap broom corn is of a sickly yellow or lemon color.—Good Housekeeping.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Rich and Poor,

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use of this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. They are sugar-coated, contain no calomel; are prompt, but mild, in operation; and, therefore, the very best medicine for Family Use, as well as for Travelers and Tourists.

"I have derived great relief from Ayer's Pills. Five years ago I was taken so ill with that I was unable to do any work. I took three boxes of Ayer's Pills and was entirely cured. Since that time I am never without a box of these pills."—Peter Christensen, Sherwood, Wis.

"Ayer's Pills have been in use in my family upwards of twenty years and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. The attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afford greater relief than any other medicine I ever tried."—T. F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for a number of years, and have never found anything equal to them for giving one an appetite and imparting energy and strength to the system. I always keep them in the house."—R. D. Jackson, Wilmington, Del.

"Two boxes of Ayer's Pills cured me of severe

Headache,

from which I was long a sufferer.—Emma Keyes, Hubbardston, Mass.

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"Ayer's Pills are in general demand among our customers. Our sales of them exceed those of all other pills combined." "We have never known them fail to give entire satisfaction."—Wright & Hannelly, San Diego, Texas.

ROBERTS—Bro. JAMES D. ROBERTS was born in Franklin county, Miss., December 15, 1815, and died in Amite county, Miss., September 25, 1887. He married Miss Elisabeth Forehand, who survives him. His married life and membership in the church embraced forty-seven years of fidelity and usefulness. Five of twelve children survive. These, as were all those who were of proper age that have gone before, are members of the church. Of the two sons one is steward and Sunday-school superintendent, another is a successful minister and member of the Mississippi Conference.

His personal character and the piety of his household make the memory of Bro. Roberts a precious legacy. For years literal and firm, he stood almost alone in his community for God and the right. As trustee, steward and class-leader he served our church. He lived to see a new order of spiritual life and labor around him. A new church is built. Neighbors, friends and relatives taste and see that his God is good. To them his godly walk was precious. It seemed God used him to still further exemplify the power and plenitude of his grace. He was confined to the house two years, and three-fourths of this time to his bed. Disease gradually extended all its ravages to his vitals. By a process, whose accuracy it would seem the Divine hand alone could direct and yet spare his life, his face was literally consumed. It might be said the organs of three senses—of sight, taste and smell—were gone. Still he found solace and comfort in Christ. To visit him was to marvel at the efficacy of faith. To worship with him was to feast at the table of the Lord. Under God's grace, he was adding the last amen to the precepts and example of his past life, and setting his seal to the truth of ten thousand sermons heard in the past and still to echo in the future. In his final testimony, and his glory enhanced, the bereaved ones, who so long and so tenderly cared for him, may see the "end of the Lord." His language might truly have been, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Then his face, renewed, "shall shine as the sun in the kingdom" of our Father forever.

J. WILSON BROWN.

ALDEN—SARAH E. ALDEN was born in the State of Virginia, June 12, 1802. She was converted at a camp meeting in Smith county, Tenn., 1836-37; moved to Louisiana, 1840; died at her youngest son's residence, in Webster parish, October 24, 1887. She was the oldest Methodist 'the writer ever saw, and I believe she was one of the most consecrated. She had many battles to fight in the early days of Methodism in Louisiana. She loved the doctrines of her church, and defended them when assailed by the hardshell and others. I had the pleasure of meeting her for the first time about a year ago. I was engaged in a protracted meeting in the community in which she lived. Her godly conversation, her past and present experience was a benediction to my soul. She had been a widow for a long time, and God had been true to his promise. She praised the Lord for his goodness every time I met her. She died right. May God bless the family, and may they strive to meet her in heaven!

REEVES—W. C. REEVES was born February 14, 1839, and died at his home, in Calcasieu parish, February 22, 1888. He was the second son of Isam and Nancy Reeves, who were in their day widely known for their religious devotion. Bro. Reeves had the good fortune to be reared in a religious home by pious parents. It was natural, therefore, that he should be the subject of religious convictions early in life. In his eighteenth year he was converted under the ministry of Bro. Parvin. This was in June, 1857. Bro. Parvin may well rejoice in this one soul, if no more, as the fruit of his ministry while laboring so faithfully in this early day, in these green pine woods. Bro. Reeves was true to his vows. He was a faithful, good man through all these years. And so, having lived well, he died well. His last sickness came upon him away from home. He was brought home in an unconscious condition. Some days after he came to himself, and said, in a glad way, to his wife: "I know where I am now. I am at home, and, oh! I am so tired, for I have been struggling and toiling so hard to get home." His brother, Rev. George Reeves, said to the writer: "I have seen and heard of many triumphant death-beds, but never witnessed so triumphant a death." Just before the closing scene he became fully conscious. Knowing that he was to die, he was thoughtful, calm and peaceful. Calling his brother George first of all, he committed the care of his family to him. Taking him by the hand, he said, "Brother George, will you do the best you can in caring for my family?" The answer, "I will," satisfied him. Then, one by one, he bid each one good-by, with a final word. Having spoken to his wife and children, he asked for his little babe. He took the little thing in his arms, kissed her and handed her back to the mother. He had a word for each neighbor and friend in the house, and in a few moments afterward "fell on sleep." He selected the spot where he was to be buried—a little mound somewhat removed from the cemetery of Bryan Chapel. He had evidently long before settled in his mind the place of his last sleep. The writer was in the desolate home a short time since. The sad and lonely mother, with her fatherless ones gathered about her, excited sympathy and tears. There was relief in this thought: This is the widow and these the children of a good husband, of a good father. May God bless them!

FRIEND.

ODOM—ELIZABETH M. ODOM, wife of William A. Odom, and daughter of George W. and Anthope Kendall, was born in Grenada county, Miss., February 14, 1856; was married to William A. Odom December 18, 1878, and died April 16, 1888. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at a protracted meeting at New Hope Methodist Church, in Grenada county, in 1872, and from then till the day of her death lived an earnest, devoted Christian. She was the mother of five children—three of whom survive her. Sister Odom was no ordinary woman. A beautiful person, a mind of more than ordinary brightness, and a kind and gentle heart rendered her exceedingly attractive to all who approached her. Earnest, faithful and true to all the relations of life—as daughter, wife, mother, neighbor, friend—all tempered and refined by the religion of Jesus Christ, she filled out the measure of a complete woman. When such die there must be mourning, but 'tis a mourning nigh akin to joy. With a tongue palsied by paralysis, she could leave no dying testimony; but far above any dying words is the testimony of a holde Christian life.

A FRIEND.

WHITE—WILLIAM H. WHITE was born in North Carolina, October 5, 1805, and died in Kemper county, Miss., May 29, 1888. He was married to Huldy K. Cochran in 1831. Bro. White came to Mississippi in early life in search of his fortune, which he found in the good woman he married, and in our blessed Savior whom he sought and found at an early age. He joined the Methodist Church when quite young, and lived a quiet, peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. He made but little noise about his religion; he simply lived godly in Christ Jesus. His end was peace. He leaves a wife and five children. May Heaven's richest blessing be upon them, especially upon her who feels so lonely in the absence of him whom she lived so long in peace and harmony.

H. P. LEWIS.

Boils and pimples and other affections arising from impure blood may appear at this season, when the blood is heated. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause of these troubles by purifying, vitalizing, and enriching the blood, and at the same time it gives strength to the whole system.

Don't think you have more trouble than your neighbors. It is not so. All are more or less perplexed and worried. And yet our blessings outnumber a thousandfold the crosses and disappointments of life. When in trouble we are apt to forget the abundant favors bestowed upon us from God. We have health. Should we not be thankful for this? We have the comforts bestowed by heaven every day. Should those be forgotten, when a cloud happens to darken our prospects? We have more friends than we have lost; more money than we deserve, and a thousand sources of pleasure are continually opening before us. And yet we are often sad; a wrinkle is on our foreheads and an incubus is pressing on our hearts. How unwise and foolish to let the petty annoyances of the day so disturb us, that we fret and repine and contribute largely to the discomforts and sorrow of all with whom we come in contact.—Religious Herald.

Electrical Welding.

One of the most attractive exhibits in the late American Institute Fair, at New York City, was Prof. Elihu Thomson's system of welding metals by electricity. This application of the force is of special interest because of its simplicity, and because it removes many difficulties found in ordinary work. Thus different metals can not be welded in the ordinary way, but they can by this system; nor can steel-cutting tools be welded in the ordinary way without retempering, but they can be through electricity.

The system of electrical welding makes the two pieces to be united the terminals of an electrical current of low intensity, but of very great quantity. The ends to be welded are slightly rounded by filing, so as to insure contact of their middles before the sides, and then they are placed in clamps which form the two poles of the electric current. A proper flux is placed between, and they are then crowded together with considerable force, one of the clamps admitting of motion by means of a screw for this purpose. As soon as any points in the different pieces touch, the current begins to pass, and the ends are almost instantly fused together.

This simple process finds a wide field for application. In ordinary job work, the time required to do the work is much shortened, and the discomfort of the forge and the scale and cinders are done away with completely. It is especially adapted to replacing the cutting parts of worn tools, as axes or chisels, or for welding broken tools without injuring the temper of the cutting edge, and for welding the links of chains. It will also do away with soldering telegraph and electrical light wires. Besides, many metals and alloys that it has been considered impracticable to unite by welding, such as copper and brass, and which have hitherto been soldered, can be readily fused together by this process, while dissimilar metals, as iron and copper, can be readily united.

THE SIZE OF OCEAN WAVES?—The following from the Scotsman is of account in answering this question:

It is a very common phrase to speak of the waves during a storm as "running mountains high;" but this really means nothing. Accurate measurements made by Scoresby proved that during storms waves in the Atlantic rarely exceeded forty-three feet from hollow to crest, the distance between the crests being 660 feet, and their speed thirty-two and a half miles an hour. More recent observations in the Atlantic give from forty-four to forty-eight feet as the highest measured waves; but such heights are rarely reached, and, indeed, waves exceeding thirty feet are very seldom encountered. The monsoon waves at Kurrachee break-water works were found to dash over the wall to the depth of eighteen feet, or about forty feet above mean sea level.

A NEW SCIENCE.—The surface of the earth is commonly regarded as stable and free from motion. But this common opinion has lately been found to be erroneous. Delicate instruments designed to show very minute movements of its surface seem to indicate that it is subject to a series of minute movements called tremors, and indeed it is rarely free from motion. These tremors are more or less directly connected with earthquakes, from which they differ principally in amount. These disturbances have been recognized only a short time, and their detection has led to the invention of the delicate instruments called seismographs, while the laws which govern them and their relation to earthquakes form the subject matter of the new science, seismology. Prof. Mendenhall, of Terre Haute, has done much to investigate these minute movements.

European Libraries.

Some library statistics show that the European country which possesses the largest number of public libraries is Austria. In Austria there are no fewer than 577 public libraries, containing 5,475,000 volumes, without reckoning maps and manuscripts—a total which comes out at 26 volumes per 100 of the population. France possesses 500 public libraries, containing 4,598,000 volumes and 135,000 manuscripts, or 12 volumes per 100 of the inhabitants; Italy ranking next, with 493 libraries, 4,349,000 volumes, and 330,000 manuscripts, or 16 volumes per 100. In Germany the public libraries number 398, containing 2,640,000 volumes and 58,000 manuscripts, or 11 volumes per 100 of the population. Great Britain possesses only 200 public libraries, according to these statistics, the volumes numbering 2,871,000, and the manuscripts 26,000. There are 145 libraries in Russia, with 952,000 volumes and 24,000 manuscripts, or a fraction over one volume to 100 persons. It is noteworthy that in Bavaria alone the public libraries number 169, with 1,368,000 volumes and 24,000 manuscripts. Reviewing the principal libraries separately, it appears that the most considerable in Europe is the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris, with 2,078,000 volumes; while the British Museum, with its million of books, assumes the next place. Then comes the Munich Royal Library, containing 800,000 volumes; the Berlin, Dresden, and Vienna libraries taking rank as follows in the same order: 700,000, 500,000, and 420,000 volumes. The Oxford and Heidelberg Universities each possess about 300,000 books. At the Vatican the manuscripts attain almost as large a total as the printed works. The latter number 30,000, while the manuscripts are returned at 25,000.—Evangelist.

Religious Statistics of the World.

The most carefully compiled and best general statistical work is Daniel's Lehrbuch der Geographie. Of this the sixty-fourth edition has recently appeared, which contains some interesting statements and figures. According to these, the number of inhabitants on the globe is about 1,435,000,000. There are 3,064 distinct languages and dialects known. There are about 1,100 different religions. There does not exist a single people which is without a religion of some kind. Even the lowest on the social scale have some religious idea, however crude. Christianity has 432,000,000 adherents. The Roman Catholic Church numbers 208,000,000; the Greek or Oriental Orthodox Church, 83,000,000; the Protestant Church, 123,000,000. Besides these there are about one hundred sects or smaller divisions claiming to be Christians, with 8,000,000 adherents. Of the non-Christians, 8,000,000 are Jews, 120,000,000 Mohammedans. These adherents of Islam are divided into three sects, the Sunites, the Shiites and Wappabites, while there are about seventy smaller Mohammedan sects. All other human beings are non-monotheistic or heathen, and embrace 875,000,000 souls. Among the heathen religion, Brahminism is the most widespread, and embraces about 413,000,000 adherents, and its younger offshoot, Buddhism, embraces 303,000,000. Other heathen religions have 135,000,000 adherents. There are yet over one thousand millions of souls who are not Christian! What a lesson for missionary zeal and work!—Christian at Work.

CRUISE OF THE "ALBATROSS."—The Albatross, the steamer belonging to the United States Fish Commission, which has done such good work for the past few years on the Atlantic Coast, has been fitted out for a long cruise along the shores of the Pacific. A company of naturalists will remain on board permanently, while others will visit her from time to time for special researches. Dredging will be undertaken at different points off the coast, and many additions to our knowledge of the life of that ocean may be anticipated. Special attention will be given to determine what fishes found there are valuable for food, a subject hitherto altogether unknown.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross there is in our composition.—Colton.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Representative Roberison's bill, providing that public lands in the State of Louisiana shall cease to be subject to disposal by sale at private entry, and be subject to homestead only, was introduced on June 21, and referred to the committee on public lands.

Gen. Sheridan's health is steadily improving.

In the course of the debate, in the House, on the public land surveys, Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, declared the Democratic party had recovered 80,000,000 acres of land

Ballington Booth, a son of Gen. Booth, who originated the Salvation Army in England, has been appointed marshall for the United States, and is to reorganize the forces. He has opened pretentious headquarters in New York City. The orders have gone forth from headquarters to all the branches of the organizations throughout the country to utilize every political gathering during the presidential campaign for the purposes of religious revivalism.

New Orleans merchants, who visited Denver in order to establish a trade with that city, were cordially welcomed. On June 23 the Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans made an exhibit and solicited sales at the room of the Chamber of Commerce of Denver, and disposed of a number of carloads of goods.

The corner-stone of the Widows' and Orphans' Home, which will be built by the Free Masons of Tennessee at a cost of $50,000, was laid June 23, at Maplewood, five miles north of Nashville.

Elizabeth, N. J., settled her city debt on June 22. The city was involved by improvements some years ago and defaulted with a debt of $6,000,000.

The steamer "Suevia" left New York City for Europe, on June 23, with 312 excursionists of the Teachers' Association of Cincinnati as passengers.

The town of Holbrook, Ariz., was almost destroyed by fire on June 24, and the inhabitants are destitute.

The heat in New York City has been almost insufferable. The highest point reached on June 24 was ninety-seven degrees. On that day there were four deaths reported from the heat and thirteen prostrations.

The Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, which met in Cincinnati, refused to organize the Knights of Pythias Sisterhood.

Under a recent act of Congress, approved by the President, any envelope, wrapper or postal card containing on the outside anything which reflects injuriously upon the person addressed, or anyone else, will be excluded from the mails.

After six days' labor, the National Republican Convention completed its work, and, on June 25, nominated Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, for President, and Levi P. Morton, of New York, for Vice-President.

FOREIGN.

It is stated that Emperor William will declare his intention of taking personal command of the autumn manœuvers. He also will personally reopen the Reichstag and Landtag.

Empress Victoria, under the will of Frederick, inherits Charlottenburg Castle and palace in Berlin occupied by the late Emperor when he was Crown Prince.

In the House of Commons, on June 20, Mr. Balfour denied that he would resign the chief secretaryship for Ireland.

An alarming rebellion has broken out among the people made destitute by the floods in Honan and Hantung, in China. It is reported that the troops have joined the rebels and murdered the government officials.

Francis Joseph has appointed Emperor William honorary colonel of the Thirty-fourth Infantry Regiment which he named "William I." and named the Seventh Hussar Regiment "William I."

Advices received at Khartoum report the arrival in the Bahr-El Ghazel Province of a white pasha with a very large force. The news has greatly disturbed the Mahdi.

The Osservatore Romano, referring to Premier Crispi's policy as intended to force the Pope to leave Italy, says it will have that result if persevered in.

The coronation of Emperor William is expected to be like the inauguration of the Reichstag, a reminiscence of the glory of his grandfather. The ceremony will take place at Koenigsberg, on October 18, the anniversary at once of the birthday of Emperor Frederick and the date on which William I. was crowned in 1861.

The British order of Odd Fellows shows a membership of 52,000.

The income of Oxford University for 1887 was $326,000.

A dispatch from Shanghai says a feeling of uneasiness prevails among foreigners in Corea on account of the threatening attitude of the natives. All the foreign consulates are guarded by soldiers. An American man-of-war has been sent to give assistance.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

The fare over the following roads—Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, and Mobile and Ohio—will be 1¾ cents per mile.

For further information address W. J. Heacle, president, Mobile, Ala.; J. G. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Price, keeper, Biloxi, Miss.

MINISTERING.

What though your feet are often over-weary
On remorseless errands sent,
And O'ered shoulders ache and ache so sorely
'Neath heavy burdens bent?
Be patient (so) the ones whom you are serving
Be soon beyond your care,
Lest little wayward feet that you are guiding Slip past you unaware.

Ah, then, no joy would seem so dear and blessed
As spending months and years
In ceaseless service for the vanished darlings
So vainly mourned with tears.
But while you have your dear ones still around you,
Do not regret your fate;
For easier aching feet and arms and shoulders
Than aching hearts to bear.

And still beyond your household duties reaching,
Stretch forth a helping hand;
So many stand in need of loving comfort
All over this wide land;
Perchance some soul you aid to-day, to-morrow
May with the angels sing;
Some one may go straight from your earthly table
To banquet with the King.

The Qualifications of Superintendents and Teachers Requisite to Successful Work in the Sunday-School.

BY DON. G. F. McGEHEE.

In order to decide what the necessary qualifications under discussion are, it will be needful, first, to settle what we mean by successful work; and to this we will first address ourselves.

Is it successful Sunday-school work to fill our school-rooms, Sabbath after Sabbath, with bright-faced, neatly dressed, and well-behaved children? Not altogether; for while the presence of the children is indispensable to the existence of a school, an orderly aggregation of material is not all that is needed. Is it the careful training of this assemblage in certain exercises, or the observance and practice of some fixed forms of service? Not that alone; for while order is nature's first law, and there is no such thing as success without it, "the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life." Neither is it the establishment of an esprit du corps, which, by a spirit of rivalry with other schools, will keep our ranks full; for while filial affection for, and a fond pride in, this god-mother of our children is altogether desirable and to be cultivated, jealousy toward, or envy of others, are not of the Spirit of him whose words we teach, and whose example we would enforce and impress on our pupils. Is it the study of the Bible as a book, memorizing its lessons and familiarizing its history? That is a part, but only a small part. No. Successful work is comprised in no one, nor yet in all of these. What, then, is it? I answer, It is bringing souls to Christ. That, and that only is the test of success. That, and that alone, should be the purpose of the teacher, the burden of his prayer, the end and aim of all his labor.

As qualifications requisite to the accomplishment of this end, I would say, first consecration, then a consistent life, diligence in searching the Scriptures, and a spirit of self-denial which will allow no ordinary obstacle to interfere with a prompt and punctual attendance at the school.

On the first of these requirements I would unhesitatingly say that no man or woman who is not an experimental Christian can be a successful teacher or superintendent, in my sense of the word. Cultivation in a teacher is a good thing, an excellent thing, and a cultivated teacher without an experimental knowledge of the riches of grace in Christ Jesus may impart much useful knowledge, may excite an interest in the study of the Book, but will hardly lead one to search the Scriptures for those words of eternal life which they themselves have never found. As well expect one born blind to extol the glories of a sunrise or the lovely tints of the rose. But it is not enough that the teacher should be an experimental Christian. Many a Sunday-school is dead weighted with a teacher who, upon the suggestion of a friend—his pastor, it may be—has conceived it to be his religious duty to "take a class." Grooming in spirit, but not daring to refuse, he takes up this cross, determined to do his duty, and he does it in a perfunctory way that is unprofitable all around. None more exact in asking every question in the lesson paper, but that is the end of it. We have all seen him, and we have also seen his class first grow inattentive, then irregular, and then fade out altogether.

What was the matter? Was he not a practical Christian, of pure life and godly walk? Aye, he was all that, but his heart was not in the work. He thought he was doing his work right; but he lacked the yearning love of the Master to carry his work to its great end. He sowed the seed, but failed to cultivate it, water it with his tears, or fertilize it with his prayers. No, nothing short of consecration will qualify the teacher for the discharge of his duties acceptably to God and profitably to his class. He must feel that he has been set apart to this work. Humbled with a sense of his own insufficiency, and burdened with the solemn responsibility resting upon him, he must go often to the source of all strength and wisdom for the guidance and support he needs. At the same time appreciating the loftiness of his calling, the honor of being allowed to be a co-worker with the Holy Spirit in evangelizing the world and fitting it for the second coming of the Lord, he should jealously guard his own daily walk and conversation, lest through him reproach should come upon the cause which he presents. Living in the world, he should live above it, like the Master, pitying and full of tender sympathy for the weak and tempted; yet strong and wise to guide and guard. He should be filled full of the Spirit of him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." Loving them because he loves the Master and the Master loves them; loving them for their very weakness, and yearning over them the more tenderly for their very proneness to go astray, his soul should be aflame with the burning desire to bring them to know and love the Good Shepherd as he knows and loves him.

It is human to love those who love us, and it is not unlawful to draw others to ourselves that they may be attracted to the cause we represent. So the teacher, by first gaining the confidence and affection of his class, will find it easier to lead them into his way of thinking and feeling; hence he must make himself the personal friend of each one, sympathizing with him in all his plans and purposes, pleasures and disappointments, tolerating gracefully even that which is disagreeable, always patient, always cordial. Such an one will bind his class to him with hooks of steel; his opinion will always be deferred to, his precepts cherished. Such an one can keep his boys even after they have exchanged knee-breeches and jackets for pants and long-tailed coats. Their love for him will keep them in the class after other boys have grown too large to be Sunday-school children any longer. And right here is one of the greatest difficulties with which we have to contend—that is, how to keep our boys in attendance on the school as they approach manhood. The girls give us no trouble on this point; they generally stay in the class until promoted to the teacher's chair, or called to fill the wifely office; but the boys, as they advance in their teens, begin to feel that they have outgrown their places in the Sunday-school, and here is the place for the exhibition of all the teacher's best skill. Here is where the love and respect which he has awakened in them will come to his aid. A happy and successful teacher is he who can hold on to his boys through childhood, youth and young manhood, until he can turn them over to his superintendent fully equipped workers, ready and qualified to take their places by his side, and lead others, as he has led them, in the way of truth and life.

It has been said that the Sunday-school teacher's position is next to that of the pastor in responsibility. I go further and say that, in his particular field, the Sunday-school teacher holds a more responsible position than the pastor. He stands next to the parents, in the possibilities of his relationship to the child. He comes in personal contact with the child in its most impressible stage, and that, under circumstances which enable him to draw out and study closely every trait, he has frequently recurring opportunities of personal appeal. In a word, he can get closer to the heart and affections of his pupil than the pastor ever can in his casual interviews, or than anyone else can, except the parent.

"As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." A student of human nature and child nature has said: "Give me the first seven years of a child's life, and I care not who has his training afterwards." That may be an exaggerated way of putting it; but it is to emphasize the important truth of the necessity of bringing the right influences to bear while the heart is tender and unsullied by the stains which contact with the world is sure to impart. The impressions made then may be overlaid, but can not be eradicated; and this brings me to the consideration of another qualification requisite to a successful teacher, viz: The life of the teacher must be consistent with what he teaches. He should be "a living epistle, known and read" as such by his pupils, at all times "setting forth and adorning the doctrines" of his Master. Children are close observers, and any irregularity of conduct or conversation on the part of the teacher will be noted, and, it may be, plead for some greater license on their part. He need not carry his Sunday-school lesson nor his Sunday-school dignity into their social intercourse, but he should carry an atmosphere of purity, of affectionate sympathy, of cheerfulness tempered with the fear of God and love toward Christ, which will draw them to a life of purity and create in them a desire for that Spirit which has made his character so lovely.

It is not necessary to dilate on the necessity of the third qualification enumerated, viz: Searching the Scriptures. In no other department of life would anyone be expected to teach successfully what they had not themselves studied, and any detected in such an attempt would be set down as a charlatan and impostor; yet, sad to say, there are some who, from indolence or a failure to appreciate the unspeakable importance of the work, do undertake the duties of a Sunday-school teacher without the necessary study and preparation, and sad work do they make of it. Oh, how I have pitied a class of little ones whom I have seen driven pell-mell through the list of printed questions, without a comment, without an exhortation or the personal application of a single truth in the lesson, and close their books without the remotest idea that there was a word of love or warning there for any of them! And how I have pitied the teacher who was so blind to the precious opportunity of opening these young hearts to the light and warmth of God's love!

The last, though not the least important qualification, is punctuality, and to this a spirit of self-denial is indispensable. Physical discomfort, inclement weather, a thousand causes may be plead as sufficient excuses for failure to meet business or social engagements; but not so here. Your class may not all be there, but there may be one little soul who has a right to expect you, and who has gone there to meet you and receive from you that weekly morsel of the bread of life which, perhaps, he can get nowhere else. Will you have him go away disappointed, to bear his hunger for a whole week longer? or, it may be, disheartened by your apparent indifference, go off and "fill his belly with the husks which the swine do eat"? Have we not often been met with the reply, when, meeting our pupils on the street, we upbraided them for irregularity of attendance: "Why, I was there so often, but my teacher did not come"? If that child wanders away and becomes a Sabbath-breaker, can that teacher stand blameless before God? On the other hand, have we not been repaid a thousandfold, when, on some gloomy Sabbath, putting aside personal comfort, we have bundled on our wraps and hurried to the Sunday-school room to find one or, maybe, two pairs of bright eyes looking for our coming? Did we not feel ashamed that we had thought of faltering? Was it not a blessed season, as we sat sheltered from the storm that raged without, and told of that ark of safety which would securely shelter from the severer storms that awaited them in life? I recall some such seasons whose grateful fragrance lingers with me still, and feel that truly there was Bethel.

Finally, the teacher to do successful work must appreciate not only the importance of the work, but the brevity of the time allotted in which to do it. Think of it! There are 8,760 hours in a year, of which the Sunday-school teacher has but 52 in which to do his work. How precious every one of those hours should be! How more than golden every moment! How important that he should be fully equipped, that he may always speak the right word in season! Realizing that the seed which he is sowing must bear fruit in eternity, how solemn the responsibility, and how helpless is the teacher in his own strength! But, thanks be unto God, we do not work alone! We may have his Holy Spirit to guide us and help us, and, if we are faithful to the trust committed to us, we have his sure promise that, though "we go forth weeping, bearing the precious seed, at the great reaping day of judgment we may come again with rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us." Who would not bear toil and self-denial in view of that glorious day, when, with our arms full of these precious sheaves, we may present ourselves before our Lord, and lay them at his feet, as the golden harvest which we have gathered in his name?

As you perceive, I have not alluded to the requisite qualifications of the superintendent, and I will not weary you now with an enumeration of those qualifications further than to say that he should possess everyone of those required in the teacher, and, in addition thereto, should be a "man of affairs," possessing decided executive ability, a great deal of tact, a good judge of human nature, patient, kind-hearted, cheerful, prudent; in a word, "a workman needing not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

WOODVILLE, Mississippi.

Jackson (Miss.) District Conference.

BY E. L. B.

The District Conference for the Jackson district met at Raymond, Miss., Thursday, June 21, and was called to order, at nine o'clock A. M. of that day, by the Rev. D. A. Little, P. E. Emmett L. Ross, lay delegate from Canton station, was chosen secretary, and Rev. J. H. Woodward, of Anding circuit, assistant secretary. Nearly every station and circuit in the district was represented by pastors or laymen, and the session, which lasted three days, was one of much interest and profit, both to those present and to the church. The sessions, morning and evening, were quite well attended by the Christian people at Raymond, and no effort was spared on their part to care for and entertain the delegates, and we have every reason to believe that the Conference was a spiritual blessing to the good people of that little city. The several reports of the pastors and laymen concerning the spiritual condition of the church were most gratifying, and betokened a growth of zeal and piety throughout the district. The material and financial condition of the church also received excellent reports. It was evident that the people are coming up to the help of the Lord nobly with their substance. In a majority of cases very good and encouraging reports were made in regard to the Sabbath-school interest.

Religious exercises were held morning and night each day, and excellent and telling sermons were preached by Revs. C. S. Powell, I. W. Cooper, W. B. Lewis, C. G. Andrews, Ira B. Robertson, R. S. Woodward, and others. The Rev. Dr. Price, of the Presbyterian Church, also preached an able and eloquent sermon during the session.

Shortly before adjourning the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the thanks of this District Conference are due and are hereby tendered to our efficient secretary, Bro. Emmett L. Ross, for his valued services.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the present management of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and are determined to do all in our power to increase its circulation.

Resolved, That we pray God's blessing upon the people of Raymond for their generous hospitality, in the kind entertainment of this Conference, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Raymond Gazette for publication.

During the session the Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., of Brandon district, and the traveling agent of Centenary College, made a stirring appeal in behalf of that institution, and secured two subscriptions of $100 each to the endowment fund, and a resolution, from the pastors present, "to send, with God's help, at least one student to Centenary."

On the second day of the Conference Sister E. D. Jones, secretary of the Annual Conference in the matter of "Woman's Part in Church Extension," read a valuable paper on that subject, and accompanied it with an eloquent and Christian talk that made a deep impression upon her hearers. This is a work that ought to command the thoughtful interest of all Methodist women, for it promises to open up to them a field of labor that will be not only glorifying to God, but refreshing to them.

Before adjourning the lay delegates present elected the following delegates to the Annual Conference, which meets at Jackson, Dec., next December: D. Bunch, W. L. Nugent, George Harvey, and A. W. Ratliff. Emmett L. Ross and Dr. D. A. Coker were elected reserve delegates. By motion the secretary was requested to furnish the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE with a report of the proceedings of the Conference.

"Turn on the Light."

BY REV. A. B. NICHOLSON.

MR. EDITOR: I see in the ADVOCATE, of June 21, an article from Bro. Mellen in regard to the Conference claimants. While all he said is very forcible and true, yet there are two things, I think, ought to be mentioned in connection with this matter.

In the first place, the Mississippi Conference is the mother of several small Conferences. As such, there are left on her hands a large number of Conference claimants, from that fact as well as others.

In the second place, Bro. Mellen shows the very small amounts paid to our Conference claimants. Well, is not the Conference Board, at least, partly to blame for that? The churches think when they pay their assessments, that is all that is necessary. The fact is, the amount is so small that is asked for, the people look upon it as a very small matter. That is our trouble, and, while the other assessment ordered by the Conference are increased, the assessment for the Conference claimants is lessened; for the assessment this year is the same as last, while four new ones are to be added, which, of course, will lessen the amounts they received last year.

Bro. Mellen, with all his startling facts and figures, will not get the church to go above the assessment. Indeed, she has never done even that much yet. I may be deceived, but I believe if there was no assessment (and let every preacher read Bro. Mellen's last article to their congregations), they would double the amount. It would turn out like a case that took place some years ago. When the "Post Oak Circuit" first came out a preacher on a circuit got a copy, came to an old man's house and read to him about old Bro. Hemphill and the two ladies that carried the old man's Conference allowance, and the old man's remarks in reply. Old Bro. G. broke out into a fit of cry, and said, "Old woman, bring me my pocket-book." She did so, and the old man gave the preacher five dollars. I think facts and figures are the best assessment that can be made. If Bro. Mellen will get the presiding elders to double their assessments on their districts, and back up the same with his articles, he will go up to Conference rejoicing, carrying his sheaves in the pockets of the preachers. The trouble is, a man can only feel his own sore, but that time is coming with many when they will have to step down and out without a dollar or a board to shelter them and theirs from the storm. Then comes the tug of war.

A baby was born in Bethlehem eighteen hundred years ago. His parents were poor, and he had no unusual advantages. He raised no army. He conquered no kingdoms. He owned no real estate and had no bank account. Neither did he write books, or paint pictures, or compose music. He was mocked at by the great, and died a criminal's death. Yet this Man has revolutionized the civilized world. Multitudes have lived and died triumphantly by the power of faith in him and of obedience to the doctrines which he inculcated, and he has more followers in the world to-day than ever before. His maxims are acknowledged, even by those who reject his authority, to be the noblest and purest that have ever been uttered, and no man has ever been able to pick a flaw in his character. What will you do with this Jesus who is called Christ?

There is no such detective as prayer; for no one can hide away from it. It puts its hand on the shoulder of a man ten thousand miles off; it alights on a ship in mid-Atlantic.—Talmage.

GOD'S PRESENCE PROMISED.

Exodus xxxiii. 12-23.

GOLDEN TEXT. I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken.—Exod. xxxiii. 17.

TIME.—B. C. 1491, or B. C. 1490, in the month of August.

PLACE.—Mt. Sinai.

INTRODUCTION.

To Recall the Promise.—The self-humiliation of the people (verses 4-6) had appeased God's anger. He was now ready to be entreated. Moses, therefore, renews his supplications on their behalf, and especially prays for a revocation of the threatened withdrawal of the divine presence, and substitution for it of a mere angel. Taking advantage of his privilege to speak to God, as friend with friend, (verse 11), he ventures to expostulate, uses familiar terms, and persists until he at last obtains a distinct declaration that his request is granted.

12. And Moses said unto the Lord, Thou sayest ... Bring up this people—Jehovah had commanded Moses to lead the people to Canaan, and promised him the guidance of an "angel;" but he expressly distinguished this angel from his own personal presence. Let me know whom thou wilt send with me—Moses finds the promises of the preceding chapters ambiguous. He had experienced already much of the hardship of leadership among such a people, and if it had been so great with God himself in the midst of them, what would it be with a mere angel there? He did not wish to enter upon the unknown without having God at his side, for no angel, however exalted, could supply his place. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name—God had shown this knowledge when he called on Moses out of the burning bush (chapter iii. 4); but the exact phrase had not been used previously. It implies a very high degree of divine favor. God "knows by name" only those whom he greatly regards. Hast also found grace in my sight—Moses now reminded the Lord of this divine assurance with such courage as can only be produced by faith, which wrestles with God and will not let him go without a blessing.

13. Shew me now thy ways—The way in which this people are henceforth to be dealt with he desires to understand. They have been heedless and perverse. They may be so again. Show me thy ways of salvation, of deliverance and guidance for this people to the promised land. That I may know thee—That is, thy mind herein. That I may find grace—He makes the fact of his having found grace already an argument for his finding still more. And consider that this nation is thy people—He at once draws inference that Jehovah must again recognize as his people those whom he has before called thy (Moses') people. (Chapter xxxii. 8.) If I am thine, let the people be thine also—this is again the sacerdotal, mediatorial thought.

14. My presence shall go with thee—That is, the same visible symbol of my presence which ye have hitherto enjoyed. Moses had succeeded in obtaining the promise of the restoration of the Shechinah of the cloudy pillar. The "angel," then, is the angel of his presence (Isaiah lxiii. 9), in whom is his name (xxiii. 20), that is, the Lord himself in angelic office and presence. I will give thee rest—Not only certain thy present anguish and perplexity of mind for thy people, but in due time I will bring them to their resting-place and settled habitation.

15. If thy presence go not ... carry us up hence—Let us rather live and die in the wilderness, with thy presence and favor, than go into Canaan without it; for even that promise of rest I value not without thy presence. Wherein ... have we found grace in thy sight—By what other token shall other nations and after-ages know? Not in that thou goest with us ... so we be separated ... from all the people—He takes it for granted that, with him, the people also have found grace with Jehovah; that is, he founds the entreaty that this may not remain concealed, that Jehovah may make it manifest by distinguishing him and his people, in his guidance of them, from all other nations on earth.

17. I will do this thing also—At length the promise is unambiguously given. Moses is rewarded for his importunity. God's people have found grace in his sight. For thou hast found grace, etc. It is for the sake of the mediator that the full pardon is given, and the full blessing restored. And so it is to the new covenant. It is because the Lord Jesus has found grace in the Father's sight that we are pardoned. It is because he knows him by name that we are accepted.

18. And he said, I beseech thee, shew me thy glory—As at the burning bush he had craved some sign of the divine favor and some pledge of help, he now, with the yearning so peculiar to authority for a vision of the Godhead, asks that his re-installation might be similarly accredited. He seeks for something surpassing all former revelations. He had talked with the Lord "face to face as a man speaketh unto his friend," but it was in the cloudy pillar; he and the people with him had seen "the glory of the Lord," but it was in the form of "devouring fire;" he had even beheld the "similitude" of the Lord in a mystical sense. But he asks now to behold the face of Jehovah in all its essential glory, neither veiled by a cloud nor represented by an angel.

19. I will make all my goodness pass before thee—Perhaps as God announced his name—"the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth," etc., a revelation of God's ineffable goodness was miraculously flashed into his inmost soul, and the thousand instances of it which he had known brought distinctly to his recollection, so as to "pass before him." Will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee—In the Scriptures the name (usually) does more than merely distinguish one individual from another (as in our common parlance), being significant of nature, of character, of some predominant quality. It is not that God may be called the Lord, the Lord God, but that he is the Lord that is, the real Jehovah—forever the same, and forever faithful to his promise. To proclaim his name, therefore, is to proclaim his nature, to testify to his real character. Will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, etc.—To be understood in a causative sense, as expressing the reason why Moses' request was granted, namely: that it was an act of unconditional grace and compassion on the part of God, to which no man, not even Moses, could lay any just claim.

20. Thou canst not see my face—Thou canst not, in thy mortal state, receive the full unclouded blaze of glory which constitutes the visible symbol of my face or presence. There shall no man see me, and live—As our bodily eye is dazzled, and its power of vision destroyed, by looking directly at the brightness of the sun, so would our whole nature be destroyed by an unveiled sight of the brilliancy of the glory of God. When we have become like God, and have been transformed into the "divine nature" (II Peter i. 4), then, and not till then, shall we see him as he is; then we shall see his glory without a veil, and live before him forever.

21, 22. Thou shalt stand upon a rock, While my glory passeth by ... put thee in a cleft of the rock—The place near the Lord where Moses was to stand, the cleft of the rock in which he was to be put, the hand which was to cover him while the Lord in his glory passed by, and to be taken away that he might see the Lord when his face was averted, are the simple elements of a real scene, in which the Lord conveyed to the sense and the reason of Moses the deep things of his glorious grace in a manner which was exactly adapted to the capacity of the inquirer. Cover thee with my hand while I pass by—With my protecting power.

23. Shall see my back parts—My back is my averted, mediate, extrinsic, self, visible to man in my works, my word, and my personal manifestations to my people. The answer seems to intimate that God's glory is in his goodness, and in his grace and mercy; but that, in our present state, we can only follow the track which his glory leaves in the works of grace he does: we can not bear to look face to face at his perfections in their essence. My face shall not be seen—All was granted that was possible. He was bidden to ascend Sinai alone; the flocks and the herds were to be removed to a distance from the mount (Exodus xxxiv. 3); he was to take his place on a well-known or prominent rock (Exodus xxxiii. 21); and there, covered by the divine hand and sheltered in a cliff of the rock, he was to wait while the divine glory passed him by. God, having first proclaimed his name, as "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, and yet visiting iniquity," and in no case "clearing the guilty" (Exodus xxxiv. 6, 7), passed Moses by in such sort that "his face" was not seen, but only "his back parts" (Exodus xxxiii. 21) some reflex image of his glory, that is to say, some radiance left by it, but the utmost that men could see and yet live—some near approach to that "beatific vision" which shall constitute to the saints in bliss the satisfaction of all their cravings, the perfect contentation of all their desires.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

We have abundant scriptural encouragement to plead with God, to fill our mouths with arguments on behalf of the welfare and spiritual prosperity of others.

Sweetest of all is the promise of God's abiding presence. Having him, though bereft of all others, we have what kinship or friendship can never supply—satisfying communion and infallible guidance.

The audacity of Moses' prayer—"show me thy glory" makes one tremble; its acceptance makes one rejoice with trembling," so high does it carry the standard of answerable petitions.

The only limit of God's revelation to the aspiring soul is mortality's power to endure it.

Every man may know that he has passed from death unto life, for the spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are born of God, and no one need stop short of that assurance. It is for you, yes, for you, fearful one. God never left a human soul in darkness when it wanted his presence and sought it in faith believing.

Opelousas District Conference.

I don't know, Mr. Editor, if there was anything that took place at our District Conference of enough moment to warrant any wider publicity than that which it already enjoys through telegraphic reports, etc., but I suppose it is expected of the secretary that he make some mention of the Conference in the church organ.

The Conference was held in the town of Lafayette, June 14-16. The presiding elder, Rev. S. S. Keener, was present, and won our admiration by his gracious, vivacious and brotherly manner in conducting the Conference. If I were to publish half of the encomiums and flattering remarks his talks and exhortations elicited from the people, some one might impugn my motive, so I forbear. This I can say and ought to say in justice to our elder: he is grown into his preachers' affections, growing in spirituality and growing in usefulness. Most of the clerical and lay members to the Conference were present. The session was harmony itself. Everything pertaining to a District Conference was before the body, and very ably discussed. From the reports of the preachers we learn that the district is moving on and moving up. Finances good. Growing spiritually. Sunday-schools satisfactory. Social meetings well attended. Churches being built. People calling for churches and preachers. The preachers all seem to be thoroughly alive to the interests of the work in all its departments. Some reported revivals, and others are just entering into the revival work.

The cause of education had a splendid champion in the person of our whole-souled lay brother, J. N. Pharr. After a stirring address, he lifted a collection of $1,200 toward the endowment fund of Centenary College. Will not the preachers of this Conference invite Bro. Pharr to come and take up their educational collections? I believe this good brother could raise $50,000 for Centenary in a year. Send in your invitations.

The outlook for the district is very hopeful. The preachers are happy, especially the unmarried ones. My! what courage the dear girl must have who can listen to the financial report of a preacher in Conference, and yet look all the more lovingly and trustfully into his eyes! Mr. Editor, I saw several such at our Conference, and felt like passing a vote of gratitude to them for their inspiriting presence. In lieu of that I now extend my hand to them, and welcome them into the ranks. God bless them! May the parsonage committees be prepared for them!

Your conduct of the ADVOCATE was commended, Doctor, and we resolved to work for its extension. So look out; you may have a rush. Could you not induce Dr. Carradine to give your readers a short article every week? He is appreciated in those parts. Kindly ask him to revise his article on "D. D.'s" and publish.

Lafayette is a beautiful town, and her people are genuine entertainers—at least, this writer and wife were never treated better.

The delegates to the Annual Conference are J. N. Pharr, E. W. Cushman, A. M. Mayo, Rev. Thomas Webb.

The next Conference will be held in Opelousas.

ALFRED E. CLAY,
Secretary.

From the Work.

HOMER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The protracted effort at this place is past, and it may be said by many and for many: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." Our beloved brother, Rev. L. L. Pickett, came at my request, and put in three weeks of faithful, earnest work. His methods and manipulations were a little peculiar at times; his preaching most searching and scriptural; his finely drawn line of moral character was after the fashion of the Holy Spirit—"a sharp two-edged sword, a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart;" his preaching expository and practical, clear ringing, and of no uncertain sound; his Bible readings unique and profitable. A man of prayer and faith and consecration, his one leading passion was to tone up and elevate the standard of personal piety as taught and enjoined in the Holy Scriptures. He emphasized sanctification and holiness of heart as the only basis of holiness of life, and most satisfactorily, from the Word of God, proved what is that "good and perfect will of God," and our high calling, even to "perfect holiness in the fear of God." It was Pauline, Wesleyanic—yea, the teaching of a greater—Jesus. I think I and quite a number of the faithful never enjoyed a meeting so much. Glory to the Master for the baptism! I thank God that he came among us, and that he was a guest at my house. Too many of the half-hearted, indifferent, backslidden church members were cynical, turned away and disregarded the Heaven-sent message as from his lips, and, we fear, are "dead, twice dead, and plucked up by the roots." The irreligious, with but few exceptions, spurned the message, "hardened their hearts and stiffened their necks," and, we fear, "grieved the Holy Spirit." O, it is a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God! For our God is a consuming fire." May the Lord have mercy on the sinners and backslidden church members of Homer! Amen!

We received three into the church here, and twelve during the year. Our finances are pretty well up for presiding elder and pastor, and the collections ordered by the Conference are well in hand. Our week of self-denial and prayer yielded fifty-one dollars in money, which, with other moneys, has been forwarded and gone to work, and we trust the spiritual lesson learned of self-denial, for Jesus' sake, is of infinitely more value than the little sum of money raised.

Our church building in Homer has received two coats of paint from base to spire, and presents a handsome, inviting appearance. The inside ought not to be slighted. Oh, for an inside cleansing of the house from the desecrating stains of tobacco!—but more especially a spiritual cleansing! And let all the church say, Amen! The parsonage has received sundry repairs and comforts. A beautiful set of furniture came in to us during self-denial week, which is to be carefully used and enjoyed, and to be handed down to our successor untarnished and undefiled. The above improvements, amounting in all to about $250, is the work of our noble ladies' society, the Willing Workers. God bless the dear sisters! Lisbon Church has received a new roof. Our three churches, all beautiful, attractive, comfortable, and out of debt, are surrounded by a kind, hospitable, noble people, and many devoted members. We bless God, and take comfort and encouragement from these evidences of growth and prosperity, but lament the hardness of sinners' hearts.

"Ephraim feedeth on the wind, and followeth after east wind: he daily increaseth lies and desolation. How shall I give thee up, Ephraim?"

In Christ, affectionately,

T. B. WHITE.

MEADVILLE CIRCUIT, VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: We have just held our second quarterly meeting, and are encouraged by the signs of success in several branches of our church work. I want to tell you of the good accomplished by our observance of "Children's Day," in particular. We have observed the day at each appointment where we had a Sunday-school in successful operation—i. e., at Meadville, Oak Grove, Nebo and Providence. We conducted our exercises according to the program sent us by our Publishing House, which, by-the-by, can not be excelled in the way they do their work. These are some of the results patent to a man who is interested in the Sunday-school work:

1. An increase in the interest, among both parents and children, on the subject of the religious education of the rising generation. Even the Hardshells are softening on this subject. Some of our best workers are men who had been taught that Sunday-schools were a "device of the devil" to catch unwary souls, equal to the dance or the card table.

2. It has resulted with us in developing latent talent among our members, which might never have been brought out but for these occasions. In some places we had excellent impromptu speeches by men who were simply too timid to undertake their duty but for the spur of religious enthusiasm. In other places we had essays of first-class quality and deep spirituality by young ladies who had taken up this cross for the first time. But the most interesting and beautiful part of the work done was among the children. They did their part in the exercises with animation and accuracy. I noticed particularly their success in taking collections.

The third thing to be considered as resulting from the observance of this day: There was collected on this day, on the circuit, eighteen dollars and eighteen cents. A good part of this money will be given for needy Sunday-schools.

We have raised almost enough to build us a real nice church at Oak Grove. We expect to begin building by the time the crops are laid by, and will try to have it completed by the fourth quarterly meeting, so that our beloved presiding elder can dedicate it for us.

We are moving along in a steady current, with a stiff breeze, with the expectation of reaching port after a while, though we sometimes run against an old water-soaked (or whisky-soaked) log, and our ship sides are scratched by the dead branches of some projecting tree, or her copper bottom scrapes the back of some defunct fossil who is nearly covered (I am thankful to say) in the mud of his own ignorance—not to say, superstition.

H. BRADFORD, P. C.

WATERPROOF, LA.

MR. EDITOR: The Sabbath-school here—under the leadership of its worthy and most efficient and dearly beloved superintendent, Bro. B. F. Bonney, assisted by those noble and zealous teachers, Misses Jenny C. Andrews and Bella Stewart, and Mrs. Abbie Wailes, and others—is accomplishing great and permanent good for the cause of Christ. The school is not a very large one, but it is well organized, and is doing thorough work—work that will last and will stamp its impress upon the morals of the community in after years. In connection with the school we have a live and actively-at-work juvenile missionary society. The children and young people, too, many of them, take great interest in the society; almost every child, I believe, in town is a member of it, and attends the monthly meetings. It is beautiful to see the "little ones" at work for the master in this way! Having been diligently at work for twelve happy months with glad hearts, faces all aglow with love to God and ready hands, did the lovely band come forward on "Children's Day" to do something more for the Savior. Conscious of the great blessings they enjoy as Christians, they have a desire to see others in possession of the same, and so on this day they came to the treasury and cast in their gifts that they might aid in sending to those who have it not the blessed Bible, the Word of Life.

The exercises of the hour consisted in singing, recitations by three little girls, an address by our young brother, W. W. Drake, and a short talk by the writer. A large audience was present, and, after the children had given in their offerings, not wishing to offend any, the basket was passed around that all might have an opportunity to contribute something; and the entire contribution amounted to $12. What a blessed privilege that we can of our means give something, it matters not how little, to those who are poor and needy! May the Lord continue to bless this little band of faithful workers, carrying on the good-begun work to a most glorious completion!

We feel that God is with us here, dear brethren, and is blessing us and glorifying himself in us. We are doing all we can to advance his kingdom. Pray for us that we may be faithful and become more and more zealous for the salvation of poor lost sinners. Truly,

J. E. RIDDLE, P. C.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As you have had nothing from this work for some time, and as we are on rising grounds, I want to tell the good news. Our pastor, Rev. J. N. Tucker, is doing a most excellent work, and very acceptably. Everything is moving on harmoniously. We think the Conference sent the right man to the right place. He works all the time. He loves his people, and has their interest at heart. He inquires into the spiritual condition of his members, and does it in such a way as to make them love him. I never saw this people as willing to pay all their assessments as they are now. We have paid over half of our pastor's salary for the year. We have paid three times as much missionary money to date as we paid all last year. We have a very interesting Sunday-school here at Fannin. I must say that we have more perfect recitations, and more thoroughly understood by the scholars, than any school I was ever in.

Fannin Sunday-school observed "Children's Day" on the fourth Sunday in May. It was a day long to be remembered by all who were present. We used our programs with speeches, recitations, singing, and an address by our pastor. Our collection amounted to $12 10.

I think, Mr. Editor, we have much for which to be thankful and to urge us on to greater success in our Master's cause.

W. M. WILLIAMS,
Stew'd and S. S. Supt.

STONEWALL, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from Stonewall. My heart is so overjoyed that I desire to let the Christian people at large know what God is doing for that people. Bro. Guon is the preacher-in-charge, and is a good conductor. His meeting commenced on Saturday before the first Sabbath in June, and continued eight days. Twenty-five additions to the church, about thirty conversions, and nearly everyone was happy who resides in Stonewall. Larger congregations, in a space of the same size, are not to be found. Bro. Guon has a bright future before him throughout his work. It is to be hoped that Stonewall will come up with her assessments in full after being blessed spiritually.

L. J. JONES.

(This communication was dated June 12, postmarked June 27, and received in this office June 28. Where was it between the time written and the time postmarked?—ED.)

ELLISVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: You may say to Bishop Duncan that the rough seats that were in our church last year have been taken out, and neat, comfortable ones placed in their stead at a cost of $60. This being done, we commenced our meeting the second Sunday in June, and continued for ten days with fine results. The meeting was good from the first service, but on Monday, the second day, God came down in great power, and was with us in every service from that until the close of the meeting. As the results of the meeting, the church was greatly revived, twenty-five were added to the church, and a number professed conversion. Bros. W. W. Cammack, J. N. Ware and W. P. Meador was with us, Bro. Cammack remaining until the meeting closed. Thanks to these brethren for services rendered, but to God be all the glory.

W. W. SIMMONS.

CONEHATTA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: In a recent letter to the ADVOCATE I stated that when I came on this work there was but three ADVOCATES taken, and up to that writing I had received twenty-four new subscribers. Since then I have increased the number to forty-four. We have two hundred and fifty members on this circuit, and forty-four ADVOCATES. Does not this compare favorably with any circuit in the Conference?

JAS. G. CAMMACK.

BE CAREFUL.—An old man is like an old wagon; with light loading and careful usage it will last for years, but one heavy load or sudden strain will break it and ruin it forever. Many people reach the age of fifty, sixty or even seventy measurably free from most of the pains and infirmities of age, cheery in heart, and sound in health, ripe in wisdom and experience, with sympathies mellowed by age, and with reasonable prospects and opportunities for continued usefulness in the world for a considerable time. Let such persons be thankful, but let them also be careful. An old constitution is like an old bone—broken with ease, mended with difficulty. A young tree bends to the gale, an old one snaps and falls before the blast. A single hard lift; an hour of heating work; an evening of exposure to rain and damp; a severe chill; an excess of food; the unusual indulgence of any appetite or passion; a sudden fit of anger; an improper dose of medicine—any of these or other similar things may cut off a valuable life in a hour, and leave the fair hope of usefulness and enjoyment a shapeless wreck.—Hastings' Birthday Book.

E. A. Seminary Commencement.

The E. A. Seminary, located at Arcadia, La., has just closed its fifth annual session. It has been a year of great prosperity and remarkable success. Prof. R. A. Smith, A. M., the founder and principal of the institution, is a man of liberal education, a fine disciplinarian, a thorough teacher and a deeply pious man. He strives to inculcate in the hearts of his pupils a high sense of honor and rectitude. He teaches them, by precept and example, independence of thought and action. This is eminently a training-school for the youth of the land. The course of study is more extensive than that of most of our female colleges, while the young men may, if they wish, complete the course equal to that of our best male colleges. Prof. Smith was assisted the past session by that refined and scholarly gentleman, Prof. C. Ives, a graduate of Union College, New York—a faithful, conscientious teacher.

The department of music is presided over by Mrs. A. L. DuBose, an elegant lady and accomplished musician. She has given entire satisfaction, and her pupils show marked improvement.

The commencement exercises began, June 3, with the annual sermon by Rev. T. B. White, D. D.—subject, "Wisdom." He gave us a good, sound sermon, wholesome in doctrine and rich in thought. He exhorted all, and especially the young, to seek that wisdom which comes from God, through Christ; that, as compared with it, all the wisdom of the world was vain—was as nothing.

On Monday morning the examination of classes began, and continued through Tuesday and Wednesday mornings and a part of the afternoons. The examinations were thorough. We saw there was no preparation of parts or lessons for the occasion. The pupils impressed us that they had been thoroughly taught, and they generally understood the subject under discussion. A part of the afternoons of Monday and Tuesday was devoted to compositions and recitations. No one failed. Some of the compositions of the little girls compared favorably with the older ones; yet they were child-like and natural.

On Monday night we had some good music by the younger members of the music class and school. All seemed to enjoy the "Gymnastic Song" by the little girls and boys. Then came the debate between chosen members of the Adelphian Society—subject, "Intemperance Has Done More Harm in the World Than the Sword." They interested us for more than an hour, and we became excited as to the result. The negative side won.

The concert, on Tuesday night, was a great success—at least, that seemed to be the verdict rendered by the audience. The cantata, "Voices of Nature," by the little ones was well done. They sang their little songs and performed their parts with ease and grace.

On Wednesday morning Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Miss., made his appearance, and added much to the interest of the exercises by asking questions and giving advice, which was well meant and timely and will accomplish good.

On Wednesday afternoon the contest in declamation between the "E." and "A.," the two literary societies of the school, was held. These were all selections—some of which were very long—and it was remarkable how well they knew their pieces. There was no prompting, and there was not a failure throughout all the exercises. The prize was awarded to the "E." Society." The final concert was given on Wednesday night, and the young vocalists won for themselves great honor in the performance of their parts.

On Thursday morning two young ladies read essays, and three young gentlemen delivered orations. They spoke in loud, clear tones and reflected great credit upon themselves for the manner in which they treated their subjects. Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., was then introduced to the audience. He gained their attention from the very first and held it to the last. He gave us the grandest address to which we had ever listened. It was so full of pure, deep thought, so original and withal so new to himself. The only manuscript (if I may so express it) was the printed programme of the concert on the night before. This, with the essays and orations of the class before him, formed the foundation upon which he built a solid, massive structure, symmetrical in every part, and making a sublime and beautiful whole. It was full of pathos, wit and humor. In his peroration he urged the class to honor and reverence their parents and the aged and helpless, because it would bring sunshine and happiness to their hearts and a sweet contentment to their own. He reached the grand climax in alluding to the name of the institution as an illustration of what he had just said: "This, the E. A. Seminary—Emily Antoinette—is a noble tribute of an honored son to his beloved mother—a beautiful illustration of filial love and devotion." He then turned to her (for she sat on the stage just behind him), and said: "Madam, how did you succeed in raising him so well? I congratulate you that you have such a son!" Just here I lost his remarks, so busy was I with my own thoughts and feelings; and I think most of the hearers had the same feelings.

Mr. Editor, you have heard Dr. Marshall, and you can well imagine how sublime his words were; but you would not know it from what I have just written. That is what my memory recalls after the lapse of two weeks.

For the benefit of persons who wish to send their children to Prof. Smith's school, I will say that board can be had in good families at ten to twelve dollars per month, including fuel and lights.

MRS. P. G. RANDLE.

Arcadia, Louisiana

Enterprise, Miss.

I am glad that we preachers have the privilege of turning aside occasionally from the routine duties of the pastorate and join some brother in a protracted effort for the salvation of souls. Such work is beneficial both for the church left and the one where the work is done, because the absent pastor returns with renewed zeal and enthusiasm, which often follows Methodist revivals.

We have just made a trip to Enterprise, Miss., where we assisted Bro. B. S. Rayner in a meeting of one week's duration. Not being intimately acquainted with him, we were somewhat anxious to know his qualifications for making a visiting preacher feel at ease in his pulpit and be at liberty to give free expression to the suggestions of the Spirit. Some pastors are so very formal and distant that they not only bring their flock into a cold and lifeless state, but actually freeze out the zeal and enthusiasm of their colaborers. But the brother mentioned we did not find to be of that stamp; but, on the contrary, he is more likely to warm a frozen heart and strengthen the feeble knees of his assistant, and make him soon forget that he is in the pulpit of another. To labor with him is to create a desire to do so again. We were entertained at the parsonage; and, oh! how home-like, how pleasant and free was the stay! Sister Rayner knows exactly how to take care of the preachers, and does it as if no burden was attached whatever. The people know how to do their part, for nowhere have we enjoyed more fine dinners and delightful buggy rides. If we could have remained longer, the physical man would have been greatly built up. Bro. Rayner is much beloved by his flock, has his work well in hand, and will go up to Conference with a good report.

The congregations during the meeting were very fine, and better attention to the preaching of the Word we have never seen. Twice each day we preached. At the close of the morning services short experiences were given, followed by earnest prayers. These were all attended with the presence and power of the Spirit, which prepared the people for the evening services. There are not many people in Enterprise who do not belong to some church, and a large number of accessions could not be expected. We had six to join, with a probability of others to follow. The church membership was greatly revived, and a large number who were a little lukewarm reconsecrated themselves to the service of God. The last service of the meeting, which closed just before we took our leave, was the best of the feast. While the choir, that had been so faithful under the skillful leadership of Mrs. C. C. Hand, sang that beautiful song, "God be with you till we meet again," nearly everyone in the large audience was moved to come forward and give their hand to us in covenant to meet us in heaven. Some came who had not done so for many years. It was a season of great rejoicing, and seemed to be a foretaste of the general rejoicing that will take place in eternity, where "Sabbaths have no end and congregations ne'er break up."

This dear people made a willing donation to a fund for building a mission chapel in New Orleans, and several brethren and sisters sent us contributions for our own purse, accompanied with written expressions of their love and good wishes for our success. Such are fit relics to be stored away for future reference and encouragement. God bless Bro. Rayner and his noble band, and may they enjoy many "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord!"

The Kavanaugh Commencement Orators.

We placed on our commencement program this year two young men, who acquitted themselves so thoroughly that I feel constrained to speak of their efforts in this public way.

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, of Edwards, Miss., delivered the finest commencement address I ever heard. His theme was, "Character," and, although his theme was trite, his treatment of it was fresh and attractive, his style classical, and his delivery very fine. This was the first time that any of us had ever heard Bro. Cooper. He produced a profound impression, leaving his large audience not only pleased, but profited. Bro. Cooper is a worthy son of that grand man, so famous in his day, Rev. Preston Cooper. It seems that the mantle of the old prophet has fallen on the young—the son inherits the gifts of his father.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson, of Hazlehurst, delivered the address before the alumni. He dwelt eloquently and appropriately upon "Life's Work." He made this practical theme glow with beauty. He delighted the young people for whom he was speaking.

Rev. A. A. Lomax, of the Baptist Church—"the old war horse," we call him—addressed the Christian Association on Sunday night, and made a grand prohibition speech on Monday evening. Rev. Robert A. Cooper, of New Albany, preached the commencement sermon. These brethren have left a delightful savor; their words will be treasured by the hundreds who heard them.

The college bestowed its first honorary degrees as follows: "A. M." upon Miss Willie E. Lott, who has for the past four years filled our chair of mathematics, and who now leaves us for another sphere of life; and "D. D." upon Rev. James M. Weems, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference.

H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

Securing new recruits is one element in the raising of an army; but it is only one element. A new recruit would be worth no more in the army than outside of it, unless he were trained to a soldier's service. And an army of untrained recruits is only a mob under another name. He who would have good soldiers under him must see to it that his recruits are trained to become good soldiers. And the training of men takes time. Hence he who would train those committed to his charge must devote his energies to training rather than to recruiting, while the duty of training is the foremost duty. Yet how many pastors and superintendents and teachers seem to act on the idea that winning a new recruit is always better than training a new recruit to be a good soldier!—Sunday-School Times.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Briefs.

All our lives we have been accustomed to read this: "And he gave some, apostles: and some, prophets; and some, evangelists: and some, pastors and teachers: for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." Now the Revised Version tells us to read this: "And he gave some to be apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ"! As the saying goes, this rendering of the passage "co-ordinates" the service of the saints with that of all branches of the ministry in building up the church. If the saints all understood it thus, and were diligent to do their parts, what a hive of workers the church would be, and how rapidly the cause of Christ would grow!

Rev. J. A. Lyon has a judicious eye open to discern the wants of our Sunday-school workers, and a wise head to plan for the supply of those wants. His work on the Sunday-school is one of the best we have seen; and now we have before us "The Model Sunday-School Record," the devising of his fertile mind. We have examined this record book carefully, and have shown it to several of our pastors; and the one opinion is, that it is the very book needed for our Sunday-school secretaries. It is simple and complete. It is practical and systematic. It is published in two forms, each adapted to schools of twenty-five teachers and 500 scholars or less. No. 1 is sent for $1; No. 2, seventy-five cents. The difference between the two is, that No. 1 contains the "scholars' individual attendance roll," which is omitted from No. 2. We heartily commend this record book to all our Sunday-schools. It will be sent to anyone on receipt of price. Address J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

The following is from the Advance:

The directors of the Centennial Exposition of the Ohio Valley and Central States, which opens in Cincinnati, July 4, besides the negative merit of deciding to close the Exposition on Sunday, have decided to show their respect to the Christian religion in a more positive manner. An association of ministers has been formed, at the head of which is the newly-elected Bishop, Dr. J. W. Joyce, to take charge of a department in the Exposition illustrating the growth and methods of work of the various Christian churches, colleges and societies in the Northwest during the past century. This will be done by pictures and models of each, churches and colleges, by photographs of early ministers, pictures of present churches, colleges and charitable institutions, and by statistics and diagrams. An effort will also be made to prepare in tract form, for gratuitous distribution, a compact statement of the statistics of these regions. A leading place will be given to church publication societies and religious newspapers. It is intended, also, to give special days to the different religious denominations. A large number of prominent ministers and secretaries have charge of the movement.

That was a naive caution of the old Quaker lady, who, after having retailed a bit of gossip, said: "I have told thee these things, hoping that thee will use better sense about them than I have." Almost anybody else would have said, "Now, don't mention it again, please."

Methods and Manipulations.

In another column one of our pastors, giving an account of a meeting conducted among his people by a revivalist, says "his methods and manipulations were peculiar." We are much obliged to our brother for giving us a word that we have long wanted, and one that expresses the idea which has always come into the mind when witnessing religious services conducted by some preachers. We never knew before what to call a certain part of the performance: were always in perplexity as to how to characterize it. "We thank thee, brother, for that word." Manipulations! That's it exactly. The idea that seems to possess the minds of some preachers is, that it is absolutely necessary to get everybody to make some sort of a demonstration in favor of religion; and as there are in every congregation "many men of many minds," there must of necessity be invented enough different propositions to keep up a "running fire" sufficiently long to reach everybody. If people will not accept the old-fashioned invitation to come to the mourner's bench to seek salvation by an earnest repentance and a hearty faith, some other proposal must be made then and there; and if that don't succeed, another must be tried; and if that fails, something else must be proposed; and so on, and so on, until the whole program of propositions is exhausted, and the preacher stands before an exhausted congregation the very impersonation of a most rigid and expert ecclesiastical drill-sergeant. It seems to us that if the time and thinking necessary to invent and bring forward in such nice precision such a wonderful string of propositions had been spent in elucidating and illustrating to the hungry souls of the audience the gracious and glorious provisions of gospel grace, a great deal more would have been accomplished, and the people would have gone away refreshed in minds and souls. What connection these things have with the gospel it is hard to see, and if anyone can enlighten us on this point, we will be thankful for the light.

That these things do harm is the testimony of some of the most valued workers in the church. A week or so ago the St. Louis Christian Advocate gave the testimony of Mr. Finney, one of the greatest revivalists of this country, on this very point, showing that a church will backslide under these manipulations. He says: "There is no difficulty in rousing up a church to act and bustle about and make a noise, but when you tell them there is no Holy Ghost in their bustling, they will be offended." We are of the firm opinion, after having seen a good deal of this thing, and having heard a good deal from others of its after effects, that its tendency is to make religion a superficial formality. It can not be a substitute for the power of the Divine Spirit working in the depths of the human consciousness. It ought to be banished from all our churches, and in its place let the simple gospel of the Son of God that the preacher learns on his knees in the agony of prayer be proclaimed fully and freely.

The Pastor on a Vacation.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: Did you ever go off on a "regular spree," with all expenses paid, and a genuine good time assured? If not, for one time in life your correspondent is ahead of you. After getting leave of absence from my generous congregation, and my equally accommodating presiding elder, I left Jackson, Miss., in company with my magnanimous companion, Tuesday morning, last. Our objective point is to visit scenes and friends in the State of Missouri, where my father was born and reared, and where yet reside a brother of more than fourscore years, and an only sister, herself well nigh up to the allotted time of life. To see other friends and relatives determined our trip by way of Shreveport, La., Jefferson, Texas, and thence through the State of Arkansas via Little Rock. At this writing we are in the city of Jefferson, Texas, in the delightful home of Dr. W. W. Harper, who is one of the leading spirits of our church in this place. Signs of decay and depression in business matters are unmistakably written on everything hereabout. The palatial residences and ornamented yards give evidence of great wealth in days that are passed; but the many closed warehouses and business places, with the conspicuous absence of paint and the general state of improvements, speak otherwise now. The population, I am told, has decreased in the past few years from 12,000 to 4,000 at present; and the business, which reached out for hundreds of miles to the westward, extending even to Fort Worth and beyond, is now circumscribed to the community immediately surrounding.

Such is the result of the railroad system of our day—sets up one and puts down another; and upon this same principle I see circulars on the streets to-day advocating a road from some point in Arkansas via this place to Shreveport, with the assurance that great good must result to Jefferson. Of course, a subscription is requested for the building of said road. How wise railroad corporations have been in their generation! I hope to see the day when no community shall be allowed to vote a tax for the construction of any railroad in all our land. Already in many places the people are burdened with debts thus incurred, and the railroad companies are enjoying all the benefits. If the trade and travel will justify, I believe the roads will be built without such embarrassments to the people. If it will not justify the result, it is much show and parade and no road at last.

Little of interest occurred on the trip to this place. The trip from Vicksburg across the State of Louisiana was made in daylight. We were surprised to find so much of the country on this road unsettled. As a rule, the crops of both corn and cotton looked very promising, and were in good condition. Before reaching Delhi we passed a scene calculated to rouse all the poetic genius in a man; but, alas! alas! "poeta nascitur, non fit," has been written of your correspondent, and the Muses never visit him. Think of it! a lake of upwards of a hundred acres with its face literally covered with the large green leaves of the lily resting lightly on the water, with here and there a beautiful white flower, with yellow center, sitting in perfect ease and grace upon its throne of green with an apparent consciousness of the loveliness of its surroundings. Certainly the man who couldn't write poetry while looking upon such a scene is "non fit." What improvement Walter Scott might have made in his lake scenery, as described in the "Lady of the Lake," had he seen this wild, unsung lake of the swamps of Louisiana.

Our trip was cheered by the presence of a bright little girl of three summers, who, in her childish simplicity and inquisitiveness, added to the pleasure and amusement of all on board. Thoughtless, happy, precious little Maud Whitehead (literally and by name), though you were not conscious of it, the sunshine of your little soul enlivened the spirits of many during that long, dreary day. May your life ever prove a benediction to the world! Believing that I could tell a Methodist preacher from the very cut of his coat and the set of his hat, I was on the lookout at every station, but not the first sign did I see until we got to Haughton, where I met Bro. Blocker. The train only allowed us to shake hands and doff hats. I promised him when I came again to do better, and I hereby invite him to stay longer if ever he finds himself in the home of this itinerant. We hoped to have met Hart and Munholland at Monroe, as both of them are related to us, but were disappointed. Was pleased to hear so well from them, and hope that their usefulness may never grow less.

We spent the night in Shreveport. Heard much complaint of too much rain, and rumor of cotton worms. The streets of the city were very muddy; and if the citizens are as unreliable as the sidewalks were, no honest man could live among them. With fear and trembling we moved from place to place. At seven A. M. we took train for this place. After travel of a short while, we ran into the village of Waskom, where I was informed we were in far-off Texas. Immediately everything changed appearances, of course, and I began to look for broad prairies, herds of ponies and cattle, cowboys and pistols, but not a thing of the kind appeared. Four large coffins on the platform at Waskom was the only significant scene that greeted us. I believe the broad-brimmed white hat is somewhat more conspicuous here than in Mississippi. In topography, character of soil, timber and general appearance the country from Shreveport to Jefferson reminds one of Madison county, Miss.

The preachers in this section are all off at District Conference. Bro. Rosser, pastor at this place, is absent, so I find myself pressed into service for Sunday. How hard it is for a man to play Jonah even in this day of fast transit!

Lest you complain of me as unmerciful to you and readers, I close. Adieu. I shall miss the ADVOCATE in my rambles.

JEFFERSON, Texas.

A Presiding Elder's Notes.

In another part of this paper will be found an account of the Opelousas District Conference. The presiding elder, Rev. S. S. Keener, also sends us a few notes about the same, which we produce below. We call special attention to what is said of Centenary College. Bro. Pharr seems to have roused the brethren considerably. The raising of $1,200 in six per cent. endowment notes at one District Conference is a grand start towards a most important end. Now, will everybody lend a helping hand? We trust so.

The reports from the works were encouraging: the preachers were hopeful, and every work had the evidences of advancement to report in large congregations, accessions and conversions for the year. The great interests of church were discussed fully, giving an hour to the discussion on church extension, Sunday-schools, education, church finance and foreign missions. Each of those topics were fully discussed, and there were many pithy, pointed, five-minutes' talks from the brethren on these great themes. The conclusion upon finances and financial methods was, that the regular individual assessment and monthly payment was the best, each member being notified through the mails of their monthly dues and requested to pay the same. The conclusion reached as to the great dearth of missionary money was thought to be due, in part, to the ignorance of our people on the subject of missions, and the absolute necessity of enlightening them by the distribution of our church papers. The beneficial effects of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in removing this deep ignorance on missions was graphically told by one brother, who demolished some of these "anti-missionary" people by getting them to read the ADVOCATE. The conclusion reached in regard to our Sunday-schools: that the pure Word, without comment or lesson paper, must be used more freely, and that doctrinal catechisms should be introduced, and not let the lesson papers absorb our whole attention and raise up our children without doctrine. We want our children indoctrinated, intelligent Methodists.

The subject of education was introduced by Bro. Davies, and Bro. J. N. Pharr, fresh from Centenary, gave the exhortation and took up a collection, securing twelve hundred dollars in endowment notes, bearing six per cent. interest, payable annually. Bro. Pharr had by some means learned how to take a collection and give a rousing exhortation, and some of the preachers who had gone in and out as the pastor of Bro. Pharr were rejoiced to see what an adept he had become as collector.

This district pays, prays and sends to Centenary. "The Methodist children for Methodist schools should," be the cry, far and near, all over this State. Half-hearted support is the burden under which Centenary languishes. Either let us be open enemies, or true, sterling friends and supporters. It is either a success and has been a great blessing to the two Conferences, or else it is a dead, flat failure; if the former, we should support it fully and completely, but if the latter, we should openly and above board kill it. Many colleges can be built on paper, but let us not desert Centenary till we have something more substantial than a mere prospective college without students or buildings. The brethren were strengthened in their determination to do their very best for Centenary, preaching and insisting upon denominational education.

The ADVOCATE was remembered, but would have been more fully represented had you come over and enthused us by a grand sermon; but we had a chip from the old block, and looked at the son and thought of the father.

All are at their works again, toiling, praying, preaching, alone—one against a thousand. May the Lord of the harvest give them many sheaves, is the prayer that goes from my heart!

RAYNE, Louisiana.

Notice.

To the Preachers of Meridian District, Mississippi Conference:

Send names of delegates to District Conference to me at Lauderdale, Miss. Come to the Conference, brethren; the good people are anxiously waiting for the time to come. Come, brethren, in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and let us have a good time, spiritually.

H. P. LEWIS.

JUNE 28, 1888.

Notice.

To the Pastors of the Alexandria District, Louisiana Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: Will you be so kind as to furnish me a list of the names of the local preachers and delegates who may probably attend our District Conference, which will be held in Evergreen, commencing July 26, 1888, and oblige,

Your brother in Christ,

C. H. GODFREY, P. C.

BIG CANE, St. Tammany Pa., La.

A writer in Zion's Herald says that during the last six years 250,000 seamen in our country have signed the temperance pledge, and 50,000 have professed Christianity.

Notes.

To persons who are contemplating raising church money by fairs, rallies, etc., we commend this remark of a lady: "We shall have to have a revival after our church debt is paid to help us get back again to the condition we were in when we began to pay it." A word to the wise is enough.

A writer in the Wesleyan asks this question: "What is the use for temperance people or prohibitionists to meet in their associations and pray and pass resolutions, etc., and go home and vote for a man that drinks whisky, and that we know is not in sympathy with prohibition?" The only "use" of such action is that it can be held up as another illustration of an old fact that preaching and practice don't always harmonize.

In regard to the use of local preachers and their effectiveness, the New York Advocate says: "There is probably not a district in any Conference in the United States whose evangelical aggressiveness could not be doubled within a quadrennium if the presiding elder were to wisely organize and use this branch of the service." If that is true, then presiding elders everywhere have an immense responsibility, and should meet it resolutely.

Zion's Herald admits that Methodism is making no progress in Boston, and, in seeking for the cause of this, says boldly:

The Methodist minister has been so diligently occupied with an excess of parochial labor, with social and evangelistic work, with all phases of reformatory effort, with very much of table-serving that should be kindly but resolutely remanded to the laity, that the pulpit, his throne, has not been exalted and magnified at its best.

In plain words, the preachers have not had time to prepare their sermons, and, as a consequence, their preaching is inferior to that of other preachers, and they are losing their hold upon the people.

We think our young preachers may be benefited by a careful study of this from the Watchman:

We have heard sermons in which the spiritual lesson was quite concealed under the embroidery of illustration. Other sermons have made the impression upon us of a hash of historical incidents, personal experiences and newspaper items, without even a respectable seasoning of gospel salt and pepper. It is a fatal mistake for a public speaker, preacher, lawyer or lecturer—especially a preacher—to study above all things to be entertaining, and to regard eager attention as the sure test of effective oratory. To hold an audience by the mere rattle of incidents is a very small achievement. The purpose of illustration is to illustrate—that is, to make plain and enforce some serious spiritual truth or duty; and if this is not accomplished, however pleasing the address, it is a very small performance. If it is called a sermon, it goes by a name to which it is not entitled.

And this, from the same paper, may not be amiss for the older preachers:

Just now, if we mistake not, it is the fashion to draw illustrations from the speaker's personal experiences—his childhood, school-days, domestic vicissitudes and the like. Of all things, if he happens to be a proud and happy father, does he delight to draw upon the nursery and the great sayings of his phenomenal three-year-old, in order to accentuate his pulpit lessons. To a degree, this is excellent, but only to a degree. Pushed far, it becomes intolerable, because it is suggestive of a vanity or egotism which does not hesitate to obtrude the speaker's personality and personal affairs upon public attention. After awhile, people resent this. By all means, let us use illustration; but let us do it with caution, reserve, and good taste.

Just listen to the Interior in regard to the two most prominent candidates for the presidency:

The reason that Ben Harrison was nominated for the presidency was the same reason why Grover Cleveland was—he takes and reads The Interior. Any man who takes The Interior is liable to be president of the United States. Hurrah for Harrison!—especially for Mrs. Harrison, who is one of the choicest ladies of the land. Hurrah for Cleveland!—especially Mrs. Cleveland. Both the ladies are beautiful, and as good as they are beautiful. They both read The Interior. If it were left to us we would make both the men take a back seat, and let the two ladies rule this country for four years. Hurrah for the Shorter Catechism!

Singing with the understanding is a good thing, to be sure. It has the sanction of apostolic precept, singing so as to be understood by others has a great deal of common sense, to recommend it. The Brooklyn Eagle gives this example of a certain sort of singing:

She had a voice like a siren, and when she sang

"Mid pleasure and palaces, though I may roam,
Be it ever so splendid, there's no place like home,

it was from these eyes as she would wallow a sheet,

Which seek through the world discern'd to bewitche swear?"

there wasn't a dry eye in the tabernacle; but, if the programme hadn't said in clear, unmistakable print that she was going to sing "Sweet Home," a man might never have guessed it.

"Turn on the Light."

BY REV. R. F. PHILLIPS.

In your issue of June 21 appears an article, under the above caption, by Rev. T. L. Mellen. The captium is all right. We should be in continual search of "more light;" and the brother who has a superabundance of light ought always regard the injunction to let his light "shine." But how queer the exposition coupled with the request—"If anybody detects any inaccuracies, I hope they will write to me personally and not rush into print"—which follows immediately after expressing his regrets that he is necessitated to write the article, and then, as he proceeds in his article until he reaches No. 38 on his list of claimants, to deliberately arraign a neighboring Conference (North Mississippi) with the charge of rejecting a worthy widow who was "properly a claimant" on that Conference; send the charge in print on the first page of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE wherever it circulates, and then invite private correspondence! I honor Bro. Mellen for every effort he puts forth in behalf of the worthy ones whose cause he has thus espoused. Heaven bless the superannuated men of our connection everywhere! May the Lord shield the widow and orphans of all Methodist preachers, and incline the people to care for them more liberally! But why Bro. Mellen should see fit to make that deliberate thrust at the Conference of which I am proud to be an humble member, I can not see.

I am not a member of the Joint Board of Finance of my Conference, but think I am prepared to turn on the "light" more fully than the dear brother has in this case. I will not ask him to drop me a private note if I am incorrect, but simply to "turn on the light" and let us all know all about the matter, and I promise him that if I am mistaken, and that the North Mississippi Conference has a genuine claimant living in the bounds of his Conference, that we, as a Conference, will not be slow to recognize our duty.

But to the facts in the case: The General Conference of 1870 mapped out for us the North Mississippi Conference, taking from the Memphis and Alabama Conferences all the State of Mississippi included in those Conferences, and from the Mississippi Conference all north of the southern lines of the counties of Washington, Holmes, Attala, Winston and Noxubee, together with a part of Neshoba. The understanding was, that the brethren of Mississippi Conference had their choice as to membership when the new Conference should meet and organize, whether they (that is, those who had been assigned to work by the Mississippi Conference the fall before, and whose work was within our territory) would remain with us or continue their relation with the Mississippi Conference.

Now, then, my understanding is, that the husband of this good sister was assigned to work (somewhere just across the boundary line as it now is) by the Mississippi Conference in the fall of 1869, and that he died before we, as a Conference, ever organized. He was a member of that Conference; died as a member of that body; and if he ever expressed himself as to where his membership should be after our organization, we have no knowledge of the fact.

I will close this article by saying to Bro. Mellen that our Conference rejoices to have had the privilege, and have always considered it a pleasure, to care for a precious widow whose husband died at one of your most prominent stations, a member of Mississippi Conference; and, furthermore, that we don't ask to be relieved. You can't purchase the privilege. This is not an arraignment of your Conference, for I believe if you had ever been asked, you would have recognized the claim.

This "personal" from the Los Angeles Christian Advocate is gratifying to many readers of our paper:

Rev. F. S. Parker, of Santa Ana, preached at Bellevue Avenue Church last Sunday morning to a goodly congregation. He delivered a missionary address at Trinity Church in the evening, which he introduced by the thought that the question is not, "Can the heathen be saved without the gospel, but can we be saved without sending the gospel to the heathen?" It was an able, convincing address.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GET IT! If you have a Mother, Father, Brother, Sister, Son or Daughter at Home or Abroad, on whom you would bestow a GIFT that would at all times prove a WELCOME GUEST of rare worth and lasting benefit, GET IT!!

The Detroit Christian Advocate says: We scarcely can tell which is most attractive about this volume, it par-excellent title, its 400 literary gems on the themes named, its brilliant array of distinguished writers, or its beautiful mechanical execution. It is a splendid book every way. A copy should be in every home, where every mother and every mother's friend can have access to it.

Prices as above, Post-paid to Subscribers.

Our Young People.

TWO SURPRISES.

BY G. W. M'ALPINE.

A workman plied his clumsy spade
As the sun was going down;
The German King, with a cavalcade,
On his way to Berlin Town,

Reined up his steed at the old man's side.
"My toiling friend," said he,
"Why not cease work at eventide
When the laborer should be free?"

"I do not starve," the old man said;
"And I am always free;
Though I work from the time I leave my bed
Till I can hardly see."

"How much," said the King, "is thy gain in a day?"
"Eight groschen," the man replied.
"And how can'st live on this meager pay?"
"Like a king," he said with pride.

"Two groschen for me and my wife, good friend,
And two for a debt I owe;
Two groschen to lend, and two to spend,
For those who can't labor, you know."

"Thy debt?" said the King; said the toiler, "Yea,
To my mother with age oppressed,
Who cared for me, toiled for me, many a day,
And now hath need of rest."

"To whom dost lend of thy daily store?"
"To my boys—for their schooling; you see,
When I am too feeble to toil any more,
They will care for their mother and me."

"And thy last two groschen?" the monarch said.
"My sisters are old and lame;
I give them two groschen for raiment and bread,
All in the Father's name."

Tears welled up in the good King's eyes.
"Thou knowest me not," said he;
"As thou hast given me one surprise,
Here is another for thee.

"I am thy King; give me thy hand"—
And he heaped it high with gold—
"When more than neediest, I command
That I at once be told.

"For I would bless with rich reward
The man who can proudly say
That eight souls doth he keep and guard
On eight poor groschen a day."

—St. Nicholas.

MR. EDITOR: I see so many letters from different parts of the country, but none from Dry Creek, so I thought I would try my hand. We have a good Sunday-school, which has been running about three years, never missing a Sunday, only when providentially hindered. It has a membership of sixty-six, including officers and teachers. Our Sunday-school is blessed with a working, practical, faithful superintendent, Mr. Levi Miller. We have a set of good teachers and earnest and punctual pupils, and feel encouraged to persevere. Our singing master, Mr. Miller, presides with skill and efficiency, and, under his leadership, we have learned many and are still learning many beautiful songs of Zion. We have preaching once a month by Rev. G. E. Greene. He contemplated having a revival this week, but the rain has prevented so far. We have a new church house, which has added greatly to the advantage of the church and Sunday-school. We boys have organized a Green Court Club by which we aim to raise money and purchase lamps for the church.

Yours fraternally,

JNO. B. KENT.

DRY CREEK, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: It is my time to write, as my brother wrote last. We were all sorry you got sick enough to have to leave home; but we were glad to read your letters from Sour Lake. Mamma would always say, "Read 'The Editor Abroad' first." Aunt Loretta quit writing while you were abroad; but Bud and I were glad when she did write, and Bud will put her letter in his scrap-book. Grandma has all of the ADVOCATES with your pieces in them hung up on a string; and that reminds me of your string. Has it worn out yet? Or did it do any good? Hope you won't think I am impudent, although I am called so at home. Our little cotton crop looks fine, and I hope to have money for the missions this fall. Our brother, not three years old, was at church the last time Bro. Upton preached, and said out loud, "I don't want to have no preaching; I am tired of preaching." Uncle Jim had to take him out, and did not hear half of the sermon. It was the best sermon I ever heard. It was a pity he did not get to hear it.—Respectfully,

MARY L. CURRIE.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to the ADVOCATE in so long, I will now write a short letter. Your dear paper is a welcome guest in our house every week. I read it with great pleasure, especially the letters from the little folks. We have a very nice church and Sunday-school here. Our pastor this year is Bro. J. W. Chambers. Our superintendent is Mr. W. T. Stocker. We had a Sunday-school picnic in May, but we had bad luck, for it rained nearly all day; so we were kept in the house all the time. I will now answer Ida V. Barbee's questions. The longest verse in the Bible is the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of St. John. I must now close. Hoping my letter will not reach the waste-basket, I remain,

Your little friend.

Some Good Rules for Girls.

Every girl desires, or should desire, a pleasing manner. There is no greater mistake that a young woman can make than to disregard her appearance. Many girls think that by so doing they are avoiding a spirit of servile dependence on the opinion of other people. But sooner or later such girls will surely learn their error, and then, when it is too late, will come the difficult task of educating themselves in the little things which make up so large a part of the pleasure and profit of life. In this particular, self-education is not only possible, it is also essential—in fact, it is about the only education that is possible. An English lady of rank gives the following rules, which every girl should observe:

WHAT TO AVOID.

A loud, weak, affected, whining, harsh, or shrill tone of voice.

Extravagance in conversation—such phrases as "awfully this," "beastly that," "loads of time," "don't you know," "hate" for "dislike," etc.

Sudden exclamations of annoyance, surprise, and joy—often dangerously approaching to "female swearing"—as "bother!" "gracious!" "how jolly!"

Yawning when listening to anyone.

Talking on family matters even to bosom friends.

Attempting any vocal or instrumental piece of music that you can not execute with ease.

Crossing your letters.

Making a short, sharp nod with the head, intended to do duty as a bow.

WHAT TO CULTIVATE.

An unaffected, low, distinct, silver-toned voice.

The art of pleasing those around you, and seeming pleased with them and all they may do for you.

The charm of making little sacrifices quite naturally, as if of no account to yourself.

The habit of making allowances for the opinions, feelings, or prejudices of others.

An erect carriage—that is, a sound body.

A good memory for faces and facts connected with them, thus avoiding giving offense through not recognizing or bowing to people, or saying to them what had best been left unsaid.

The art of listening, without impatience, to prosy talkers, and smiling at the twice-told tale or joke.—Religious Telescope.

There is an Eastern story to the effect that one day Abraham was sitting at the door of his tent, when an old man, bent and leaning on his staff, appeared before him. Abraham invited him into his tent, and set meat before him, but observing that he did not ask a blessing, and finding that it was because he was a fire-worshiper, he became angry and drove the old man away. Whereupon God is said to have appeared, and said, "I have suffered him these hundred years, though he dishonored me, and wouldest thou not endure him one single night?"

Household.

A WORD ABOUT BREAD.—A physician's daughter thus writes to an exchange: "In the 'household' column I read of so many woes in bread making that it is a wonder why no one has yet suggested substituting other food for bread. Some of the best physicians now avoid 'suppers,' and have 6 P. M. dinners purposely to avoid bread and cake. There is no excuse for bread at breakfast and dinner, while for 'supper' stewed potatoes, with poached eggs or cold meat, could form the principal part of the meal, adding soft custard, with fruit and delicate cake; bread is unnecessary. The children of our family have for breakfast hominy or oatmeal, with potatoes, frits, delicate meats, with milk, and perhaps a cracker. For dinner, meat or chicken, asparagus, potatoes and other healthy vegetables and fruits, with rice or other simple dessert, while at supper, stewed potatoes, milk, eggs or cold chicken, cottage cheese, blanc-mange, with occasionally a little simple cake."

A HOLIDAY FOR THE WIFE.—Give your wife a vacation. She needs one. Little cares are harder to bear than greater responsibilities, and she has many more cares than her husband, and sometimes as great responsibilities. A woman's work is never done; and modern life has increased and intensified it. Cares have multiplied faster than conveniences. Life is more complex, its demands are greater and more numerous, society more exacting. Who needs a vacation, if she does not? And she can not get it at home. The more quiet and restful the home is to you, the more evidence that it is a care, if not a burden, to her. A housekeeper can no more take a vacation in her home than a merchant in his counting-room. Even though her absence occasions inconvenience, give an occasional vacation.—Selected.

MORE ROOM.—When every nook and corner seems full, consider the walls. A great many things may be hung on a strip of wood running across your bedroom or kitchen wall covered from dust by a calico curtain. Envelope bags, straightened by ropes or lath strips, may hang anywhere to hold aprons, collars, hats, newspapers, everything. Packing boxes may be placed one above another and shelved and curtained, or small ones may be padded like ottomans and used for seats and cases to hold bed linen or underclothing. A few yards of bright chintz adorn a room wonderfully in the way of curtains, chair covers and scrap bags.

LAUGHTER.—Chavasse, an eminent surgeon, says: "Encourage your child to be merry and to laugh aloud; a good hearty laugh expands his chest, and makes his blood bound merrily along. Commend me to a good laugh—not to a little, sniggering laugh, but to one that will sound through the house; it will not only do your child good, but will be a benefit to all who hear, and be an important means of driving the blue devils away from a dwelling. Merriment is very catching, and spreads in a remarkable manner, few being able to resist the contagion. A hearty laugh is delightful harmony; indeed, it is the best of all music."

BUREAU COVERS.—Some of the newest bureau covers are made of fine white Welsh linen, the edge embroidered in a deep scallop in white linen floss and the monogram worked in the center. The pin-cushion to go with this is made of crimson merino, and has two little white linen covers like that for the bureau. A large bow of crimson ribbon gives the needed touch of brightness to the set. If toilet bottles are used they are simply tied with crimson ribbon. Blue, pale yellow, or coral may be used in place of the crimson with equally pretty effect.

We value everything in this world by comparison. Water and air have no intrinsic value, and yet Jay Gould, if famishing in the desert, would give all his wealth for a pint of the former, and think it cheap; hence, life and healthsare the standard of all values. If your system is full of Malaria you will be very miserable; a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote will make you well and happy. Is one dollar a high price to pay?

to any other. The Baccalaureate of medicines in blood medicines is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling better than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Wiseman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives the most thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for almost seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are standard. There is nothing so good for the 'spring-ful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the 'doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Callen, Monmouth, Kansas.

AFFORD—Died, in the town of [illegible]ter, Amite county, Miss., May 21, WILLIAM B. RAIFORD, in the ninth year of his age. The subject of this notice, born near the town of [illegible]sboro, Wayne county, N. C., to Pike county, Miss., in 1850, was united in marriage to Miss [illegible] Tarver, daughter of Elijah [illegible], of Amite county, Miss., [illegible]mber 27, 1853. In the fall of [illegible] he moved to Liberty and engaged [illegible]erchandising until the spring of [illegible], when he entered the Confederate service. Serving through the war, [illegible]returned to Liberty, and, resuming [illegible]siness of a merchant, he continued in that occupation, almost unimpededly, until terminated by [illegible]. In the early part of the present year he formed a mercantile [illegible]rship with E. B. McLain, of [illegible]er, under the firm name of [illegible]in & Raiford. While in the [illegible]ment, apparently, of perfect [illegible], without admonition or warning, was stricken down, proving [illegible]th of the adage, "In the midst [illegible] we are in death." The theme on which he had been [illegible]sing was, "Be ye also ready, [illegible]on of man cometh at an hour [illegible]ou think not." Little did he [illegible]nat in his own person would [illegible]plified the truth of the subject [illegible] trying to impress on the minds [illegible]audience. [illegible]s a liberal contributor of his [illegible] and services to the church of [illegible]hoices. His benevolence and [illegible]thropy were not exercised, [illegible]er, to the limited sphere of his [illegible]omination. They had a more [illegible]ed scope and found the exer- [illegible]a wider field. His hand was [illegible]pen to the claims of charity. [illegible] kind and gentle disposition, [illegible]ted a strong will and an inflexible purpose, which, claiming [illegible]rage of his convictions, always [illegible]un strong in his advocacy for [illegible]t. It is no wonder, then, that [illegible]rling qualities of head and [illegible]ave him character and influence [illegible] the community in which he [illegible]. He was an earnest man, and [illegible]er his hand found to do for his [illegible] the good of man, he did it [illegible]s might. As a man of business, [illegible] a citizen, as a Christian he [illegible]d a commanding and influential [illegible]ition, always taking an active [illegible]ous part in every enterprise [illegible]ded to improve the character, [illegible] the condition or advance the [illegible]t religion and humanity in [illegible]d. In life esteemed, in death [illegible]d, the place he once occupied [illegible] a vacuum that can not be easily [illegible]. He was a devoted husband, [illegible]father, a good neighbor, a [illegible] citizen, an exemplary Chris- [illegible]having finished his work on [illegible]nd dying at his post of duty, [illegible]aithful soldier of the cross, he [illegible]e to his reward. "And I [illegible]oice from heaven saying [illegible]. Write, Blessed are the dead [illegible]die in the Lord from henceforth: [illegible]ea, saith the spirit, that they [illegible] from their labors; and their [illegible]o follow them."

A FRIEND.

[illegible]—Died October 28, 1887, [illegible]TH WHITE, the daughter of [illegible] and Sarah Richert, of Clinton, [illegible] was born in the little town [illegible]ks May 17, 1849, and lived [illegible]gely in the same town till the [illegible]er death. Her life was lived [illegible]he same people, and during [illegible]time, more than thirty-eight [illegible]s, passed through the vicissitudes [illegible]life, war and peace, prosperity and adversity. As a sunny-[illegible]hild, she was loved by all. As [illegible]lady, she was pure, sweet and [illegible]e, always helpful and light- [illegible]. She carried sunshine wherever [illegible]went. November 29, 1870, [illegible]her heart and hand in marriage [illegible]Mr. John A. White, who had [illegible]en from childhood; and she [illegible]as the light of his life, the [illegible]d of his household. She became [illegible]mother of eleven children—[illegible] the birth of the last. As a [illegible]she was self-sacrificing, kind and gentle, striving to train her children so they would rise up and call her blessed. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the spring of 1878, under the pastorate of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, and was ever after a devoted and faithful member, always contributing to its welfare in any way possible, and ready to make any sacrifice for its prosperity or interest. As a neighbor, she was ready for any kindly ministry needed, thus demonstrating the depth of her religious convictions and purposes. She loved her Lord and loved her fellow-men. Those whose lives touched hers most, felt most of the strength of her religious life and realized most of its control over her life. Her religion was like her disposition—cheerful and sunny—having nothing of gloom about it. When informed that her last sickness would probably prove fatal, she said she was not afraid to die, but she regretted to leave her loved ones, who seemed to be so much dependent on her care and service. Thus passed away this loved and loving wife and mother.

The writer knew her well during the four years when the girl was blooming into the woman and when the woman was merged into the wife, and, desirous of expressing his appreciation of one of the sweetest of her sex, lays this humble tribute of affection on her grave. May the Father above bless the seven children left behind and comfort the husband and relations! is the prayer of

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

HUGHES.—Mr. CHARLES EDWARD HUGHES was born in South Carolina, July 19, 1821, and died at his home in Lauderdale county, Miss., June 10, 1888. Mr. Hughes embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church in early life and remained faithful until death. He was a cheerful, contented, happy man and made his home bright and attractive. His presence was like a sunbeam, dispelling darkness, and cheering his associates. He was poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom of God. He was married December 13, 1846, to Lauderdale county, Miss., to Miss Pauline Craig. They had nine children born to them—three of whom have died. One of the surviving six, Miss Bettie Hughes, is a missionary in China. It was a severe trial to him to give his daughter up for that work, but he yielded the point, and bade her go in the name of Jesus. In his last moments he said to a visiting minister, "Tell her (Bettie) I am very sick, but my way is clear." He suffered much in his last illness, but was visited by several ministers of the gospel whose ministrations he greatly enjoyed. His end was peace. May God comfort the bereaved ones!

H. P. LEWIS.

"Weak and weary" describes the condition of many people debilitated by the warm weather, by disease or overwork. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed to build up and strengthen the body, purify and quicken the sluggish blood, and restore the lost appetite.

On handshaking as a factor in successful evangelical work, Mark Guy Pearse, at the anniversary of the Wesleyan mission, offered the following:

"The right hand is the biggest human power. Man is the only animal that has a hand. Thy hand, my brother, marks thee off to help men. I do believe in that brotherly grip. I was walking along one day by the seashore, and a friend on the cliff said, 'Come up here.' I said, 'Lend me a hand.' Twenty feet was too much. I had a church once in which there were no working-men. I said, 'We shall never prosper until we get working-men in here.' One day I got hold of their hands, and one hand felt different from the rest. I said to that man, 'Come and see me to-morrow night at eight o'clock.' He did. For thirty years he had lived in that town, and nobody had ever spoken to him. He said, 'I have kept my soul alive by praying about the streets.' 'What brought you to my place?' I asked. He said, 'My boy came home and said some one shook hands with him, and I determined to go and see if he would shake hands with me.' That man brought ten men to the Bible class the next Sunday afternoon. I believe the biggest human power is downright hearty handshaking."

"I can heartily say to any young man who is wanting good employment, work for Johnson & Co., follow their instruction and you will succeed." So writes an agent of B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va., and that's the way all of their men talk.

Some may have apprehensions that little can be done because miracles are wanting and the gift of tongues is withdrawn. Doubtless, Peter had a notable proof at hand of the doctrine he preached, while the lame man was leaping in the temple, who but just before had been healed by the name of the Lord Jesus. But miracles never cease, while souls are converted to God; nor will tongues be ever wanting, while the wonderful change wrought by the grace of God, so loudly bespeaks the praises of his wonder-working power. Let heathens see what grace can do on a real convert, and we need not any further be discouraged for want of miracles and tongues. —Rowland Hill.

About American Railways.

Charles Scribner's Sons have published, in connection with the railway articles appearing in Scribner's Magazine, a pretty lithographed folder, entitled "Twenty-four questions and answers about railways." The information contained is interesting, and has been obtained from well-known authorities. It can be obtained by enclosing stamp to the publishers: 1. How many miles of railway in the United States? 150,000; about half the mileage of the world. 2. How much have they cost? $9,000,000,000. 3. How many people are employed by them? More than 1,000,000. 4. What is the fastest time made by a train? Ninety-two miles in ninety-three minutes: one mile being made in forty-six seconds on the Pennsylvania and Reading railroad. 5. What is the cost of a high-class, eight-wheel passenger locomotive? About $8,500. 6. What is the longest mileage operated by a single system? Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe system, about 8,000 miles. 7. What is the cost of a palace sleeping-car? About $15,000, or $17,000 if "vestibuled." 8. What is the longest railway bridge-span in the United States? Cantilever span in Poughkeepsie bridge, 548 feet. 9. What is the highest railroad bridge in the United States? Kinzua viaduct on the Erie road, 305 feet high. 10. Who built the first locomotive in the United States? Peter Cooper. 11. What road carries the largest number of passengers? Manhattan elevated railroad, New York; 525,000 a day, or 191,625,000 yearly. 12. What is the average daily earning of an American locomotive? About $400. 13. What is the longest American railway tunnel? Hoosac tunnel, on the Fitchburg railway (4¾ miles). 14. What is the average cost of constructing a mile of railroad? At the present time about $30,000. 15. What is the highest railroad in the United States? Denver and Rio Grande: Marshall pass, 10,852 feet. 16. What are the chances of fatal accident in railway travel? One killed in ten million: statistics show more are killed by falling out of windows than in railway accidents. 17. What line of railway extends furthest east and west? Canadian Pacific railway, running from Quebec to the Pacific Ocean. 18. How long does a steel rail last with average wear? About eighteen years. 19. What road carries the largest number of commuters? Illinois Central, 4,828,128, in 1887. 20. What is the fastest time made between Jersey City and San Francisco? Three days, seven hours, thirty minutes, and sixteen seconds. Special theatrical train, June, 1886.

American Pearls.

Pearls are produced in some of the unios (fresh-water mussels), of which there are many hundred species, especially those found in the fresh-water brooks traversing a limestone country. The first pearl of any note was the famous "Crown pearl," found by a shoemaker, Daniel Howell, while collecting some of these mussels in Notch Brook, near Paterson, N. J. This was purchased by Messrs. Tiffany & Co. for $1,500 in 1856, and led to the great pearl excitement. Millions of unios were collected, and many thousands of pearls found, and some of them very fine ones. One, however, which weighed nearly 400 grains, and would, perhaps, have been the finest pearl of modern times, was destroyed by cooking the mussel. They have since then been fished out as far west as Ohio. At Waynesville and other places on the Little Miami river many fine pearls have been found, and more recently fine ones have been found in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Texas. One single firm has purchased over $100,000 worth of pearls found east of Texas. The pearls are rarely entirely round, usually a little oblong, button-shaped, flat on the back, and imitating every conceivable form, such as beetles, fish, bird wings, and often have had this feature assisted in the mounting of enamel and gold, after the manner of Dinglinger pearls at the famous Dresden Green vaults. The color is rarely a pure white, usually pink or bluish, often iridescent. The mere is smoother, if anything, than in the oriental pearls, and they are often more beautiful; single pearls have been sold for over $2,000.

Only one pearl of any kind is found in a hundred shells, and usually one in a thousand of any value, so that it is not a very profitable pursuit. The indiscriminate killing off of the mussels in fishing and by poisonous sewage will eventually lead to their extermination. The greatest destroyers, however, are the hogs, which kill off whole banks in a single low tide. Pearls are also secreted by the common hard-shell clam (Venus mercenaria): these are usually white, tinged with purple, or almost black. The latter colors are preferred, although they have little value. They sell at from $1 to $100 each, and are found as large as a hazel-nut. The common conch (Strombus gigas), fished extensively on the Florida coast for bait, often contains the so-called pink pearls. Although they are not true pearls, they have sold at $1,000 each. Our oyster pearls have neither value nor beauty.—Harper's Magazine.

The Akkas of Africa.

At the last meeting of the Anthropological Institute, Prof. Flower, C. B., director of the Natural History Museum, gave a description of the two skeletons of Akkas, lately obtained in Monbuttu country, Central Africa, by Emin Pasha. They are those of fully grown-up people, a male and female. The evidence they afford entirely corroborates the view, previously derived from external measurements, that the Akkas are among the smallest, if not actually the smallest, people on earth. The height of neither of them exceeds 1,219 metres, or four feet, while a living female Akka, of whom Emin Pasha has sent careful measurements, is only 1,161 metres, or barely 3 feet 10 inches. The results previously obtained from the measurements of about half a dozen living Akkas are not quite as low as these, varying from 1,216 to 1,420 metres, and give an average for both sexes of 1,356, or 4 feet 5½ inches. But the numbers measured are not sufficient for establishing the true average of the race, especially as it is not certain that they were all pure-bred examples. According to Topinard's list, there are only two known races which have a mean height below 1,500 metres, namely: the Negriter of the Andaman Islands (1,478), and the Bushmen of South Africa (1,404). Of the real height of the former we have abundant and exact evidence, both from living individuals and from skeletons, which clearly proves that they considerably exceed the Akkas in stature. It is to the "Negrillo" race of the great Negroid branch that the Akkas belong.—Dublin Freeman.

Learn to Give.

1. From habit. This can be learned in youth; therefore, teach your children to put something in the plate whenever it is passed.

2. From a feeling of obligation and duty to God, who commands it, and whose commands you promised to obey. Teach this duty to your children.

3. From an overflowing love to God, who has given you so much. Give to him lavishly, as you would give to a beloved wife or child or parent, only in a proportion as greater as your love to him and his love to you exceed all human love. Teach this also to your children.

4. Give from love to the needy and suffering. As soon as you see a want, or hear of one, try to relieve it: and teach your children to do likewise.

5. Give especially to those charities for which you are responsible. As a member of the church it is your bounden duty to give to those missionary operations which are carried on by it and dependent on it.

6. Give in such a manner of your money, your time, and efforts, that you may continue the work of mercy to the bodies and souls of men—which our Savior began on earth, and teach your children to imitate his blessed example by ministering to the needy and suffering.

Of all the anguish in the world there is nothing like this—the sense of God without the sense of nearness to him.—Elizabeth Prentiss.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Look Here, Friend. Are you Sick?

Do you have pains about the chest and sides, and sometimes in the back? Do you feel dull and sleepy? Does your mouth have a bad taste, especially in the morning? Is there a sort of sticky slime collects about the teeth? Is your appetite poor? Is there a feeling like a heavy load on the stomach, sometimes a faint, all-gone sensation at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy?

Are your eyes sunken? Do your hands and feet become cold and feel clammy? Have you a dry cough? Do you expectorate greenish colored matter? Are you hawking and spitting all or part of the time? Do you feel tired all the while? Are you nervous, irritable and gloomy? Do you have evil forebodings? Is there a giddiness, a sort of whirling sensation in the head when rising up suddenly? Do your bowels become costive? Is your skin dry and hot at times? Is your blood thick and stagnant? Are the whites of your eyes tinged with yellow? Is your urine scanty and high colored? Does it deposit a sediment after standing? Do you frequently spit up your food, sometimes with a sour taste and sometimes with a sweet? Is this frequently attended with palpitation of the heart? Has your vision become impaired? Are there spots before the eyes? Is there a feeling of great prostration and weakness? NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A passenger train on the Louisville and Nashville railroad was wrecked, on June 27, at Hurricane Bayou, seventeen miles above Mobile. Four persons lost their lives and six others were injured

Grover Cleveland and Allen G. Thurman have been officially notified of their nominations by the Democratic Convention by a special committee, and have accepted the honor.

The Delaware Iron Works, at Newcastle, was destroyed by fire on June 28. Loss, $100,000.

President Cleveland conferred the degrees upon the graduates of the University of Virginia, June 27.

The ladies of Independence, Mo., by their presence and encouragement, carried the day for prohibition, on June 28, winning a great victory.

It is estimated at the Treasury Department that there has been a decrease of $13,500,000 in the public debt during June, and a decrease of $112,000,000 in the debt for the fiscal year ended June 30. The total receipts during the year are estimated at $370,000,000, and the total expenditures at $273,000,000, leaving a surplus of $97,000,000.

The President has informed the Cincinnati Exposition committee that on account of the pressure of private business he can not accept the invitation to attend the exposition at this time.

After an executive session of the assembly, in Chicago, two weeks ago a notice was sent to the employing brewers that unless they reinstated their workmen the Trades and Labor Assembly would recommend that all laboring men refrain from drinking beer for thirty days.

The grand reunion of the survivors of both sides in the late war took place at Gettysburg, July 1. An immense crowd was present.

The Senate, on July 2, completed and passed the River and Harbor bill. No change was made in the action of the Commerce Committee on the Louisiana appropriations beyond what has already been noted. The cutting down of the Mississippi river appropriations will be stoutly resisted by the House.

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary has decided to report back the nomination of Melville W. Fuller to be Chief Justice without any recommendation.

FOREIGN.

Gen. Diaz has been re-elected President of Mexico, without opposition.

The Pope's encyclical on liberty says: "Human liberty, in individuals as in societies or governments, implies the necessity of conforming to a supreme national law which emanates from God. The church is not an enemy of honest, legitimate liberty, but is an enemy of license."

Nine government officials at Seoul, China, have been beheaded in the street by the populace. Foreigners have taken refuge at the consulates. The outbreak is attributed to Chinese instigation.

The Pope received the German envoy on June 28, and expressed himself as highly satisfied with Emperor William's references to the relation between Germany and the church.

The Landtag met June 27. In his speech, opening the session, King William said that his government, like that of the late King Frederick, would be exercised as a legacy from his grandfather. He would equally guard the rights of his people and the crown and protect all religion.

The Kreus Zeitung says that Prince Bismarck has induced Russia to abandon definitely the idea of making an alliance with France.

The newspaper Diritto, published at Rome, makes the announcement that Signor Crispi will have an interview with Count Kalnoky, the foreign minister of Austria, and will then visit Prince Bismarck. These three representative men of their respective countries will afterwards meet at some point in Germany to be later decided upon.

Phillipedes, a Greek secret agent and author of a revolutionary pamphlet, and a Greek physician, have been arrested at Moldavia, charged with inciting the Macedonians to revolt.

There is said to be an anarchist plot against the life of the Emperor William. The Berlin socialists declare that the conspiracy is an invention of the police. The official circles take the affair seriously, and the extraordinary increase in the precautions taken to guard the person of both the Emperor and Prince Bismarck suggest that the report has a solid basis.

Signor Crispi, prime minister of Italy, will go to Carlsbad for the benefit of his health after the closing of the Italian Parliament.

The steamer Volta has arrived at Liverpool with Congo dispatches to May 27, which give further details concerning Stanley's camp on the Aruwtiuil. The camp was suffering from lack of food and from maladies arising from the surrounding swamps. Reconnoitering parties which had advanced along Stanley's route passed quantities of human bones which were apparently the remains of victims who had fallen in fights between Stanley's followers and the natives.

Eviction notices have been served on thirty tenants on the Vandeleur estate in county Clare, Ireland. The police and military, armed with a battering ram, will assist the evictors if necessary.

M. Rouvier, assuming the chairmanship of the Budget Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, declared that the committee had no political character. Its sole duty was to effect a retrenchment of the government's expenditures.

Emperor William's brother has been made commander-in-chief of the navy.

The interview between the Czar and Emperor William will be held on July 18 at a German port on the Baltic Sea

CAMP MEETINGS.

The regular annual camp meeting for 1888 on Seashore Camp Ground will commence on the second Wednesday (eleventh), July, 1888, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is delightfully situated on the Gulf of Mexico, mid-way between New Orleans and Mobile, and on the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, the station being but a few yards from the entrance gate to the grounds.

Increased accommodation has been made, so that all who may visit the meeting can be comfortably entertained on very reasonable terms. Ministers will be charged seventy-five cents per day for board; lodging will be free.

The fare over the following roads—Illinois Central, Louisville and Nashville, and Mobile and Ohio—will be 1¾ cents per mile.

For further information address W. J. Beadle, president, Mobile, Ala.; A. Grant, corresponding secretary; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary, New Orleans; or R. E. Pipes, keeper, Rhoxl, Miss.

W. J. BEADLE, Pres.

AT LAST.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

When on my day of life the night is falling,
And in the winds from unseen spaces blown,
I hear far voices out of darkness calling
My feet to paths unknown.

Thou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay;
O love divine, O helper ever present,
Be thou my strength and stay!

Be near me when all else is from me drifting,
Earth, sky, home's pictures, days of shade and shine,
And kindly faces to mine own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

I have but thee, O Father! Let thy spirit
Be with me to comfort and uphold;
No gate of pearl, no branch of palm, I merit,
Nor street of shining gold.

Suffice it if—my good and ill unreckoned,
And both forgiven through thy abounding grace—
I find myself by hands familiar beckoned
Unto my fitting place—

Some humble door among thy many mansions,
Some sheltering shade where sin and striving cease,
And flows forever, through heaven's green expansions,
The river of thy peace;

There, from the music round about me stealing,
I fain would learn the new and holy song,
And find, at last, beneath thy tree of healing,
The life for which I long.

Reasons for Writing.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

Several of the editors of our connectional organs have, at different times, asked me for an occasional contribution to their respective papers. My special friend, the editor of the old NEW ORLEANS, has been so kind as to insist, both in our personal interviews as well as by letter, that I should frequently "drop him a line." An inclination to comply with these complimentary invitations, and a desire to avail myself of the pleasure and the profit of writing, together with reflections arising from the contemplation of the subject, have suggested an article upon some of the motives which prompt men to write for publication.

BECAUSE THE EDITOR REQUESTS.

No doubt many a person has been induced to write simply because he has been kindly solicited. Such an invitation makes one feel favorably disposed. It is a pleasant implication that his services will contribute to the edification of the readers and to the popularity of the paper. Under such a complacent inspiration he heartily purposes to contribute regularly and faithfully. Alas! however, for the prevailing power of such an inspiration, if his productions should not meet with popular favor, and should at last be consigned to the waste-basket. It would prove an unwelcome, yet none the less convincing, assurance that the kind editor had mistaken his ability. The pleasing vision of serving with the pen would humiliatingly evanish.

PERSONAL BENEFIT.

Perhaps a more stimulating motive, as well as a more commendable one, is to write for self-improvement. The acquisition of a habit of easy and interesting writing can not be too highly prized by anyone who wishes to develop his talent or to serve his own generation. It makes him read more critically, and strengthens his memory. It enriches his vocabulary and gives him a facility of expression. It systemizes his thoughts and makes clearer his conceptions. It makes him more accurate, directing him in the selection of just the word to convey the nicest shade of an idea, freeing him from that looseness of expression so noticeable in untrained writers and speakers. It enables him to think more consecutively and systematically. Indeed, it stimulates his inventive faculty. One sentiment secured and written down, easily and naturally brings up another. The process is cumulative, producing, when followed up, a train of thought, or even a complete argument with legitimate conclusion, of which one was unconscious at the outset, and which surprises by its novelty and pertinency.

The habit of writing is most helpful to an extempore speaker. In addition to an accuracy and felicity of expression, in addition to the richness of vocabulary, both of which it surely gives, it also enables him, without scarcely being conscious of the effort, to grasp the subject, to formulate a plan, and then to move forward with a definite end in view, making out what he has taken in hand.

Writing has a tendency to make one more appreciative of the responsibilities of life and of his relation to his fellows. To get his thoughts down on paper commits him squarely, and is a bond which ties him to truthfulness and consistency. It must certainly make one more familiar with himself, enabling him the better to weigh his own capability. Manifestly, this is a most desirable experience. A proper appreciation of oneself will deliver from many blunders, will promote humility, and will insure success by suggesting only those pursuits suited to taste and capacity. Thus the personal benefits to be derived from a habit of writing are apparent from very many standpoints. It is well to adopt the motto: "Nulla dies sine linea."

BECAUSE HE CAN'T HELP IT.

It is just as natural for some persons to seek a medium for the expression of their thoughts as it is for a tree to leaf itself in April. This inclination is above motive. It is a motive unto itself. It is the happiest and most successful frame for writing. To change David's words a little, such a one can say: "While I was musing the fire burned; then wrote with my pen." Or as Elihu said: "I am full of matter, the spirit within me constraineth me, like as wine which hath no vent. It is ready to burst like new bottles."

What a difference there is between the writing of a person who has something to communicate, whose thoughts bubble up like a gushing spring, and that of one who is writing simply to perform a duty. The one is sparkling, fresh and impressive; the other commonplace, and smelling of the lamp. The one takes hold of the feelings of the reader and carries him along to like conclusions, moving him to sympathy, or arousing him to indignation; the other scarcely holds the attention during the perusal, and is like water falling upon a rock, that can not be gathered up again.

A man may be inspired to write battle-hymns, ringing with heroism, to pour forth prophetic strains comforting in promise or withering in denunciation, or to indite apothegms arousing to duty, even as did David or Isaiah or Solomon. Of course, the divine sanctions are wanting, the authoritative call to conscience is not heard; yet the true soul realizes that it has come in contact with the deliverances of no mere empiric, but with those of a master-spirit speaking from a consciousness stayed upon truth and alive with tenderness.

THERE'S MONEY IN IT.

The impression prevails that the divine afflatus flees the venal muse; that no mere penny-a-liner can climb the serenest peaks of Parnassus. But the question now being discussed is, What are the strongest incentives to write? Is it not true that greater and more persevering efforts will be put forth if, in addition to other motives, the silver spur is offered?

An English barrister, who attained the front rank in his profession, said that ofttimes in the beginning of his career he was discouraged, and came very near giving up altogether; but in imagination he felt his children tugging away at his gown, and heard them clamoring for bread, and this stimulated his flagging energies.

The North has been more prolific of writers than the South. This can not be accounted for on the supposition that the Northern people are intellectually superior, because the sons of the South have placed themselves fully abreast in the learned professions and in the political arena. Doubtless, the true reason is that contributions to literature more readily received compensation in that utilitarian realm. Heretofore in the South the muses were mainly wooed by amateurs only in seasons of elegant leisure. It is not to be wondered at that the high-spirited dames were reluctant to be won by such dilettanti. When one's bread depends upon his efforts, he assured that the very best of which he is capable will be forthcoming. More Southrons have turned their attention to literature since the great revolution in their industrial systems. It is pleasing to contemplate that in the near future, in our own beloved Southland, literature shall have her patrons, and that the products of brain and pen shall be accorded their legitimate valuation in the prices current.

It was a wise provision in the last General Conference to place twenty-five hundred dollars at the disposal of the great official at Nashville to pay for contributions. The assistant editor, too, was a good arrangement. The New York Advocate is said to have nine on its editorial staff. To meet the demands of a great connectional organ, there must be a variety of talent. By the way, it is difficult to tell upon what department of the Nashville that sum has been employed. The paper is greatly improved, but the general make-up is pretty much as it used to be. One new feature is those notes from the Conferences; but surely money is not needed to procure such pieces—merely local items. Any aspiring young writer would be glad to furnish them simply for the privilege of airing his talent. That money ought to be used to employ the ripest, freshest talent in the church, and out of it to furnish exhaustive papers upon the manifold topics engaging the thoughts of men in this wide-awake age.

The Education of Our Boys.

BY REV. T. W. LEWIS.

MR. EDITOR: Some weeks ago you invited correspondence through the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE on the reason we are doing so little for the education of our boys. I suppose many of your readers, like myself, dismissed the matter from their minds with the thought that it ought not to be so, or like your correspondent who said that it is more important to educate our girls than it is our boys. Granting that it is, still the shame that there is no school for the college education of our boys in North Mississippi is upon North Mississippi Methodists. Who's to blame? Centenary College seems to be almost out of reach of the eastern portion of the North Mississippi Conference, and the liberal offers made by the State schools are so much cheaper than Centenary can make (at least, the people think so), that our people send their boys to those schools.

Another reason is: We do not realize the value and importance of Christian education. I prefer Christian education at a high price than a secular education at a low price. Men love their country more than they love their church. They are patriots, they are citizens, they are office seekers and office holders, they are the "dear people." An education that ignores the culture of the moral nature, and leaves God out of the world, will be a curse to any people. Our State schools, in some sort of way, have religious service daily in their chapels; but there is little that is distinctively religious. Christian parents know that in these schools their children will be allowed to do many things contrary to the spirit of our holy religion. Sometimes they are allowed and even encouraged to dance, and yet these parents prefer sending their children to such schools because they say it is cheap. In the formative period of a boy's life it is especially needful that he be surrounded by positively religious influences. How often has it happened that a good boy is sent from some Christian home to college, and there he falls into sin, returns to his mother with the thirst of liquor in his nature, and a total loss of all spiritual life, and he lives to dishonor God and disgrace himself?

In Central Mississippi there lived a pious young man who was sent off to college. He was associated with fast young men, learned to love wine, came home a skeptic, and is one to-day. His head is blossoming for the grave, he is nearly threescore years old; still he drinks wine and lives away from God. Had he been sent to some Christian school, it might have been different. Christian parents do not realize the importance of Christian education.

If some town in North Mississippi would offer a building, or several thousand dollars, in order to have a college for boys located in their midst, and then all our people—laymen, preachers, and the good women—would go to work for the school, there is no reason why a college might not be founded and built. Let each one give some amount each year. Some might give $1,000; some ought to give more. The eternal fiat has gone forth that we must educate, or we will perish. May God help us, and open the way to us, and may we have grace to walk therein!

A New Book.

JOHN B. MCFERRIN. A biography. By O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dr. Fitzgerald has done an admirable work for the Southern Methodist Church in the production of this biography. Some men lead such lives that their biographies are little less than a history of the times in which they lived. Dr. McFerrin had been so closely connected with all the important movements of the Southern Methodist Church for the past fifty years that a simple recital of the events of his life is at the same time a history of the church. The author has done his work con amore, and for that reason it is refreshing, inspiriting and most instructive. In this work we see the great man in all the relations of life in which it was his lot to stand, and know him as we never knew him before. The church of his day was enriched by his life and labor, and the church of our day has been enriched by this history of his living and doing. Dr. Fitzgerald has won the gratitude of Methodism by this work. The price of the book is the insignificant sum of one dollar.

The Education of Our Boys.

BY "GILDEROY."

MR. EDITOR: You are right. It is high time the Methodists of Mississippi were waking up to the interests of their sons. We have made abundant provision for the education of our daughters under the watch-care of the church; but our sons have been turned over to the State and to schools managed and controlled by other denominations. The truth is that, so far as my observation goes, our boys have to go without high school and collegiate training entirely. I could give you the names of hundreds of Methodists here in Mississippi who give their daughters a liberal education and allow their sons to go along with such schooling as they can pick up in a public school four months in the year. If this state of things continues for a generation or two the "womans' rights" doctrine will prevail, because our women will be entitled to it, as they will be prepared for it. We all believe that intelligence should rule the country. If we educate our women and leave our sons in ignorance, the women will come to rule the land as they ought to do. This scribe is in no way opposed to the higher—yea, highest, education of our women; but he does put in a plea for the boys. As things are going now, the time will come when our educated daughters will have to take a vow of perpetual virginity, or else marry some mutton-headed man whose only recommendation will be, "He is a good meat and bread ease." It is painful in the extreme to see a cultivated, refined Christian woman tied on to an ignorant man who never has a thought above cotton and corn. It looks like hitching an angel to a cart-load of flesh, or worse, if possible, a barrel of "filthy lucre." I am not so much an advocate for the co-education of the sexes as for their co-equal education. The fact is, we are educating our women away from our men. Thousands on top of thousands of our people in Mississippi have come to believe that the chief end of a boy is to make money—honestly, if he can—dishonestly, if he must; but he must make money. And I am sorry to say that too many of them educate their daughters solely to qualify them for making money. A dollar is at the other end of all their plans. If you do not believe this statement, just go out into the country and lay your finger on the public pulse, and see what a metallic ring the action of most hearts have. The pulse-beat of thousands of our people will surprise you.

Those of our people who give their sons a liberal education are, in the main, indifferent about educating them in schools under the care of the church and controlled by religious influences. I am afraid that infidel sentiment, "Religion will do for women and children, but it is too small a matter for men," has taken deeper root than we are willing to allow. I am astounded at the utter indifference of some of our Methodist people about the moral and religious atmosphere surrounding their sons during the process of their education. No wonder many of them go away and follow Christ no more, or depart from the church of their parents.

The two Conferences in Mississippi ought to unite and establish and vow to maintain a first-class high school, or, as some think, a college under the auspices of the church. I would, for the present, prefer the high school, provided it were, in fact, what the name imports; but the college would not be objectionable. As you say: "We, as a religious denomination, are woefully behind in this matter." We are, numerically, quite as strong as our Baptist brethren. We are equal to them, financially, and we can beat the world in the number and character of our children. We have the men and the money if we only had the mind for the work. It is to be hoped the commissioners appointed by the Conferences will speedily agree upon a plan, location and grade of a school for boys, under the patronage of these sister Conferences. It comes to me, incidentally, that some places in Mississippi are already holding out liberal inducements for the location of a school of the kind indicated in this epistle.

So, Mr. Editor, for the time we will quit discussing "Christ's Agony in the Garden," and see if we can not get up an agony among the Methodists of Mississippi over the importance and absolute necessity of providing for the education of our sons by the church. The field is white unto the harvest, and we should thrust in our Methodist sickle and reap.

Don't Do It.

MR. EDITOR: Our people make an expensive and grievous mistake in the matter of painting. One said to me the other day, "We shall begin to paint our new church on the ninth of July." "Don't do it," I said. You might as well whitewash it. Paint put on in hot weather never holds. It soon fades. The oil is boiled out of the wood by the heat, the turpentine dissipated, and the body of the paint rubs off like whitewash. I would not allow my house to be painted in the months of May, June, July, August or September if anyone would give me the paint and put it on for nothing, if by any possible means it could be avoided. Take two buildings painted by the same man, and the same quality of paint. One was painted in July; the other, in November. The July house needs a new coat in a year. The November house will stand seven years.

Cure for Fits.

1. For a Fit of Passion. Wal out in the open air. You m speak your mind to the win without hurting anyone or pe claiming yourself a simpleton.

2. For a Fit of Idlene Count the ticking of the cloc to this for one hour, and yo ill be glad to pull off your coa the next hour and work like a negro.

3. For a Fit of Extravagance and Folly. Go to the workhouse and speak to the inmates of the jail, and you will be convinced,

"Who makes his bed of briar and thorn,
Must be content to lie forlorn."

4. For a Fit of Ambition. Go into a churchyard and read the gravestones. They will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will soon be your bed-chamber, the earth your pillow, corruption your father, and the worm your mother and sister.

5. For a Fit of Despondency. Look on the good things which God has given you in this world, and to those which he has promised his followers in the next. He who goes into his garden to look for cobwebs and spiders, no doubt will find them; while he who looks for a flower may return into his house with one blooming in his bosom.

6. For all Fits of Doubts, Perplexity and Fear. Whether they remind, whether they are a load to the shoulders, the head or the heart, the following is a radical cure which may be relied on, for we have it from the Great Physician: "Cast thy burden on the Lord and he will sustain thee."

7. For Fits of Repining. Look about for the halt and the blind, and visit the bed-ridden and the afflicted and deranged, and they will make you ashamed of complaining of your lighter afflictions.—Dr. J. B. Taylor.

THE SABBATH

BY L. H. STOKES, D. D.

O peaceful day! the best
Thy rest like that of people ransomed is:
And all shall harvest wealth supplies,
O holy, holy rest!
To Eden's scenes, its Sabbaths' work is done.
And heaven and earth, enhancing, blend in one.

Over the hills and plains
How gladly bells sound the listening ear.
Children and age all full of holy cheer
Press to the court, in God's own house appear,
While songs exalted strains,
And prayer and praise of all their rightness rise,
Lift up the way worn spirit to the skies.

Thanksgiving's sweet reign;
Grace in the dewy dedication sheep
The scene even on the hills like sheep.
And Sabbath days unharnessed horses keep,
While Eden's bliss again,
Love glints of sunlight through a storm-cloud's fold
Breaks in the rainbow's God-love to behold.

Touch not this holy day!
Oh! Vandal hands, and feet all shod
Still let it shine as it has always shone,
Full loyal heart! Reverent royal throne.
Hold! Touch it not! Lest
Dedicated of God, on Sinai's granite height,
It still shall stand in more than granite bright.

FREE GIFTS FOR THE TABERNACLE.

Exodus xxxv. 30-29.

GOLDEN TEXT: God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Cor. ix. 7.

TIME.—B. C. 1491 or B. C. 1490, as the author.

PLACE.—Mt. Sinai and the plain of El Rahah.

INTRODUCTION.

On the part of the people there were abundant tokens of thorough repentance. One of these was their alacrity to set about the work of erecting the tabernacle. All was enthusiasm in the camp. Men and women vied with each other in thoughtful and diligent endeavor. Another was the abounding liberality. So profuse was it that the receivers of the people's contributions had more than they knew what to do with, so that the people had actually to be restrained from giving (xxxvi. 5-7). A rare difficulty this in church matters. Finally, there was the minutest and most careful obedience to all the instructions which had been given for the building of the tabernacle and its furniture.

30. All the congregation ... departed from the presence of Moses—There was, no doubt, in view of their recent transgression, the working of a spirit very much akin to that awakened by the apostle and described in the second epistle to the Corinthian Church: "For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a goodly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you, yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation, yea, what fear, yea, what vehement desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter."

21. They came, everyone whose heart stirred him up—All classes came, "men and women," rich and poor, "rulers," and those whose only skill was to "spin with their hands." And the great majority gave freely to the utmost of their power. Everyone whom his spirit made willing—That is, whosoever upon barely being informed that such was God's will did without solicitation freely come forward from the impulses of his own generous heart, and tender the specified "offerings." Brought the Lord's offering. For the work of the tabernacle of the congregation—To give a definite external form to the covenant concluded with his people, and construct a visible bond of fellowship in which he might manifest himself to the people and they might draw near to him as their God. Jehovah told Moses that the Israelites were to erect him a sanctuary, that he might dwell in the midst of them. The construction and arrangement of this sanctuary were determined in all respects by God himself, who showed to Moses, when upon the mountain, a pattern of the dwelling and its furniture, and prescribed with great minuteness both the form and materials of all the different parts of the sanctuary and all the things required for the sacred service.

22. Both men and women ... willing-hearted. Brought bracelets ... earrings ... rings ... tablets, all jewels of gold—The Israelites had brought out of Egypt of their ancestral wealth—the possession of Abraham and the accumulations of Joseph; and (2) the rich gifts received from the Egyptians at the moment of their departure. They had added to their wealth by the plunder of the Amalekites. Thus they possessed a considerable store of the precious metals; and there is no difficulty in supposing that they furnished the gold needed for the tabernacle without seriously impoverishing themselves. And every man, etc.—The meaning is, that in addition to the many varieties of golden ornaments which were willingly offered for the work to be performed, everyone brought whatever gold he had set apart as a wave-offering (a sacrificial gift) for Jehovah.

23. Blue—or hyacinth. This was a color distinguishing the dress of princes and potentates among the ancients, with whom the art of dyeing was carried to a high degree of perfection. Purple—The name of a very precious color extracted from the purpura, or murex, a species of shell-fish. The most rich hue; nothing which equals it in richness and brilliancy. Scarlet—It appears to have been obtained from the chermes ilicis, the cochineal insect of the holm-oak, which was used in the East before the coccus cacti, the well-known cochineal of the prickly pear, was introduced from Mexico. The three colors blue, scarlet and purple—have been recognized all but universally as royal colors. And fine linen—That is, white thread spun from flax, which is found to be the material of almost all the Egyptian dresses, mummy clothes, and other analyzed fabrics. It is of a yellowish white, soft and wonderfully fine and delicate. The hair of the Eastern goats, particularly of the Angola species, is of the most delicate and silky softness, and wrought into the kind of cloth known by the name of Camlets. Red skins of rams. The tanning and dyeing of leather was also know to the Egyptians. Leathern straps are found "crossing the shoulders and the breasts of mummies," "and stamped at the ends with the names and figures of kings of the twentieth and following dynasties." Thus the Israelites may well have carried with them out of Egypt a certain number of "rams' skins dyed red," such as they are reported to have offered toward the construction of the tabernacle. Badger's skins—The skin of a dugong, a kind of seal found still in the Red Sea, and known to the Hebrews as the tahash. The leather made from this material is even at present used for sandals and shields in the Sinai peninsula, and was anciently in demand for the winter tents of soldiers, from being impervious to water and a fanciful protection from lightning.

24. Everyone ... offering ... silver and brass brought the Lord's offering—In regard to the silver, either less of it was offered or none at all may have been required, since the £75,144 in silver represent the exact amount of the "ransom money" which every Israelite had to pay on their being first numbered. The brass, or rather bronze, for brass seems to have been unknown at this time, was small in amount, and of no great value. Shittim wood—The tree is satisfactorily identified with the Acacia segal, "a guarled and thorny tree, somewhat like a solitary hawthorn in its habit and manner of growth, but much larger. It flourishes in the dryest situations, and is scattered more or less umbrageously over the Sinaitic peninsula." The timber is hard and close-grained, of an orange color with a darker heart, well adapted for cabinet work.

25. All the women that were wise-hearted—By "all that are wise hearted" we must understand all that had the special knowledge which would enable them to give effectual aid in the production of such garments as were about to be commanded. Did spin with their hands—Spinning was done by the women in very early times, particularly in Egypt, where women are represented on the monuments as busily engaged with the spindle, and at a later period among the Hebrews. Brought that which they had spun—Egypt excelled in every art needed for the tabernacle, and not a few Hebrews had doubtless acquired them while there.

26. Women whose hearts stirred them up ... spun goats' hair—"Their hearts stirred them up." This was the true way. The streams of voluntary devotedness flowed from within. "Rulers," "men," "women" all felt it to be their sweet privilege to give to the Lord, not with a narrow heart or niggard hand. They were not only willing to give, but to make. As all are interested in the worship of God, so all should bear a part in it.

27. Rulers ... onyx stones—The onyx does not rank high in value with us, but may have been valuable then. The names of the children of Israel were engraved on two of these stones, which were worn on the shoulders of the high-priest's ephod as "stones of memorial." An onyx also was included in the stones on the breastplate. "It was probably the same stone which we call by that name stratified in colors, or banded, capable of being polished, etc. Stones to be set—Hebrew, "filling stones, or stones of filling;" that is, stones to be set in, or, as artists say, enchased in the cavities of gold in the ephod. For the ephod—The outermost of the sacerdotal garments. It consisted of a beautiful rich cloth, composed of blue, purple, scarlet, and fine-twined white linen, interwoven with threads of gold; intended mainly for the back (as the breastplate was for the breast), reaching from shoulder to shoulder, and extending either to the feet or to the loins, but fastened to the body by bindings above the shoulders and around the middle. These bindings had an onch or socket of gold on the top of each shoulder, in which, as in a seal, were set two onyx stones. From these onches or sockets wreathed chains of gold proceeded forward to the breastplate. For the breastplate. The breastplate was the most costly, beautiful, and glorious part of the high-priest's dress. It was doubled, so as to form a kind of bag a span in length and in breadth; it was worn on the heart of the high-priest. It was enriched with twelve precious stones, all set in gold, each stone having written upon it the name of one of the tribes of Israel.

28. Spice, and oil for the light, etc. The oil for the light was to be "pure olive oil beaten;" the spices required for making the holy anointing oil were "pure myrrh," "sweet cinnamon," "sweet calamus," and "cassia;" the ingredients required for the "sweet incense," were "stacte, onycha, galbanum and pure frankincense." The two leading attributes of the anointing oil were its preciousness and its sanctity. The spices of which it was composed were peculiarly rare and odoriferous, and the oil with which they were blended was most pure. This was doubtless intended to shadow forth the excellency of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, whose distinguishing emblem under the old economy was oil. ... The incense which was to be burnt upon the golden altar was prepared of sweet spices, though not of so rare or precious a quality as those of which the anointing oil was compounded. But concerning both preparations the same law is given, that nothing like them should be made for common use.

29. Brought a willing offering unto the Lord. One spirit seems to have pervaded the whole people. Whatever anyone possessed that could be applied to the projected structure, he instantly wrote upon it Caadan, and dedicated it to the service of God. In this way the genuine influence of the gospel always operates. Its converts in every age are represented as coming unto God, "their gold and their silver with them." However dear may have been their earthly treasures to their hearts, yet the love of Christ will relax their tenacious grasp upon them, and they will be willing, at the call of duty, to part with that which they most value, and deem it a privilege to give up their all to him who has bought them with his blood.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

(ON GIVING.)

God levies no tax upon his people. They are trusted to meet the expense of carrying on his work at home and abroad.

Cheerful givers are beloved of God, because in this respect they resemble him the Cheerful Giver.

Giving grudgingly does not count, because it is not giving. Giving is not a matter of dollars and cents, but of the heart.

One-tenth was the Jewish standard. "Unless," says Bishop Huntington, "Christianity has lowered the standard of a virtue, no Christian can give less."

If even one-tenth were given, the church would be spared the doubtful sometimes disgraceful expedients of trying to extort needed moneys by means of fairs, suppers, and the like.

Christ sits "over against the treasury." To-day, as in his day, the widow's "two mites" outweigh the Pharisees' shekels. Hers pinched; theirs didn't.

From Our Mission Rooms.

BY SECRETARY J. G. JOHN.

A letter from Rev. J. C. C. Newton, Tokio, Japan, May 21, announces his safe arrival at Yokohama with his family and Dr. Wainright and wife. They were on nineteen days from San Francisco. He speaks in warm terms of the cordial welcome he received from the missionaries, and is much pleased with the outlook.

The work moves steadily on in Kobe, Japan. Dr. J. W. Lambuth writes April 10: "We held our quarterly meeting Saturday and Sunday. The services were deeply interesting, especially our love-feast. The testimony given by many was touching. Bro. Usaki's father—an old man of sixty, not yet a church member—told us how he had been brought to read the Bible and believe in the Lord Jesus for salvation. During the past quarter we received twelve persons into the church, and eight are under instruction as probationers. We gave Bro. Ohd, one of our young men, license to exhort. He is with Dr. Dukes on the Asuka circuit. The number of women who have been in attendance on our church services has been much larger than formerly."

Writing about the work among the wild tribes in the bounds of our Indian Mission, Bro. J. J. Methvin, who is laboring among the Kiowas and Comanches, says: "Their nomadic habits at present prevent permanent or continuous appointments being made for any one place, and we can call them together better by having a tent than any other way." Accordingly Rev. M. A. Clark, presiding elder of the district, which embraces in its bounds a number of the uncivilized tribes, is arranging for a large tent with camp-stools; and, with wagon, preachers and interpreters will follow these roving bands with the message of life. No mission field calls for a larger sacrifice of all that is prized by men and women accustomed to civilized life than portions of our Indian Mission work. Among those with whom Clark and Methvin and their comrades are laboring are tribes who only a few years ago were on the war-path, and often in their congregations are warriors who tore with savage triumph the bloody scalps from men, women and children butchered on our western frontier. A large measure of grace is needed by the men and women who labor in such a field. They are doing apostolic work. Many members of the church who feel no interest in missions may never hear of their heroic toil, but the Master knows all about it; and one day, in goodly company, their story will be told.

Miss Lochie Rankin did not design her latest letter for publication, but we give an extract, hoping to bring the hearts of the women of our church into closer sympathy with woman's work for women in heathen lands: "I wish I had time to tell you of my work, which is now nearly self-supporting. Unless you had lived through it all as I have, trying to cleanse, feed and clothe a lot of Chinese beggars, not to mention the mental and spiritual work, you could not appreciate the happy change. The past winter has been my first in China that I could wear clothes that could not be boiled. It is such a relief to meet the children as pupils, and not have to waste my best strength in trying to make them decent." It does not require a Chinese interpreter to explain to our lady readers that reference to "boiled" clothes.

"Mission work these days is a picnic." The remark was made by a leading church member. We thought of Miss Rankin and her companions in China gathering those waifs from Chinese streets and homes, and combing and cleansing them for the school-room, while every touch suggested the need of disinfected garments. We thought of the eleven hours that devoted woman spends every day in the school room, besides hours after sunset given to Chinese women who come to her for sympathy and instruction, and wondered how many mothers would willingly see their daughters departing for such a "picnic." We thought of Watkins and his wife preaching the gospel in Mexico, amid scowling priests and fanatical mobs, and wondered where the picnic came in. We thought of Methvin creeping on hands and knees into a Kiowa tepee, and looking into the swarthy faces of braves and squaws wrapped in greasy blankets as he tells them the story of the cross, and wondered if it reminded him of a May-day frolic. There is, no doubt, a spice of romance in some departments of mission life, and some fields are less difficult and painful than others: but in all there will be found hard work, lonely hours and distasteful associations, which more frequently suggest the cross than a holiday, and will make the missionary hunger for human sympathy while he feels his need of the grace of God.

"How long do you expect to remain in Japan?" The question was asked N. W. Utley by a lady not familiar with our work the day before he left for his distant field. There was a sober look on his face as he quietly replied: "I expect to spend my life there." We lost the rest of the conversation. He expected to visit his mother before he left, and we were thinking of the parting of mother and son. Did the mother think of a "picnic" when she bade good-by to her boy?

My Holiday.

MR. EDITOR: I've had a holiday, and, as that is something so unusual, I must tell you about it. Now, do not think I am so egotistical as to imagine you would care to hear about my mere enjoyment—it is the place and the occasion I want to tell you of. I went to the commencement of Whitworth College at Brookhaven, Miss., and enjoyed every minute of the time. Bishop Hargrove preached one of his magnificent sermons, Sunday, on the text: "Her price is far above rubies." But while it was fine, timely and touched on the live questions of the day, some of us (women) might have argued a few points with him, if the opportunity had offered, and we had dared! But there is no use in trying to tell you of the sermon and speeches, as the dailies have told you of them better than I can. They were all much enjoyed by all who were present.

The young "sweet girl graduates," twenty-one in number, showed by their unusually good essays what fine work had been done by President Fitzhugh and his able faculty. The young ladies showed that they had been taught to think, and were not mere parrots. Bishop Galloway was chosen to present the medals, and made some happy hits in his presentation speech. He told those who did not get medals to content themselves with the belief that they deserved it, and it was only a slight difference in judgment.

The music throughout the exercises and the concert showed excellent work on the part of Prof. Eckhardt and his assistants in the musical department. It is to be regretted that he severs his connection with the college after twenty years of faithful service. But Whitworth's loss is Sherman's gain.

Mrs. Kidd, too, who has been at Whitworth so long as to seem a part of the institution, will take charge of the college in Sherman. Her "girls" showed their love for her, and their appreciation of her kindness to them, by presenting her with a lovely gold watch. Bishop Galloway was again chosen to make the presentation speech, which he did in his own inimitable style. When Mrs. Kidd rose to go to the rostrum the cheering was hearty, and never ceased until she gained the rostrum and begun to speak, with a voice full of tears.

I will not try your patience by telling of all the good things I heard and all the nice people I saw, but I must tell you something of the good work done by Miss McEwen's art pupils. It did not get the attention it deserved from the visitors present. The walls of the spacious chapel were hung with drawings and paintings and pictures done in pastel. The china display was in the reading-room of the institute building, and there was some lovely work. Mottoes illustrated: "The leaves of life keep falling one by one." (Illustrated by autumn leaves falling gently down.) "Give us this day our daily bread." (Illustrated by sheaves of wheat and grain ready for the harvest.)

"Oh, ah! that spring should vanish with the rose:
That youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close!"

(Illustrated by a scroll with a lovely yellow rose, with green leaves hanging over, and the petals falling so naturally on the edge of the plate.) "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip:" and there stands a lad and a lass, and for the life of me I can't tell if they are in the midst of a lover's first quarrel, or if they have dropped the cup between them. There were sea scenes, snow scenes and flowers in profusion: berries and fruits lying so naturally on the plates one felt tempted to try to eat them; vases of teraline, with roses, water-lilies and leaves in relief.

And now, Mr. Editor, if you are there sure enough next commencement, I hope you will enjoy yourself as much as I did.

NAY! NAY! NAY!

MR. EDITOR: Your article in the ADVOCATE, of June 28, asking the brethren to express aye or nay as to whether Centenary should be endowed or not, I say, Nay! for your very article of above date proves that the college is not in need. Out of debt and everything in good order to carry on the work, and not prosperous! I can not see that endowment will help it. You might build a fine hotel in a good location, furnish it, supply it with clerks, managers, servants, and so on; and, after all, it is not a success. In the hotel case, as well as that of Centenary, something would be lacking; but, in my opinion, it is not endowment. If the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana should have two or three hundred thousand dollars for education, I think it would be better to build more colleges. We have certainly done nobly for Centenary, and it ought, by proper management, take care of itself.

The Holy Day.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing that Sabbath breaking had become one of the greatest sins of our professedly Christian country, and that there is a hopeful waking up among our Protestant Churches to rescue our holy day from its notorious desecration, I had proposed to take part in the effort to restore our Christian Sabbath to its proper observance, and had written two articles on the subject which you had published in our Conference organ: but, while getting ready to write a third article, I received from Rev. L. L. Pickett, of Dangerfield, Texas, a neat pamphlet of sixty-one pages, entitled, "A Short Treatise on the Practical Observance of the Day of the Lord," with a request that I read it critically, and, if I approved of it, to request its publication in some of our church papers. I have read it carefully, and approve of it with all my heart. It is the very book which all who have any respect for the Sabbath or fear of punishment for its desecration ought to read. Mr. Pickett writes in a plain, forcible, colloquial style; quotes the laws requiring and regulating Sabbath keeping from the Bible, and supports all his arguments, pro and con, from the same source, so that if any dislike his book, it is only an evidence that their carnal minds are at enmity with God's holy book. It is not a tedious book to read, and the wonder is that Mr. Pickett could condense so much valuable information in so small a volume. He takes a wide range; goes over the whole ground; takes in the railroad syndicates, with all their Sabbath breaking, including that of their employees; Sabbath street cars and livery teams; Sunday mails and newspapers; Sunday traveling for worldly purposes or pleasure, etc. In a word, he exposes Sabbath breaking wherever he finds it—in individuals, families, in the churches, in communities, corporations, among commercial men, or elsewhere. And all who admit the authority of the Bible must feel the force of his arguments. I sincerely wish our more than a million of Southern Methodists would get Mr. Pickett's little book and read it carefully and prayerfully. I think it would set them right on the proper observance of our holy day. I am glad to see that the copy sent me belongs to the third thousand. Mr. Pickett invites orders sent to him at Dangerfield, Texas, for the book, to be sent by mail at the following prices: One copy, ten cents; thirteen copies, $1; 100 for $6 50.

I have no personal acquaintance with Rev. L. L. Pickett, but I feel that I am but doing justice to one of the most important institutions in the church and in the world by calling attention to his book on Sabbath keeping. I would be encouraged if all our church papers would give the above at least one insertion.

From the Work.

WASHINGTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Things have been moving on very smoothly, indeed, this year at this place. Congregations have kept up well, and a general interest has been constantly manifested. The holy influence of Bro. Porter, the faithful pastor who ended his labors and went up to his reward from this place last year, is still felt, and remains a power for good. Our protracted meeting was the best for years—so say the people.

Bro. Wimberly, of Plaquemine, came over and helped me. He came in the Spirit of the Master, and the Holy Spirit owned his work. We had a gracious time. Nine were taken into the church, and the church was greatly blessed through the preaching of this consecrated brother. Bro. Davies, of Opelousas, also rendered valuable assistance. His sermon on the book of life, that everyone is making, left its impress upon us all.

Our collections so far have been better than usual. The presiding elder has been paid half of his salary; the preacher in charge a little less than half. The week of prayer and self-denial was observed, and a good little amount sent on to Dr. Kelley. Over half the assessments for Bishops and education have been paid, and all of the assessment for foreign missions, except a few dollars, and part of that is subscribed. Besides, a nice collection of $19 was taken by Bro. McLaurin for the Bible cause.

I have every reason to rejoice, Mr. Editor, in that the Lord is with us. I feel that we are on the upward grade, going on to perfection, in the love and knowledge of God.

Bro. Wimberly has promised to help me again in November, and then I want to have street services. We must follow up the people with the gospel if they will not come to our churches. We know the gospel can save them, and will, if they be brought under its influences.

We return our thanks to these brethren, and praise the Lord for his goodness toward us!

HENRY S. JOHNS.

WEST MELVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I closed a meeting at West Melville, on the Evergreen charge, on June 24. The result was good, but might have been better had it not been for the measles which nearly every family in town had more or less; and also the rain, which we had every day during the meeting. But, notwithstanding the above disadvantages, the people would go to church, and the Lord did come down, or was there in the person of his Spirit to convict, convert, and save sinners, some of the deepest dye. The most of those who joined the church were men; only three females. No children, from the fact that they could not come on account of the measles, which was or were preying upon them. It made me feel sad to know that we got no children at that meeting to unite with the church of God, to start with us to heaven: but I hope we will get some of them at my next appointment at that place. Rev. W. Wimberly, of the Plaquemine charge, was with me, and preached with power and in the demonstration of the truth as it is in Jesus. He labored hard and effectually.

Our District Conference will meet in Evergreen, on Thursday morning, July 26; and if you will come to it, I will let you preach and talk about our paper—NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

City Mission Work.

What to do, and how to do it, were the two questions constantly in mind when I arrived here to take hold of the New Orleans mission work. To the first question I got no answer, and it seemed could get none. There was work to be done, much of it by common consent; but how to begin, and what to do first, were unanswered questions. The Constitution of the mission contained only in outline general directions, with no points of labor indicated, and hence I felt, as Dr. Morton did on first entering the Mammoth Cave: there was indeed a great opening ahead of me, but it was as dark as Egypt. I had vague, but only vague conceptions as to what was expected of me practically, and as to what I ought to do. These crude notions were outlined in the secretary's first annual report, and now form a part of the Minutes. Dr. Ahrens said to me one day "not to go too fast, and not to expect too much at the start." "The work will open up as you go on, and will develop of itself," and so said others. This was true. I wish now to mention only one point or line of development, as it has dawned or been forced upon me, after the practical experience of the past few months.

One night, on returning from an outdoor meeting, corner Soniat and Laurel, it occurred to me that if, in connection with the various pastoral charges, there could be held one or more week-night meetings in rented rooms for purposes of prayer, enquiry, Bible readings, etc., making these points mission stations in their neighborhoods, visiting systematically by special committee these neighborhoods, and thereby gathering in the non-church goers into these stations every week; that this would be the beginning of a grand, systematic, evangelistic mission work that would, in the course of time, not far distant either, result in the conversion of scores and hundreds of people, now without the gospel, and establish at proper points new churches. Acting on this conception, I announced at the close of the Soniat meeting such a mission point in a room rented for a mission Sunday-school, both to be under the supervision and care of Parker Chapel. The pastor, Rev. C. M. Lyons, has taken hold of the work as suggested, and is now working it up along the lines above indicated. This furnishes an abundance of practical work for his members, and is bound to result in an increase of efficient laborers in his church, as well as the conversion of souls, and the building up of his congregation from the outside. Suppose we had twenty-five or more of such places as mission stations in the city, actively worked up in this way by the various churches, eternity alone could count up the grand results of such a movement persistently carried on for a decade, or to the end.

It is encouraging to me to find that this is the identical plan, with slight variations determined by localities, which McAll has been and is now pursuing in his mission work in Paris, one of the most wonderful and successful missionary enterprises of the world. The June number of the Missionary Review of The World has the following from Rev. Dr. Muchmore, editor Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, after a personal study on the ground of McAll's mission methods in Paris. He says:

"The McAll work has never been independent of the churches and pastors of Paris. It would have been the easiest thing in the world to have started a church bearing his name or any other name. But, instead, he has wrought in the greatest harmony with the French pastors. He has advised with them, has had their constant help. Some of the most eminent preaching in these stations two, three and sometimes four times a week, is by men of world-wide reputation, such as Dr., now Senator de Pressense, Pasteurs Bersier, Monod, Recolin, Dhombres, Bollard and others. There is but one opinion about this work in Paris, nay in all France, which is enthusiastic and profoundly trustful. It is the auxiliary of the French Protestant churches, and at this moment we are told that there are a hundred applications for these helpers for the churches throughout France by the pastors and consistories. One of its most blessed fruits is in imparting a knowledge to the pastors of France of better methods of work. In the long inactivity of the church, when it was practically fettered, the tendency was to take the life and aggressive activity out of it and its pastors. Many had fallen into a humdrum conservatism, little less lively than the dead march. The pastors come up from all over France, and catch the spirit and learn its methods, and carry them home, not in vain, as the wonderful revivals throughout France during the last two years have shown. To the ministry of France it has been better in its teaching how to work than a half-dozen ordinary seminaries. The French clergy appreciate it, pray for it. French Protestants contributed to it over five thousand francs, a great sum considering their condition and the demands upon their poverty. They commend it, as they well might, and God forbid that they should ever become so blind as not to feel that it is the pulsation of their own church heart. For they must never be separated. It would imperil, to our judgment, the hopes of the salvation of France. But it may be asked, What are the results, not general, but organized? The French Protestant churches are receiving converted souls that they could never have reached. All the pastors, who have wrought in this work, have had accessions from it. Pastors Bersier, Monod, de Pressense, etc., and so has it been with the Methodist, Congregational and Baptist Churches."

I will give the reader shortly a letter from McAll himself, bearing directly on the point and showing that through these mission stations, and through these alone, his wonderful work, under God, has been accomplished.

J. J. BILLINGSLEY

Kavanaugh College.

By an appointment made at the last session of the Mississippi Conference it became my duty to visit the above-named institution of learning the present year. We reached the college on Monday, June 18, to find that they were not waiting for us. The building and some of the grounds were already crowded with people, and the commencement work was going forward in good earnest.

The commencement sermon had been preached, the day before, by Rev. Robert A. Cooper, of New Albany, Miss., and he had made his escape—not, however, before he had made a fine impression. The address of Rev. A. A. Lomax before the Christian Association, which was highly spoken of, we missed also.

The program was made up of music, essays, orations and such other things as are usually found on the program of a college commencement—all of which reflected credit upon the president and his faculty. We were especially pleased with the essays read by the graduates. The commencement address by Rev. Inman W. Cooper, on "The Elements of a True and Successful Character," more than met the expectations of his friends. It was a capital effort, full of thought and pathos. The talk of the president to the graduating class, though short for want of time, was pointed and very touching, and, doubtless, made an impression for good that will never be lost.

After this talk degrees were conferred upon the six graduates, and the degree of "Doctor of Divinity" was conferred upon Rev. J. M. Weems, presiding elder of Brookhaven District.

The members of the Alumni Association held their first meeting on Tuesday evening, June 19, at 4 P. M. The programme consisted of music, a talk by the president and an address of orthodox length by this writer.

One of the most charming features of this college is the art department, which is managed by the cultured wife of the president. The walls of the chapel are girdled and adorned with beautiful and valuable pictures which have been painted by this teacher and her pupils. These pictures speak for themselves, and make an impression upon the minds of visitors that could never be felt in their absence.

The commencement exercises closed with a grand concert under the management of Mrs. Featherstun.

There are several features about this college that will not fail to impress the visitor. A home-like feeling seems to pervade everything. This, we suppose, grows out of the fact that a number of families are living on the grounds for the purpose of educating their children, and on account of the parental way in which the boarding department is managed. A Christian atmosphere pervades everything. We detected it in the orations and essays, as well as in the home circle. The temperance and prohibition sentiment is at a white heat.

The attendance is quite large. We were told that one hundred and ninety pupils were enrolled the past session. We left with the conviction that Kavanaugh is a success. It is in the right place, and has the right man at the helm. We predict wide usefulness for it in the future.

Let those who can, help and encourage Bro. Featherstun in the magnificent work that he is doing.

The Three Infinites.

The Bible is the Word of God, because it is the Book of Infinites—the revelation of what nature, without it, never could have attained, and, coming short of, the knowledge of which, nature were lost.

Standing with Uriel in the sun, we launch the proposition that the Scriptures are divine in their very message because they deal with three infinites—infinite guilt; infinite holiness; infinite atonement.

A book must itself be infinite which deals with Infinites; and a book must be divine which divinely reconciles Infinites.

Infinite guilt! Has my guilt any bottom? Is hell any deeper? Is there, in retrospection, a possible lower, more bottomless nadir? Infinite guilt! That is what opens, caves away under my feet, the longer, the more carefully I plumb my own heart—my nature, my record. Infinitely guilty! That is what I am and where—far, far below the plane of self-apology or ghastly "criticism" of the Book which testifies to this. Infinitely guilty! That is what I am. Infinitely sinking and below me an infinite Tophet. I know that. As soon as the Bible declares it, I know it, and with it, I know that witnessing Bible divine. I know it—I do not know how—by an instinct, by conscience, by illumination, by the power of the Spirit of God; by the Word without, and by the flashed conviction in me, which accord.

And, counterpoised above me, a correlative infinite—God! What can be higher? What zenith loftier? What doming of responsibility more dread or more portentious? Infinite God—above me—coming to judge me! On the way now. I must meet him. I know that. I know it as soon as the Bible declares it. I know it—I do not know how—by an instinct. Even the natural man must picture to himself when thus depicted, and must fear,

"A dreadful grandeur, and a worship true."

An infinitely holy God above me, coming to judge me. That is the second Infinite.

Then the third and what completes the triangle, and makes its sides eternally, divinely equal Infinite, Savior—God on the cross making answer to God on the throne—my Jesus—my refuge—my everlasting Jehovah.

By these three infinites—especially this last—this infinite atonement, for which my whole being cries out its last cry of exhaustion—by this third side of the stupendous triangle—the side which, left to myself, I could never make out, the Bible proves itself the soul's geometry, the one eternal mathematics—the true revelation of God.

G. S. Bishop, D. D.

There's nothing kills a man so soon as having nobody to find fault with but himself.—George Eliot.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Some one has figured it out that if the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church had contributed per capita as much for missions as her ministers did, instead of one million there would have been seventeen millions raised. Why can't the membership contribute as much as the ministers? Answer: They have not as much of the grace of liberality. Why have they not as much of that grace? Answer: Because they don't want it! That's the whole of it.

The Bureau of Education at Washington has in hand the preparation of a series of histories of education in the various States. Mr. Edwin W. Fay, Fellow for Sanskrit in the Johns Hopkins University, has been selected to prepare the Louisiana volume in the series. Col. William Preston Johnston has consented to write the chapter on the Tulane University. The previous work of the Bureau of Education in this line has been directed toward the common schools, but in the present series higher education will be the topic, with only incidental references to the earlier stages. It is earnestly recommended that the various school authorities put themselves into communication with Mr. Fay at once, in order that the history may be as complete as possible. Mr. Fay's summer address will be Baton Rouge.

When in 1874 the Minnesota State authorities investigated the subject of tree planting, it was found that there had been planted under congregational and State laws offering premiums for the planting of trees, 14,908,048 trees, or about 7,000 acres of land by private enterprise, and that two of the railway companies had planted almost 5,000,000 trees. In 1877 there were planted 4,466,371 trees, and there were growing, which had been previously planted and inclusive of those planted that year, 28,602,556 trees, according to the State statisticians' report. Some estimated 50,000,000. Still more remarkable is the history of tree planting in Nebraska. The effect of foresting prairie lands in that State has been to increase the area and the amount of rainfall, and extend the area of arable land

The Pastor on a Vacation.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

MR. EDITOR: On the evening of June 25 we left Jefferson, Texas, on the Iron Mountain train, bound for points in Southern and Western Missouri. Having formed all my ideas of Texas from what I had read and heard of its extensive plains and broad fields, you can imagine my great surprise at finding a poor, hilly, pine-woods country, scarcely comparing favorably with much of our same character of lands in Mississippi; indeed, for a distance of sixty miles I saw little evidences of life except great lumber piles and mills. What an enormous business the lumber business must be in that section! Every few miles large saw-mills and acres upon acres of ground covered with stacks of lumber. The forests have been cut down and sawed up for miles on each side of the road. I understand now where the building material for the southern and western portion of the State is gotten.

Along this line I find a neat little town, called "Atlanta." It can never hope to rival its historic namesake, though quite a nice, busy-looking place. We also crossed a Sulphur river, which, though it emitted no significant odor, looked to be appropriately named. Just at sunset we left Texarkana; consequently did not have much daylight in the southern part of Arkansas, though by the bright, clear light of the moon we could see quite well. Of course, the first things thought of on entering the State were coon-skin caps, half-covered cabins, two-stringed fiddles, and white-headed children. In vain did I look for such scenes. I did see one old pioneer, who looked as though he might have been the owner of the oft-referred-to house, fiddle and all.

By the way, Mr. Editor, I was informed that the oft-sung song of the "Arkansas Traveler," the half-covered cabin, the unturned tune, the right-turned cow, the stationary road, and much of the rest, is but an embellishment of an actual experience of one of Arkansas' most prominent men.

All we could see of Little Rock was by moonlight—a romantic, grand-looking place. Soon daylight came, which gave us better opportunity of seeing the northern part of the State. The hill country is good, and the valleys of the Arkansas, White and Black rivers indicate a soil of the finest quality. Crops of all kinds looked well, though on our entire route from Vicksburg we have heard complaint of too much rain. We were told that nearly every town on the line through this State is free of the saloon. From what I could see and hear I am ready to pronounce Arkansas a grand State and a rich field, promising great things to those who shall develop her resources. It is not necessary for a man to be either a prophet or the son of a prophet to see great things in the near future for such an inviting country.

A run of twenty hours brought us to the romantic little town of Arcadia, in Missouri, where we stop for a few days. What attractive scenery meets you on every side! The town is situated in the valley of a beautiful creek, which seems to be hunting its very way around the crags and over the rocks. Here it meets a rock-ribbed hill, which checks its rapid flow and forces it to seek another course; then it seems to slip stealthily through a bed of solid stone, or around some begrimed and weather-stained boulder; then it turns, as for a more peaceful course and a rest from its weary wanderings, to flow beside some meadow blooming with the bright-red clover, or yellow with the golden wheat. Were it not that the Muses had written of me, "non fit," I would say: "Poor, tired, toiling brook, stop now for awhile and rest, enjoy the beauties of your surrounding, see the results of your presence and influence, how they brighten the face of Mother Earth and cheer the heart of the husbandman;" but, no, it can not rest. Its mission calls it onward—others are waiting for its enlivening presence; and so it wanders and labors onward that others may bless its coming and rejoice in its life-giving waters. Turning away, thus I moralize: How like the stream of human life! What nobler work is known to man than to strengthen, enliven and make happy the souls of others; and who dares stop, even though many obstructions may impede our course! And, again, I thought how like man to worry and chafe at the oppositions in life, and to pass by unmindful of the many happy seasons which come from the presence of the Lord! How many lessons Nature teaches us; how slow are we to learn them!

On every side rise up the mountains, covered with the thick green forests from base to summit. The trained skill of the yard-dresser never trimmed the shrubbery more evenly and attractively than this appears. Up, up, up it goes with all the evenness and beauty of the painter's brush, with here and there a terraced plat, which but adds to the grandeur of the scenery.

Southern Methodism, I am told, is much stronger in these parts than any other denomination, and yet I find the Catholics in possession of a fine school property here, which was once a successful Methodist college for girls. Indeed, this was in days past quite an educational center for the Methodists of Missouri. In that line Arcadia has no mean history; and I know of no place where everything seems to conspire to make a more desirable location for schools than here. The wisdom shown by the Catholics in securing this property is very evident, and the indifference on the part of the Methodists seems unwise. In the history of this institution we have a sad and forcible reminder of the evil of incurring debt. In order to erect finer buildings, $10,000 were borrowed and put in brick and mortar. Unable to complete the building, it stood as dead capital, until finally the creditors forced a sale; and for a pitiful sum the Jesuits bought a property now valued at $40,000, within 100 miles of St. Louis, and accessible from all points of the South and West. Where once ruled such educators as Berryman and Lewis now preside the black-veiled nun. If the Methodists of St. Louis had been as liberal as the Catholics of that city, this valuable property would not have passed from our hands. When will Protestants learn the lesson of the great value of money as taught by the Catholic Church? They seem to appreciate more fully than we that "there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth more and more."

The ADVOCATE of last week met me here, for which accept thanks.

Before I close, permit me to express my high appreciation of the choice made by the trustees of Centenary College in electing Dr. Hunnicutt to its presidency. An experience of two years under him as an instructor, disciplinarian and guardian convinces me that you have done wisely. Unless he be willfully stubborn or mentally incapable, I hesitate not to say that any young man who associates with Bro. Hunnicutt in his home or in the school-room can not but be benefited mentally and morally. No one need hesitate for a moment to trust his boys in the hands of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt.

But I must quit somewhere. My traveling companion engages to do all the talking, and I all the hearing, seeing and writing. Both of us are satisfied with the contract. That, perhaps, is the reason I write so lengthily. My store accumulates. I assure you, my companion accumulates no talk. It is like a stream of living water, ever flowing—good, sound, solid talk, too. Wish I could do half so well with the pen. Good-by.

Letter from Dr. Y. J. Allen.

My Dear Dr. John: I wrote you a short note on the eve of our departure, and now hasten to add a few more lines in anticipation of our return. Bishop Wilson and I, accompanied by Mrs. Hayes and Miss Melissa Baker, left New York on the morning of May 26, Saturday, per steamer "Umbria," one of the largest and fastest of the Cunard line, and reached Liverpool on the following Saturday, June 2. The voyage was an exceedingly pleasant one every way. There were some 500 first-class passengers. Indeed, the large ship was filled to its utmost capacity, and we found among them so many agreeable companions, all journeying to the same destination, that it was but an easy matter to spend the few days on board both pleasantly and profitably. Mrs. Hayes and Miss Baker both proved themselves to be good sailors, and made for themselves many acquaintances and friends among those who were going up to London to the Pan-Anglican Convention, the Pan-Presbyterian Council, and the World's Missionary Conference, respectively.

From Liverpool we came on to London direct, and, having a few days to spare, Bishop Wilson and I ran out to Oxford for a day. There I met with my old China friend, Dr. Legge, professor of the Chinese language and literature in the University; and to him we were indebted for a most delightful visit to that university city.

At the appointed time the great Conference was opened at Exeter Hall, and from the first day till now, the closing day, there has been no abatement of interest or zeal in the sessions; and when I tell you that there have been no fewer than seven sessions daily in the same building, you will have some idea not only of the capacity of the hall (Exeter), but of the great numbers in attendance. The Conference is a big thing—too big altogether for convenience, and possibly for efficiency. There are on the list of delegates some 1,254 names, and these, as the name implies, literally represent the world and the fragments thereof. And we have had written papers, elaborate speeches and speechlets, short and rapid, without intermission; your representatives putting in a word here and there as they found opportunity, which was not often where there was so large a number to be heard from. Great harmony and unanimity of sentiment have prevailed. It seems to be the accepted sentiment of all, of whatever denomination, that our missionary ground the church is one, and that on the platform of the great commission all denominations stand shoulder to shoulder, pledged for the conversion of the world—the world for Christ, and Christ for the world. And, if I mistake not, a new departure in the missionary enterprise will follow close on this greatest of all Conferences: in zeal, in harmony, in methods, and in a successful prosecution of the work to the uttermost parts of the earth.

The proceedings of the Conference have been carefully reported or otherwise preserved, so that in due time we shall have them all in published form; the whole to cost about six shillings six pence, or, say, $1.62½, postpaid. All our preachers should have a copy, for it will form a cyclopedia on the subject, and give all the latest information, and every phase and variety of views, theoretical or practical, involved in the great subject. Due notice will be given, I suppose, of price and of whom copies may be ordered in America.

I am very much worn and exhausted, so I shall return to United States by next Cunard steamer, the "Etruria," Liverpool, on June 23, hoping to have a few days' rest before setting out on the long voyage which still awaits me.

Yours faithfully,

YOUNG J. ALLEN.

P. S.—On Sunday last it was my good fortune to attend love-feast and Sunday-school in City Road Chapel, and at night, by request of the superintendent, alias preacher in charge, Rev. J. McKinny, had the honor of delivering my message to the congregation worshiping in City Road Chapel, and afterwards of sitting down to supper in John Wesley's house. Y. J. A.

EXETER HALL, LONDON, June 19, 1888.

The Woman Question in the Baptist State Convention.

The Louisiana Baptist State Convention met in Evergreen, July 5. There were 500 churches and 11 associations represented by about 125 delegates, among whom were 5 or 6 ladies sent as delegates by their churches. The Committee on Credentials reported in favor of admitting these ladies. This sprung quite a debate. Judge Rutland, chairman of Committee on Credentials, explained that as the committee had the credentials of the ladies from their several churches, it was deemed beyond the province of the committee to exclude them; hence the report to the convention. Revs. Penick and Bussey spoke against the adoption of the report. Revs. Harrall, Grambrell and Solomon took the other side. After considerable discussion, the vote was taken upon the adoption of the report, and resulted 45 for and 45 against. On the second ballot it stood 40 for and 42 against. The report was then recommitted and amended by leaving out the names of the sisters, and then passed. Thus have the sisters of the Baptist persuasion been relegated to the lobby of the conventions for the present.

Louisiana Avenue Band of Hope.

We spent a very enjoyable hour one evening last week in the Louisiana Avenue Church. It was the occasion of a temperance meeting of the young people of that charge. The organization is known as the Band of Hope, and is composed mainly of boys and girls of the congregation, and is under the supervision of Mrs. Hattie Heck. The exercises consisted in recitations, colloquies and songs—all bearing upon some phase of the great question which is now so prominently before the people. Our young temperance friends acquitted themselves admirably. Dr. Walker, the pastor, gave the young people a most wise, yet earnest and hopeful address. The audience was a large one, and seemed to be well satisfied with the evening's entertainment. We congratulate Sister Heck and her helpers on the success of her efforts to fasten upon the young mind and implant in the young heart the precepts and principles of temperance. Why should not every church have its "band of hope?" Is it not worth something to rear the children in the way that leads to sobriety in manhood and womanhood? Is it not easier to save them now than it can be to save them twenty years hence?

Notes.

In one of our churches in Macon, Ga., the pastor asked for $1,200 for missions and in a few minutes he received over $2,000. That's the way to give missionary money. As much for missions as for ourselves.

The papers are "making quite a to-do" over a "gospel wagon" that has made its appearance in Washington City. Our mission in this city has been working that sort of machinery for several months, and working it with efficiency.

There is food for a good deal of thought on the part of a certain class of people in one sentence of the report which the grand jury of Hinds county, Miss., recently made. That sentence is: "So far as our investigation goes, crime in the district is largely on the decrease, and if we credit the evidence before us, the local option law is the best observed law on the statute book." That is palpable evidence of the growth of the right sort of sentiment.

When the great astronomer, Kepler, had demonstrated the reality of his discovery of the three laws of planetary motion, his devout heart found expression in this prayer:

Father of the universe, what moved thee to raise a feeble creature of earth so as to make him a king, and almost a god, in thinking thy thoughts after thee? I thank thee, Lord and Creator of all, that thou hast filled me with rapture over the works of thy hand, and hast enabled me to disclose to men the glory of thy creation, so far as finite mind can comprehend infinity.

Which would you like most to do: to die and go to heaven or stay here and work for the salvation of the perishing souls around you? Paul said, "I desire to depart and to be with Christ; nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you, and having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith." Bishop Taylor is reported as saying that he would rather spend the next twenty years trying to save the savages of Africa than to spend them in heaven! Have you that degree of missionary grace?

Bishop Key, at the Fayettville District Conference, North Carolina, is reported by the Raleigh Christian Advocate as having thus spoken on finance:

"He gave it as his belief that the Great Head of the church still claims the tithes, and that nothing less should satisfy an enlightened Christian conscience. No man, said the Bishop, ever gives to the Lord until he goes beyond the tenth of his income. "The tithes are mine, saith the Lord," and the man who stops short of that, is not giving to the Lord, but is withholding his dues, and is doing that in the face of light and truth. There is something here that will do to meditate on.

The late General Conference, in New York, discussed a great many questions, and the Western Christian Advocate wonders why there was such an "inexplicable and ominous" silence on the subject of "class meetings?" The Western seems to us to point out the cause in this sentence: "The silence of the Conference is ominous because it argues indifference to the acknowledged decay into which the class is falling." When things begin to decay, they can no longer be used efficiently. The class meeting of Methodism is going, and will soon be a thing of the past, and what is strange is, that the pastor is running it out of the church. He is doing the class leader's work.

Dr. Haygood, in his address at the late commencement at Emory, gave some wholesome truths in his usual pointed manner. This about public schools fits us in Louisiana exactly:

We must provide better public schools. If Texas has a good public school for nine months in the year and Georgia a poor one for three months, the home-hunter will go to Texas. Our attitude towards the public school is irrational. We do just enough to obstruct private enterprise, but not enough to have good schools. It is penny-wise and pound-foolish. Our penuriousness in dealing with public schools is extravagance for we largely waste what we spend, by not spending enough. We waste the time of our children—rob them of their opportunity, and bring up a race of illiterate people.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate has this:

The editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE says he politely asked his contributors to give through the ADVOCATE us to the reason they, of that section, are doing so little as a church for the education of the boys. Two responded. This calls to the editor's mind an extended discussion a little while ago over the question, "Whether the Divinity suffered on the cross." Your constituents, brother, are not peculiar in that they do not care to discuss education. Many members of the church we know who talk and think a great deal more of Adam and the "Federal headship" than the education of this day. We are not surprised at the answer of a prominent minister who recently, when asked a question about Adam, said: "I don't know him—never knew him."

Personals.

John C. Vance, of Bossier parish, has been appointed surveyor of the port of New Orleans in place of Richard Sinnott, deceased.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Maclay, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has been a missionary in foreign lands since 1847, has accepted a call to be the dean of the Maclay College of Theology in San Fernandi, California.

It is said that the number of persons converted during Rev. Thomas Harrison's revival in three New York Methodist Churches will reach about fifteen hundred.

The meeting at the Seashore Camp Ground begun yesterday, and before our next issue will have completed its work. We trust that good shall be done that will tell in the great day. Let all our readers pray earnestly that this may be the best meeting of all yet held.

Rev. John B. Davenport, of the North Alabama Conference, "a faithful, madest, uncomplaining servant of God," died recently.

Bro. Ellis, presiding elder of Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, writes us a note in which occurs this sentence: "At a country church in St. Helena circuit, I held a quarterly meeting, last Wednesday, and had 150 people at church with a goodly attendance of stewards." Verily, that puts us in mind of the old times, when quarterly meetings were the biggest things on a circuit!

The endowment for Randolph-Macon College, according to the Episcopal Methodist, has reached the sum of $111,000.

Gov. Nicholls has appointed Hon R. H. Marr, judge of section A, criminal district court, in this city; and Hon. T. C. W. Ellis, judge of division A, civil district court; and Hon. F. D. King, judge of division B, civil district court. These are eminently proper appointments. Judges Marr and Ellis we know well, and Judge King, according to the Picayune, "has always been an advocate of reform." Judge Ellis was graduated with the writer, from Centenary College in 1855. Another laurel for the old alma mater!

Bro. J. W. McLaurin, agent for the American Bible Society for Mississippi and Louisiana, gave us a call last week. He represents his work as growing in interest. His colporteurs report great destitution of the Word of God in many places. Bro McLaurin is constantly traveling from place to place and making addresses, and says the people are responding generously to his calls for money to aid in the great work of supplying the destitute with the Scriptures.

Let all our preachers and camp-meeting managers be sure to read the article, on the seventh page, "Why Are Not More Souls Saved at Camp Meetings?" The camp-meeting season having opened, let everybody have "an eye single" to the conversion of souls.

A correspondent writes that there is living near Gloster, in Amite county, Miss., a Sister Roberts, "in perfect health and sprightly and gay," who is ninety-four years of age and has been a member of the Methodist Church seventy-five years.

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love."

One hundred and fifty women immigrants arrived at New York, June 13, from Liverpool, and left immediately for Utah.

The June Missionary Herald gives figures which prove that during the five years from June, 1882, to June, 1887, there were exported to Africa from Boston 3,500,736 gallons of spirituous liquors, chiefly rum, valued at $1,156,824.

There are 3,100 women teaching in the schools of New York, and 1,600 in Brooklyn, while only 222 men are employed in New York, and 66 in Brooklyn. Besides there are ten hosts employed in private schools of all kinds.

Periodicals.

—The Eclectic Magazine, for July, has Mr. Gladstone's review of Robert Elsmere; W. H. Mallock's Conservatism and the Diffusion of Property; William Smart's Dislocations of Industry; Rev. William Wright's The Power Behind the Pope; The Story of Lasseris' Version of the New Testament; Fred W. H. Myers', Matthew Arnold, and other articles of value. E. R. Pelton, New York. Price $5.

—The Treasury, for Pastor and People, is edited by J. Sanderson, D. D. The July number has several good sermons, leading thoughts of sermons, short and crisp editorials and various other good and edifying articles. E. B. Treat, 7 Broadway, New York. Yearly, $2 50. To clergymen, $2. Single copies, 25 cents each.

—The Woman's World, for July, is a particularly good number. The opening paper by Julia Wedgwood is on Women and Democracy. An illustrated paper follows, showing what women have done in the way of benefactions for Oxford. Recollections of Cobden, by Dorothy Nevill; Women Club Life is discussed by Amy Leoy. The department of fashions in this magazine is one that has no rival, and the women of America have thoroughly awakened to this fact. Cassell & Company, New York. 35 cents a number. $3 50 a year in advance.

—Number 83 of the Springfield, Mass., Good Housekeeping has a very interesting and seasonable article on Plumbing and Travelling, and is full of excellent suggestions. All newsdealers sell it, 10 cents a copy. It is but $2 50 a year and is published fortnightly.

—St. Nicholas, for July, is bright, blooming, beautiful. How any of our young people can do without this monthly we are at a loss to know. Send $3 to Century Company, New York, and get it at once.

—The Chautauquan, for July, is on hand, full and running over with interesting, entertaining and edifying literature. This is one of the best of our monthlies and by far the cheapest. Theodore L. Flood, Meadville, Penn. Price $1 50.

—Popular Science has, Safety in House Drainage, by W. E. Hoyt; Teaching of Psychology, by Paul Janet; Progress in Agriculture, by Dr. M. Miles; Arctic Alaska, by W. L. Howard; Industrial Training, by Prof. Von Taube. Editor's table, etc. D. Appleton & Co., New York. $5 a year.

—Scribner's Magazine, for July, is the first number of Volume IV, and shows many signs of a steady advance along the lines which its projectors marked out for it. A number of attractive features are announced for this volume, among them five articles of the remarkable railway series which was successfully begun in the June number; important articles by the venerable Hugh McCulloch, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, drawing significant inferences from the experience of his half-century of public life; an essay in each number by Robert Louis Stevenson; and a large number of illustrated articles, stories and poems by the best writers in each field.

—Pearl of Days is growing brighter and more interesting with each month. We judge from the general character of its articles that this periodical is doing good service for the Sabbath cause. Published at 81 Dye r. by W. H. Ketchum, 71 Bible House, New York.

—Homiletic Magazine, June. This monthly has three sections: Theological, Expository and Homiletical, and each section is filled with matter "good to the use of edifying." E. B. Treat, New York. Price $3.

—The American Magazine, for July, has a full table of reading for the long, hot days of the month. It can be procured of the American Magazine Publishing Company, for 25 cents a number, $3 a year.

Complimentary Resolutions.

At a meeting of the official Boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Meridian, Miss., held July 1, 1888, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted for publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

Whereas, Rev. A. D. McVoy, after a residence of five years in our midst, has resigned the presidency of East Mississippi Female College; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the removal of Bro. McVoy this church has lost the services and the influence of a devout, earnest Christian and an able minister of the New Testament.

Resolved, That it is with deep regret that we part with Bro. McVoy and his estimable family.

Resolved, That we cordially commend him and his to those among whom their lot may be cast as entirely worthy of their highest esteem and affection.

Your House on Fire.

Not the house of wood, or brick, or stone, in which you live, but your bodily tenement may be in terrible danger from smouldering fire which you make no effort to quench. The great danger from impure blood is, that it debilitates the system, and the digestive organs grow weak and inactive. Hood's Sarsaparilla combines the best kidney and liver invigorators, with the best alteratives and tonics, all from the vegetable kingdom, carefully and understandingly prepared in a concentrated form. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and tones up the system, giving the whole body vitality, and effectually guarding it against the attacks of disease.

Notices.

Notice is hereby given that all the railroad companies in the State have agreed to transport delegates to the State Sunday-school Convention, to be held at Koscinsko, Wednesday and Thursday, July 25 and 26, and return them for one and one-third the regular fare. In order to secure the benefit of this reduction, delegates must pay full fare at starting point, and obtain a certificate from railroad ticket agent certifying to that fact, and, before leaving the convention have the same countersigned by the secretary of convention, to be presented to the ticket agent at Koscinsko before purchasing return ticket. It is absolutely necessary that a certificate be procured, stating that full fare was paid for the going journey, and that the bearer is, therefore, entitled to the excursion fare returning. It will also determine the route via which the ticket for return trip is to be sold, and without it no reduction will be made.

G. MARRY,
Sec. State Sunday-school Convention.

Attention is called to the following resolution, passed at the recent session of Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference:

Resolved, That we raise a fund by collections from auxiliaries to publish the Minutes of this Conference.

The district secretaries are requested to solicit a subscription from each auxiliary and forward the same without delay, as nothing will be done until the necessary amount has been received.

BESSIE FEARN, Rec. Sec.,
827 North State st., Jackson, Miss.

Delegates to the Homer District Conference will pay full fare going to the Conference, and one-third fare returning, on the V., S. and P. R. R., and one-half fare on the Minden Tap (round trip).

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

"Soup or fish, sir?" asked the waiter. "Neither," replied the guest. "That was a superficial question, wasn't it?" said the guest's friend.

De Lesseps is quite confident that his Panama Canal will be completed in three years; other men who are acquainted with the isthmus, declare that the two oceans can never be united at that point. Well, time will tell. We have long ceased to pronounce any project impossible. For thousands of years people suffered life-long misery from diseases which were supposed to be "visitations of God," but which are now known to be the result of impure blood. The old doctors considered such diseases incurable, and not a few modern ones have shared that opinion; but what can skeptics say in view of the record of Ayer's Sarsaparilla in the cure of blood diseases, during the past quarter of a century? Instances are innumerable of cases which defied all other treatment, but yielded, in a brief time, to a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla—a conclusive proof that no other alterative medicine has equal curative power.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Our Young People.

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP."

There is a little poem descriptive of a child saying this prayer, that is among the tenderest in our language, and we give it below:

Golden head so lowly bending;
Little feet so white and bare;
Dewy eyes, half shut, half-opened—
Clasping one her evening prayer.

Well she knows when she is saying,
"Now I lay me down to sleep,"
'Tis to God that she is praying,
Praying him her soul to keep.

Half asleep, and murmuring faintly,
"If I should die before I wake"—
Tiny fingers clasped so saintly—
"I pray the Lord my soul to take."

O the rapture, sweet, unbroken,
Of the soul who wrote that prayer!
Children's myriad voices floating
Up to heaven record it there.

If of all that has been written,
I could choose what might be mine,
It should be that child's petition,
Rising to the throne divine.

—Pittsburg Magazine.

MR. EDITOR: Having had a special and pressing invitation to attend a supper given in West Melville, for the benefit of the Methodist Church of that place, I left the village of Big Cane (where the parsonage is situated) in company with my youngest brother, on June 22, and arrived in West Melville about four o'clock P. M. My father, who had been there nearly two weeks in advance of us, holding a protracted meeting, met us and escorted us to Mr. Payton's, who, with his kind family, occupied the residence of Mrs. Landrum. Our reception was cordial in the extreme; their urbanity could not be excelled. Well, now for the supper. The table was set in the hall of the Melville Hotel. Mr. Rowe, proprietor, and his amiable wife, proprietress, know how to make their guests feel easy and at home, or rather home-like. The supper was made of all the eatables which were necessary for an occasion like that, found in and around Melville, and the committee drew largely on the city of New Orleans for tropical fruits and other things which the town could not furnish, and, let me tell you, Mr. Editor, all that a person had to pay for that magnificent and magnificently gotten-up supper was only fifty cents.

Well, as to the company of people who attended, I never have seen a more orderly and well-behaved company of people in my life. No indication of persons being under the influence of liquor, no loud or boisterous talking—nothing to mar the finest sensibility.

I attended church Saturday night. There was a fine and attentive congregation. My father preached, received three gentlemen into the church at that service. On Sabbath morning I attended Sabbath-school. They have a very interesting school, and well-conducted. At eleven o'clock my papa preached again, administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper to a large company of men, women and children, received one man into the church, and then closed his protracted meeting, which the people said was a grand success. At home again with mamma. Come to our District Conference at Evergreen, on July 26. Yours respectfully,

LELU GODFREY.

Big Cane, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I will write a letter to-day to the ADVOCATE. I have five brothers and no sister. We all go to Sunday-school twice a month. We are trying to finish our church and have Bishop Galloway to dedicate it. Papa went with me to the exhibition at Sunny Hill Academy. The pupils spoke well, and we enjoyed it very much. Last Sunday was Children's Day at our church. I love to read the letters in the ADVOCATE every week. EDITH OTT.

Take Your Hands out of Your Pockets, Young Man.

To begin with, it does not look well when a young man crooks his arms and thrusts his hands into his pockets, making a figure eight of himself and then stands up against the sunny side of the house, like a rooster in December.

How would the girls look all turned to eights and leaning against the wall? How would your mother look in that posture? Catch her doing it. You don't find her hands in her pockets. Your mother's hands! While you are loafing, they are the hands that sew, and make, and stew, and fry, and sweep and darn and nurse, but she does not sink them in her pockets and then loll against a building.

Are your hands cold? Warm them up at the end of the hoe handle and scythe. Swing the hammer; drive the plane; flourish the axe. There is untold caloric about a spade, a trowel, a wrench.

Besides, pocket heat is not profitable. Have you money there, though? Are your pockets the safes in which you have hidden treasure, and your hands the bolts that secure the safe door? Money may be there to-day, but it won't be a guest over to-morrow night. An idler's money is apt to leap out of his pocket. It is likely to go for a pipe, a cigar, a tobacco plug, a mug of ale. There is no money in pocket warming.

Take your hands out of your pockets, young man. You are losing time. Time is valuable. People feel it at the other end of the line when death is near and eternity is pressing them into such small quarters, for the work of this life craves hours, days, weeks, years. If those at this end of the line, if youth with its abundance of resources would only feel that time was precious! Time is a quarry. Every hour may be a nugget of gold. It is time in whose invaluable moments we build our bridges, spike the iron rails to the sleepers, launch our ships, dig our canals, run our factories. You might have planted twenty hills of potatoes while I have been talking to you, young man. Take your hands out of your pockets.—Christian Observer.

What Renie Was Afraid of.

It was a warm night, and Renie had sat up late for a little girl not two years old. She and her papa had been to Aunt Mary's, a few doors down the street.

When they came home papa walked ahead, and Renie trotted along behind him. All at once she looked down on the sidewalk, and began to back—back—back, as if trying to get away from something. Then she began to cry, "Take it away! take it away!" and Renie's papa made haste to her to see what was the matter.

Renie stood shaking with fright, and kept up her cry of "Take it away, papa! take it away!"

"That is Renie's shadow," said papa.

"Renie's chad-do," repeated the little girl, now in the safe shelter of her father's arms. "I don't like Renie's chad do!"

After awhile her fears were overcome, and she was willing to be put down on the sidewalk again; and there was the great black thing at her feet.

Renie kept backing and backing away from it until she came close up to the street-lamp, and then she could not see it. She was free from it at last.

Then papa said, "Look behind you, Renie." And Renie turned her head, and there was the great black monster trailing his length down the street.

The child screamed, "Renie's chad do! Renie's chado! Take me up, papa!" and then they both went home. The little girl was put to bed, and if she dreamed all night of "chad-dos" it would be no wonder.—Our Little Ones.

Household.

It is certainly a matter of great value to the household that the children shall be trained in the use of tools. In those unfortunate families where no one has a knack at putting up shelves and many other conveniences, there are but two alternatives: either the mother must do without them, or money must be paid to a carpenter. Usually the careful housewife concludes she can get along as she has done, and yet these little things are very desirable, for they mean labor-saving, neatness and comfort. Often they add to the furnishing of an apartment, as in the case of corner shelves which any handy man can put up and any woman of taste can adorn. Just such corners as were seen fifty years ago in our grandmothers' parlors are just the thing for to-day.

If our girls ever look as carefully into the qualifications of the proposing young man as the proposing servant does into those of her mistress, we shall have them asking not only, Are you industrious and good-tempered? but, Can you use tools and make yourself useful in a household emergency?

There is a new word creeping into our vocabulary, from the Swedish. It is Sloyd, and means the trained hand. In the Swedish schools where this manual instruction is given, the children, both boys and girls, are taught to make such things as shall be of use at home. Some experiments have been made in our own country in New York and in Boston, where in Mr. Eddy's Industrial School the pupil is "prepared for practical work should he have, at the West, perhaps, to raise his own house or at least to make his wife an ironing-table, or himself a book-case."

The happy dwellers in the country may have the most beautiful house decoration at little cost. Nothing at the florist's surpasses the graceful and luxuriant ferns of our woods. Take them up with a large ball of soil about their roots, put them in an old wire flower basket or an ox-muzzle lined with moss, and place them in a window where they will not have too much sun. Water them moderately. I saw one yesterday that was sent in the fall to a lover of the woods whose home is amid the close brick walls of the city. It showed no sign of homesickness in its exile, but lifted up its long, green plumes as if gladly conscious of a beneficent mission of cheer and strength. Without cost, except of a little strength, many a woman may have just such a thing of beauty to preach its silent sermons upon contentment and growth in unfavorable circumstances.

PEACH RICE PUDDING.—Good for breakfast or lunch. Pare and stone a quart of peaches and lay them in a pudding dish; sprinkle lightly with sugar, and cover with an equal quantity of cold boiled rice. Moisten the rice with rich milk or thin, sweet cream, and bake three-quarters of an hour. Serve with cream and sugar, or with a sauce made of 1 well-beaten egg, 1 cupful of sugar, 1 tablespoonful of fresh butter and ½ pint of boiled milk. Flavor with nutmeg or lemon. Hominy, farina, wheaten grits, or gluten may be substituted for the rice. Farina, cooked thoroughly in a double boiler with milk and a pinch of salt, and set in a mould until cold, is both attractive and excellent served with peaches for tea or dessert.

The former prevailing idea that the acme of hospitality was reached through the culinary department, and that to make men happy you must feed them abundantly is happily changing; the cordial and unaffected greeting of the host and hostess, their sincere desire to contribute to the happiness of their friends, making amends for any shortcomings in the decorations of the house or the brevity of the menu.

In 1860, Henry Goethe, of Beaufort, S. C., wrote Dr. Shallenberger:

"I regard your Antidote a specific for chills and fever. It was used on the Charleston & Savannah R. Road last summer and autumn in the most sickly region, and under the most trying circumstances. Out of one gang of negro operatives, fifty were stricken down with chills and fever, and every one recovered by the timely use of Shallenberger's Antidote. You possess the GREATEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD."

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it new life and vitality, promotes its growth, and restores its original color. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to lie but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schoitton, Hickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and faded, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delaware.

AUSTIN.—Death is always a shock; even when it gently removes those who have finished their work and are ripe for heaven. How much more painful and tragic seems the blow when the young are summoned in the height of their usefulness. This reflection was vividly borne in upon us by the death of Miss WILLIE AUSTIN, youngest daughter of Dr. William G. and Martha Porter Austin, in this city, on May 26. In the full bloom of young womanhood, filled with a sense of the joy and richness of life, loving and beloved, with heart and hands ardently busied in the performance of the duties and offices of family ministry, church work and friendships' claims, death met her and bore her away from the home, the church and the social circle she graced and brightened—from the latter, so dependent upon her, whose invalid steps she supported with tireless and matchless devotion. Truly the ways of Providence are mysterious! We know not from what impending adversity this dear young friend may have been removed by the foresight of the wise and tender Friend, whose kind precaution covers his lambs before the tempest spends its rage.

Willie Austin had a singularly affectionate and loyal nature, capable of friendships into which no considerations of worldliness could enter or could sway. The artlessness of the child had never left her, and the light of happiness that gilds childhood radiated her maturity. The pleasures of every-day life were readily transmuted into sources of joy in the sensible of her unworldly happy nature. Thus, while the ambitious, the seldom and the critical were striving to wring their hard fate from the world, the foreign, the almost unattainable happiness unseen was falling into her childlike heart from God's bosom silently." Early led by the example and instruction of her pious mother to trust her Savior, she became a member of the Methodist Church, which she loved with enthusiasm. The last act of her life—not incompleted when she passed away—was in the service of the little church at Ocean Springs, in the strengthening and support of which she was always glad to give her work and her talents. With Ocean Springs she was peculiarly identified. The summer visitor, the residents of her own class, and the lowly folk, fisherman and boatmen of that coast, will miss her sadly, and long will linger among them the precious recollections of her kindly, weighty activity and efficiency.

Those of us who have seen the beauty with which she flew to the mercy-seat in times of danger and trial, find it very easy to disengage her, in our thought, from the cold embrace of death. We behold her released from the dust that encumbered, fledged into a celestial—her innocent blue eyes opened upon the "sweet fields of Eden," her tender heart expanding in the upper air, her happy home pervaded by that ineffable presence which heightens happiness beyond expression by mortal speech—shall we not rather joyfully accept for her this blessed transition? Though we can not but sorrow that she no longer walks with us here, let us in the spirit of devout submission, learn to say, "Thy will be done!"

HER FRIEND.

LILLEY.—Mrs. MARGARET KILLEY, daughter of Thomas and Katie Wells, and wife of John Lilley, was born in Wayne county, Miss. Her father moved to Fannin, Rankin county, Miss., while she was a child, where she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when young, and remained a consistent member till she fell asleep in Jesus, which came to pass April 12, A. D. 1888; aged thirty years.

Thus another one of God's children has gone to join the already innumerable host of heaven, among whom are her husband and son Jack. The former crossed the flood in 1861, and the latter a short time before her. Sister Lilley was one of the first members of our church at Fannin, who, amid all the storms and tempests on the sea of life, never made shipwreck of her faith, and of a good conscience toward God; but kept, hoisted to the breeze of Divine grace, as the sail of her bark, the blood-stained banner of the cross, till she was sweetly glided by the waves into the haven of heavenly rest.

J. N. TUCKER.

SIMMONS.—Resolutions adopted by the Sallis Methodist Sabbath-school on the death of J. W. SIMMONS, Jr.:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove our beloved brother, a highly esteemed superintendent and youth to heaven, leaving a devoted wife and a large circle of friends to mourn his sad loss; And, whereas, We can truly say that none came better filling the place and exhibiting the true character of a just, noble and upright man in all the relations of life; And, whereas, We especially feel the loss, knowing that his equal as a superintendent can not be found among our number; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recognize in this sad event the hand of him who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, and that we submit uncomplainingly to his will.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the testimony that Bro. Simmons left of his unfaltering confidence in the Savior, and that by divine grace he was ready and willing to die.

Resolved, That we will strive to profit by his example, so that his consecration and readiness to meet the Savior may be found in each of us.

Resolved, That we hereby tender our sympathy to the bereaved wife, and would point her for comfort to Him who ruleth all things well, believing our loss is our brother's eternal gain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the wife of the deceased, and one be forwarded to the Kosciusko Messenger, Kosciusko Star and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

F. K. MITCHELL, for Com.

TAGGART.—Little JOSIE E. TAGGART, daughter of William S. and Sarah E. Taggart, was born May 22, 1882, and died June 4, 1888. Josie was a sweet child, and is at rest with him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." The Master has taken her, doubtless, from the evil to come, and never again will she suffer under the hand of disease. To the father, who almost idolized her, I would say: Josie is only sleeping in Jesus, and it is your blessed privilege to join her beyond the surgings of life's last river. "So may it be!" To Sister Taggart and the brothers and sisters of little Josie (all members of my charge, and striving for the better land) I would say: Trust Jesus. "Earth hath no sorrow that Heaven can not cure." "Like as a father pitieth his children, even so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." "His purpose will ripen fast." After a while God will send the angels for you, and in heaven's bright home you will join our loved one, never to part again. God grant that all may be there!

R. F. PHILLIPS.

LANGFORD.—WILLIAM, infant son of Bro. C. M. and Sister S. M. Langford, died in the arms of Jesus, June 6, 1888, aged nine months and twenty-six days. The little dear one suffered greatly during his illness, but bore it with the patience of a hero; neither crying or fretting during the entire time. Yes, little Willie is gone from the arms of his parents to the arms of One who has said, "Suffer the little ones to come unto me;" and, resting our faith upon these words, we can launch them out upon the dark and turbid waters of the river of death with faith in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob to bring again from the dead those so dear to our hearts. Sorrow! Yes, dear parents, you will, you must sorrow, but not as those who have no hope. Your darling is not lost, but gone on before. May you follow after?

S. A. COTTON.

FOY.—HARRIET AMENDAY FOY was born in Talbert county, Ga., November 15, 1834, and died near Beech Springs, Neshoba county, Miss., June 23, 1888, aged fifty-three years, nine months and nine days. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and lived a consistent member of the same until death. She expressed a willingness and readiness to die; therefore, we do not mourn as those who have no hope. May the Lord comfort her two sons and many relatives, and may they all meet in heaven!

Jennie June on Summer Requisites.

Nothing is more essential to comfort during the warm summer months than to lay in a little stock of really good soaps, perfumes and those refinements of the toilet which are as natural and indispensable to the modern woman as the air she breathes.

These luxuries and delights may be said to be her own creation, for her love and appreciation of them have stimulated their production, and brought to their manufacture the utmost skill of the chemist, the poetic sensitility of the botanist, and the exquisite taste of the artist.

No articles are more easily and commonly adulterated than toilet articles; but there is one house in this country engaged in the manufacture of toilet articles that has won a great name, at home and abroad, by sparing no cost or effort to bring their productions to the greatest possible excellence. In this branch of manufacture Americans can look with pride to COLGATE & CO., who make soaps and perfumes, not only equal in refinement and delicacy to the most famous of French preparations, but free from all harmful and deleterious matter.

COLGATE & CO.'s latest novelty is the putting up, in small one ounce bottles with metal distributing stoppers, of their Violet Toilet Water and their triple strength "55" Eau-de-Cologne, the finest and most permanent cologne in use.

Nothing better could have been thought of than these little bottles for personal use, so convenient for carriage and transfer, for refilling from a larger reservoir, as the little distributing bottle is not to be thrown away, but is for all time.

A few drops of these delightful perfumes, when used in the bath or bath, impart to a body of water the most penetrating and inspiring fragrance.

There are no other colognes or toilet waters that are so delicate and lasting, or that have so well caught the free spirit of the flowers.—Jenny June, in Godey's Ladies Book.

I find that when the saints are under trial and well-humbled, little sins raise great cries in the conscience; but in prosperity conscience is a pope, that gives dispensations and great latitude to our hearts.—Samuel Rutherford.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. The Perfected Phonograph.

In my article ten years ago, I enumerated among the uses to which the phonograph would be applied: 1. Letter writing and all kinds of dictation without the aid of a stenographer. 2. Phonographic books which would speak to blind people without effort on their part. 3. The teaching of elocution. 4. Reproduction of music. 5. The "Family Record"—a registry of sayings, reminiscences, etc., by members of a family, in their own voices, and of the last words of dying persons. 6. Music boxes and toys. 7. Clocks that should announce in articulate speech the time for going home, going to meals, etc. 8. The preservation of languages, by exact reproduction of the manner of pronouncing. 9. Educational purposes; such as preserving the explanations made by a teacher, so that the pupil can refer to them at any moment, and spelling or other lessons placed upon the phonograph for convenience in committing to memory. 10. Connection with the telephone, so as to make that invention an auxiliary in the transmission of permanent and invaluable records, instead of being the recipient of momentary and fleeting communications.

Every one of these uses the perfected phonograph is now ready to carry out. I may add that, though the facility with which it stores up and reproduces music of all sorts, or whistling and recitations, it can be employed to furnish constant amusement to invalids, or to social assemblies, at receptions, dinners, etc. Any one sitting in his room alone may order an assorted supply of wax cylinders inscribed with songs, poems, piano or violin music, short stories, anecdotes, or dialect pieces, and, by putting them on his phonograph, he can listen to them as originally sung or recited by authors, vocalists and actors, or elocutionists. The variety of entertainment he thus commands, at trifling expense and without moving from his chair, is practically unlimited. Music by a band, in fact whole operas, can be stored up on the cylinders, and the voice of Patti singing in England can thus be heard again on this side the ocean, or preserved for future generations.

For the present it has been decided to make all the phonographs of uniform size: so that a record can be put upon the machine in New York may be placed on another machine of the same pattern in China, and speak exactly as it was spoken to on this continent. Each wax blank will receive from 800 to 1,000 words; and of course several blanks may be used for one document, if needed. This uniform size and pattern make the thing perfectly practicable in offices which have business connections all over the globe. My private secretary to-day speaks all letters into a phonograph, from which they are taken off by a type-writer or ordinary long-hand writer, with an immense saving of time and trouble. Persons having a large correspondence can talk all their letters into the phonograph in a very short time, and leave them to be listened to and copied by an assistant, without the delay involved in stenography or the trouble of going over and correcting the copyist's work, which is almost inevitable under the conditions of dictation now prevailing. In fact, the phonograph will do, and does at this moment accomplish, the same thing in respect of conversation which instantaneous photography does for moving objects: that is, it will present whatever it records with a minute accuracy unattained by any other means.

It must be borne in mind that I am not talking now of things which may be made possible in the future. I did my predicting ten years ago; and the functions above mentioned are those which the present perfected phonograph is able to fulfill at this moment. To use the phonograph a little instruction and practice are needed, but much less than the type-writer requires and hardly more than the training needed for the operation of a sewing-machine.—Thomas A. Edison, in North American.

There is nothing in the universe that I fear but that I shall not know all my duty, or shall fail to do it.—Mary Lyon.

Why Are Not More Souls Saved at Camp Meetings?

BY REV. G. F. OLIVER.

Camp meetings of to day may be a social and financial success; but it is an unwelcome and, to many, a humiliating fact that they are too often a comparative failure in soul saving work.

The spirit of revival which prevails elsewhere must be felt at camp meetings if they are to prove successful. To the extent that responsibility is felt, attention concentrated, and faith and work secured, souls are awakened and saved. If anything dissipates responsibility, weakens desire for revival, divides attention, or enfeebles faith, failure follows. Apply these principles to any revival you have known, and see if there be any exceptions.

Study our modern camp meetings and inquire after their future prospects. Where rests the burden of responsibility? Who feels that there must be a revival? that sinners must be converted, backsliders reclaimed, and believers sanctified, edified, and refreshed? Who feels that Christ will be dishonored if such does not take place in proportion to the people assembled and the means expended? Who is so much concerned as to weep, fast, pray, and sacrifice to bring it about? Who will be saddened and humiliated if it does not occur?

A camp meeting is presumably a soul-saving enterprise. If it is to be merely a resting resort, and place of mental and social culture, let it be advertised as such, and its name be changed. If salvation is to be the object and theme, then let it "inspire our hearts and dwell upon our tongues."

There may be a few who feel a religious concern at all our camp meetings. But to succeed well they must be controlling agents; for God works through means by common-sense laws. Hence a revival at home is largely dependent on the pastor and official or leading members. If they do not get the burden and help from a revival current of thought and feeling, success is thwarted. It is just thus at camp meetings, a community of church-going saints and sinners. The committee of management is the pastor. The attendant ministers and leading cottagers or tent-holders compare with the official Board in their influence. There must be concentration and oneness of aim. A few leading workers can only triumph when they can control and enlist the sentiment of the whole ground. If one-third go in for salvation and two-thirds for recreation, attention is divided, faith enfeebled, and victory blasted. Hence the manifest need of a deeper intensity of spirit touching these summer revivals.

Modern camp meetings tend much toward aimless recreation. People are drawn to the grounds by local attractions affecting health, pleasure, and entertainment. Famous preachers, great sermons and sensational workers are often magnified so that the public, instead of seeing "no man save Jesus only," have their eyes turned to men only. Without censuring the advertising of such attractions to draw the people out, it is plain that such elements would prove a nightmare on any home revival, unless counteracted by the deepest humiliation and prayer, and supplemented by the most vigorous and restless efforts to lead the people to Christ.

The apparent necessity of making camp meetings a financial success must be matched by a corresponding intensity of spiritual life and energy. At home, in our campaigns, we bewail religious loafers and spectators as stumbling-blocks and weights on a meeting. They are no less so on a camp ground. Let us get out of the way or into the harness. If we do this a new camp meeting era will dawn on us. With leaders pledged to spiritual conquest; with their associate priests and Levites of the camp in substantial co-operation; with the spiritual aims of the meeting lifted into prominence; with less labored preaching and more fervent work on every hand, we may, by the aid of the Holy Ghost, expect a brilliant revival flame on every camp ground. When health, head-culture, incomes, business, and recreation are subordinated to spiritual progress and soul-saving, then we shall perpetuate our old-fashioned Methodist camp meeting. Otherwise we shall have left us little else than a protracted Methodist picnic. Which shall it be?—Exchange.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5.

WITH STANDARD SELECTIONS.

BY IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES M'GRANAHAN AND GEO. C. STEBBINS.

264 Hymns, a Complete Book to Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz.:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:

Music Edition, Board Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 5 00
" (Minion Type) Board Covers..... 10 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Gen. Harrison was formally notified of his nomination for the Presidency by the Republicans, on July 4.

Rt. Rev. Francis Janssens, Bishop of Natchez, has been named by the Pope as successor to Archbishop Leray, in the province of New Orleans.

Two members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and a companion were arrested on a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy train on July 5, charged with conspiring to destroy the railroad company's property. They had a considerable quantity of dynamite in their possession when arrested. The railroad officials discovered that several unsuccessful attempts had been made to wreck trains within the past few months, and that there was a plot to destroy the track, buildings and stations.

A bill to make the manufacture, preparation and sale of adulterated articles of food, drink or medicine, a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment, was introduced in the Senate, July 5.

The Democratic members of the Legislature of Louisiana are collecting evidence to repel the slanders of the Republicans in the United States Senate.

Walt Whitman, the poet, is confined to his bed and is rapidly becoming paralyzed.

A storm passed over western and central Minnesota and eastern Dakota, July 6. The wind reached the velocity of a hurricane.

Some 700 members of the four brotherhoods of locomotive engineers, firemen, brakemen and switchmen held a meeting at St. Cloud, Minn., July 8, for the purpose of talking steps looking to an amalgamation of those orders.

Suit was begun, July 7, in the Supreme Court of Kansas to eject about 200 settlers in Allen country, who have occupied their farms for the past twelve or fifteen years. The suit is brought by the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, and by speculators who have recently bought the lands from the railroad company. The controversy relates to about 30,000 acres.

The proposition to submit to the people of the United States a constitutional amendment to prohibit the liquor traffic in the United States was favorably reported by Senator Blair, July 9, from the Committee on Education.

Gen. Sheridan, who has been removed to Nonquitt, Mass., is recovering from his fatigue and regaining his appetite. His condition on the ninth instant was satisfactory.

FOREIGN.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council opened in London, July 4, Lord Cair presiding. Mr. Matthews, of Quebec, presented a statistical report showing that there were 4,000,000 communicants, equivalent to 20,000,000 adherents.

An expedition is being formed in Berlin for the relief of Emin Bay.

The United States warship Enterprise ran on the mole off Drawbeck, Norway, July 4, colliding with a great crash. The vessel is not leaking.

The Standard's correspondent at St. Petersburg says: It is reported that a marriage is being arranged between the Czarovitch and one of Emperor William's sisters.

Emperor William will meet Emperor Francis Joseph at Vienna in September. The meeting promises to be a brilliant affair.

The Czar has asked in an autograph letter to Emperor William that Prince Bismarck accompany the emperor to St. Petersburg, where M. De Giers will formally present a plan for a nominal Russian protectorate in Bulgaria. The proposal does not involve the occupation of the country by Russia.

The conservative newspapers of France denounce the seizure of the letter of the Court of Paris to the conservative mayors of France as an illegal act.

At the conferences on political economy in Copenhagen, July 7, a resolution was passed urging the establishment of a customs union between Denmark and Norway and Sweden, and requesting that the governments appoint a commission to arrange the details of the project.

The South Pole expedition, planned several years ago by Dr. Neumler, of the Marine Observatory at Hamburg, is likely to start in the spring. The imperial government has been asked to defray part of the expenses. Emperor William has made a favorable response and has referred the question of the expedition to a committee of the admiralty.

An Irish demonstration was held in Glasgow, July 7, to protest against the imprisonment of John Dillon. Michael Davitt, who was one of the speakers, challenged Attorney General Webster to try Mr. Parnell if the law officers of the crown believed him guilty of the grave crimes alleged against him.

In announcing the death of Mr. Mandeville, Mr. O'Brien declared in the House of Commons, July 9, that Mr. Mandeville has been murdered by brutal treatment in the Tullimore prison.

At the meeting of the two Emperors, the Czar on board the yacht Derkahave, escorted by two men-of-war, will meet the German squadron. The Emperor William will then go abroad the yacht and the two squadrons sail for Cronstadt, where the sovereigns will land with military honors.

The use of a single bottle of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer will show its efficacy in restoring the natural color of the hair and cleansing the scalp.

SUFFERING.

Thou, impatient, do but slip thy cross,
Thou wilt not find it in this world again,
Nor in another; here, and here alone
Given thee to suffer for God's sake.
In other worlds we shall more perfectly
Serve him, and love him, praise him, work for him.
Grow nearer and nearer him with all delight;
But then we shall not any more be called
To suffer, which is our appointment here.
Canst thou not suffer then one hour—or two?
If he should call thee from thy cross to-day,
Saying, It is finished!—that hard cross of thine
From which thou prayest for deliverance,
Thinkest thou not some pas ion of regret
Would overcome thee? Thou wouldst say, 'So soon?
Let me go back, and suffer yet awhile
More patiently—I have not yet praised God,"
And he might answer to thee—"Never more.
All pain is done with." Whensoe'er it comes,
That summons that we look for, it will seem
Soon, yea, too soon. Let us take heed in time
That God may now be glorified in us;
And while we suffer, let us set our souls
To suffer perfectly; since this alone,
The suffering, which is this world's special grace,
Of here be perfected and left behind.

—From Cæsar Bassi's Sermon.

To the "Schoolmaster."

BY REV. R. ABBEY.

In replying to your letter in this ADVOCATE, of June 28, on foreknowledge, I do not attempt to construct a theodicy. There have been failures enough at that already. God is, to us, incomprehensible. "Who hath known the mind of the Lord." "We can not find him out."

Yours is a common trouble—foreknowing without fore-controlling. I will not hope to reconcile this so that it will "satisfy the human mind," but will try to straighten one or two crooked places in it.

You run into the common mistake, allow me to say, of constructing your propositions without including the most fundamental and most vital factor in the scheme, viz: the divine ubiquity. Nothing must be predicated of the Almighty or his acts that does not fully and practically recognize his omnipresence, with all its logical consequences. And this will be found to upset all your time-tables with which popular arguments on foreknowledge always restrict and hamper the Almighty. I do not ask you to understand ubiquity, but I require you to believe it, and not ignore it in argument. Man is exclusively local; God is not.

You are right in denying the notion that there is no past or present with God, and in holding that "eternal now" is meaningless.

Now, let us look at the knowledge of an event by an omnipresent Being. Here lies the great question: What is the proper evidence that any given event occurred? The answer is, Somebody saw it. Then, if seen by an omnipresent beholder, may it not be seen at the time as to the place of the event, and after the time as to other places in distant space, and before the local time as to other distant points? A local beholder sees it from one point only; God sees it from many thousands.

Now, let us pause long enough to see that we are considering the inexplicable subject of time and space, a matter of which you and I know very little. Let us go slowly and carefully. God saw the event, but not from one point alone. He saw it from ten thousand different points.

The astronomers tell us of a very wide-extended universe of distant worlds. They tell us that our sun is close to us, hardly a hundred million miles distant. And stars, even the nearest beyond our solar system, are about six billions of miles distant from us. But lineal measure, if you could almost exhaust the power of numbers, gives us no adequate information; so astronomers resort to a shorter mode of computation, viz: time. So, what is the time-distance to the sun? And what is time-distance? Time-distance is the length of time between the fact and its visibility by a beholder. By this rule the sun is eight minutes from the earth, not counting fractions. The meaning of this is, that when you look at the sun, you see it not as it is, but as it was eight minutes before.

It is among your school lessons that the sun is plainly seen about eight minutes after sunset. And so at sun rising. It is clear above the horizon the same length of time before you can see it. This invisibility of visible things is, for want of a better name, called motion of light. But whether light is really transmitted from place to place like a substance, may be questioned This is, of course, familiar to you. A person a hundred million miles distant sees me writing, no' on this page, but on the one next before this. And so, if God saw Adam first from a point a hundred million miles distant, and from that point only, he must have been eight minutes old when first seen, provided, as some writers hold, that his birth or advent was sudden—that is, instantaneous.

This motion of light, if you choose to so call it, does not depend on the relative strength of vision in different beholders, but is supposed to be an innate principle inherent in objects distant from each other. So the earth is eight minutes distant from the sun. This is the relative distance of all objects from each other.

I have before me a small English book on some peculiar points and calculations in astronomy. These are fully endorsed by President Hill, late of Harvard University. The book contains the following calculations as to time measure of distances. The distance from earth to some of the fixed stars is as follows, viz: To the stars of the first magnitude, from three to twelve years; to those of the second magnitude, 20 years; third magnitude, 30 years; fourth, 45 years; fifth, 66 years; sixth, 96 years; seventh, 180 years, and so on until you reach the stars of the twelfth magnitude, which are 4,000 years distant. So that a person on one of these stars to-day, looking on the earth with perfect vision, would see everything as it was in the time of Abraham.

Now, let us, for convenience, construct a sort of social ubiquity. Instead of our omnipresent Being occupying all points in the universe; enlist a thousand correspondents and station them at as many points away in distant space. Some of them will be a hundred times as far away as the stars of the twelfth magnitude. They see everything, everywhere, and correspond with each other and with us here instantaneously.

Here we have a company of correspondents as numerous as anyone may choose, spread all over the universe, and we are using them as a sort of feeble illustration of the divine ubiquity. And we are now prepared to open correspondence with some of them. We will not trouble those within the radius of our solar system, although Uranus is eighteen hundred million miles, or more than two hours distant. Let us go a little away from home.

We will "call," as the telegraphers say, the man on a star of the sixth magnitude. He is ninety-six years distant, and we ask him when Millard Fillmore was born (our date is 1800). He replies: There is no such man, but there will be such a man born in eight years from now; and in your year 1848 he will be elected Vice-President of the United States, and in about two years after will become President on the death of Gen. Taylor, and will die in Baffalo in 1850.

How do you know all this since you say there is no such man? Do you see, then, as future? or contingent?

Answer—No: knowing is seeing, but my confidential correspondents, who are a little nearer you, see them and tell me.

And just so you may reason concerning any fact of past history. Any fact is past, or present, or future, as it is seen from the position of the person of whom the inquiry is made. These are mere astronomical calculations. And, then, if individual ubiquity is possible, would not the functions of all the thousands of distributed correspondents, as above supposed, merely center in one?

And then suppose we advance further and get some dispatches from the stars of the twelfth magnitude, or from others a hundred or a thousand times as far away. Ask him about the passage of the Israelites through the sea, the army of Egypt pursuing; and he will tell you that no such event has been seen from his station. Ask him if it will occur in the future, and whether he calls it future or not: he will inquire of those a few thousand million miles nearer to earth, and ascertain that it will happen in ten, a hundred, or a thousand years, according to the distance of the beholder from the fact. Or, what is the same thing, to them it did happen: they saw it. And so, a thousand different answers will come from as many different correspondents.

A person on a star of the twelfth magnitude might to-day see Joseph in the prison, or ruling the state. It can not be said that he, this one segment of ubiquity, has seen Paul at Athens, or Luther at Worms. His neighbors have, and in that way he has.

Now, he who supposes that these high numbers are so enormously extravagant as to be unreliable in practical thinking, needs to be told that he is using a child's reasoning. There is as much practical reality in a row of figures extending to a hundred, or a thousand, as to the nine or ten we usually handle. The difficulty is not with high numbers, but with our incapacity to handle them. If it takes eight minutes for the sun and its earthly beholder to make a contact, and eight thousand years to make contact with an object farther away, be it so. It is not the instrument of vision that does it, but the distance. And naming this necessity "motion of light" does not change the fact. Is motion a part of light, or a condition of using it? The fact is, that time is time here and there only when reckoned with and measured by space.

The supposition that there is, or might be somewhere in midway space, a clock keeping time for all places in the universe, is a mistake. Time adjusted to one place is not time for any other place. When you say, therefore, that such an event occurred before or after some other given event, your statement is not understood unless the point in space whence it is viewed be also understood.

Your trouble is the common one of locating God. It is the common blunder of fixing and confining God to this little planet, imagining it to be the great center and capitol of the universe, all else being mere attaches of its great principal. And even here you can not keep time with the severalty of events. The navigator, right here close to his seaside home, can not keep a calendar without arbitrarily changing it by making a day out of nothing, or by compelling two days to confine themselves within the limits of twenty-four hours. He can not tell you the day of the week, nor the month, nor his own age, without the assistance of a surveyor. And the surveyor will chop periodicity into lengths to suit his convenience, and jumble them together according to some so-called astronomical law. Events are not necessarily consecutive. Time is not time, unless you agree on the where of it. Time has its where as well as its when.

Being a schoolmaster, you are familiar with the efforts to get up a Peace Congress to compromise the time-space war, and agree upon an international date line—that is, a line through the ocean at the crossing of which dates change, being made later by one day by those who cross the line from east to west, and earlier by one day by those crossing from west to east. Otherwise the voyager frequently changes a day without knowing it, and without an intervening night.

If a steamer start eastward at noon and travel a little over a thousand miles an hour, she would meet the sun when exactly on the opposite side of the earth from the place of starting, and, continuing the journey, would again meet the sun at the place of starting; thus seeing three mondays within twenty-four hours, or gaining one day. So she must add one day to her log-book without an interval of time.

Time must be estimated in connection with space, and in no other way. Otherwise, as you intimate, birth and death would occur simultaneously. Indeed, if you reckon time as an independent entity, it is easily shown that they do occur at the same time as a general, but not as a local proposition. The all-seeing eye, viewing two events from millions of different points, of course, sees them at one time.

You may say an event is independent of the seeing of it. Then what evidence is there of it? Does God have to wait, after an event, for the image of it to be transmitted to him by means of a vehicle called light? Is not the seeing or perceiving of it by one omnipresent beholder the same as the united seeing by a thousand at different standpoints?

How far the above reasoning illustrates divine ubiquity, I do not pretend to know. My attempt is to compel you to recognize ubiquity as a great controlling fact in all your arguments respecting divine knowledge and divine action, and not confine the Almighty to this little dark corner of his great universe.

GOOD VIEW, Mississippi.

An Appeal.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

Not for myself, but for others do I plead. For them I plead, but do not beg. And this plea is directed to everyone of the 32,265 members, 170 local preachers and 125 traveling preachers in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference; and is in behalf of 11 superannuated preachers, 28 widows, and 25 or 30 children, for whose support the church is under the most solemn obligation.

These claimants are not paupers or beggars, although they all are poor, and some are very needy, and some actually suffer for the common necessaries of life. To contribute to their support is not to bestow alms or "charity," but is to pay a debt morally binding upon every member of the church, and each member is to pay according to his own ability—"as God hath prospered him."

(Read that last sentence over, so that you will not imagine, as some have done, that I advocate a per capita assessment, requiring the poor to pay as much as the rich. My former articles were simply to show how few paid anything to this worthy cause, and how morally certain it was that on many circuits and in many stations the rule has been to let a very few pay the assessment. One brother, who resided in the Brandon district last year, told me that he and ten other members paid the assessment for Conference claimants, although there are over five hundred members on that circuit! Let all contribute—everybody; and do not stop at the assessment, although I know, at least, one presiding elder who, in spite of all that has been said on the Conference floors and in the church papers, insists that the assessment is the greatest amount needed!)

Take those eleven superannuates, most of whom are beyond threescore and ten, and all of whom have given youth and manhood and age to the gospel ministry, "determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified;" who have lived and labored for the church, regardless of self, until worn with work and bowed with age and feebleness extreme; and tell me if the church—if every member—does not owe them a debt of gratitude not to be estimated in dollars, but to be best acknowledged in liberal contributions to the support of those retired veteran soldiers of the cross?

Take the twenty-eight widows, who followed their husbands from place to place, helping, cheering, comforting as only a true wife can do; suffering such privations and discomforts as only a preacher's wife ever knows; striving earnestly and faithfully to bring up their children aright and cast no reproach on the church, and then tell me if those noble women are "mere objects of charity," and not "mothers in Israel," to whose support their "children in the gospel" ought to be glad to contribute?

Take the children bequeathed to us by sainted parents, and say if they are mere recipients of the bounty of the church? Are they not bound to us by the holiest, tenderest ties? Dare we treat them as we would abandoned foundlings? Had not their fathers and mothers a right to expect that the church would protect these children and cheerfully supply their wants? And does not God demand it of us?

Hence I do not beg for these godly men and women, or for the children of the holy dead; but I do plead with our brethren in the ministry to be most earnest and faithful in their efforts to collect for this cause, and to our church members to be more liberal in contributing to the support of these claimants. It is not only our duty, but a blessed privilege. Remember the words of our Master: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Can we withhold anything from Jesus? Dare we give "grudgingly, or of necessity,"—to his veteran embassadors, or to their widows, or to their children? Let us not forget the other "instance," which is of such fearful import!

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, let us devote the month of October to special efforts, not only to collect our assessments, but to double the amount. Let us preach on the subject at every appointment, and furnish the people with all needful information, including figures and facts, the law of the church, and the Word of God on the subject. Our people are not blind followers of blind guides. "Turn on the light," and they will walk in it. "Double the Assessments" is our watchword. Let us treble the amount if we can; and from him who would give fourfold turn not away. Get from as many members as possible, and encourage each one to pay "as God hath prospered him."

Mississippi Methodist Schools.

BY REV. J. W. HONSOLL.

In the Arkansas Methodist, of July 7, we have from the pen of "Gilderoy," of the North Mississippi Conference, the following statement:

"In one thing the Methodists of Mississippi are behind, and that is in the facilities created and controlled by the church for the education of her sons. We have three or four good schools under the care of our church for our daughters, and, so far as I know, only one high school in the State for our boys. This should not be. We are educating our girls entirely out of sympathy with our boys."

Those not acquainted with the facts in the case would naturally suppose from this statement that the Methodists of Mississippi have furnished their sons no other means of getting an education than the one "high school" to which he refers. But what are the facts in the case?

The Mississippi is one of the Conferences which built, possesses and controls the Centenary College, in which many of our boys have been educated and are now filling prominent places in Church and State.

The North Mississippi Conference is one of the Conferences for which the Vanderbilt University, with its collegiate department, was built, and by them it is controlled, and in it we have a North Mississippi Conference college second to none in the church; and yet we are doing nothing for the education of our boys, because these schools do not stand on Mississippi soil. I know that we are not doing half as much as we should for Christian education, but I do think that these insinuations that we are doing so much less than other sections of our church for education does the Methodists of Mississippi an injustice. The North Mississippi Conference, as a body, will compare favorably with any other Conference of her age, and has sent as many valuable men to other Conferences.

In what are we failing? Not in facilities, for Vanderbilt and Centenary stand with open arms inviting us to come; but we fail to send them the pupils and give them the support which they should have. Why have we but one high school in the State, if but one? We have had more, but they have died for the want of support; died because it suits the majority of our Mississippi Methodists better to send their boys to our schools which happen to stand just over the State line. So they have done, and so they will continue to do. It is now the righteous ambition of thousands of our people to send their sons to the Vanderbilt, and they would do it if we had a college in the center of the State; but are we not doing anything for education, because all choose to send to the Vanderbilt or Centenary? If these are not worthy, let us say so, and discard them at once. Many of us, just as honest in our convictions as Bro. "Gilderoy," and as dear lovers of Mississippi, believe that the best we can do is to support the institutions we now have, instead of trying to build more, except district high schools, which may serve as feeders to these.

THE ETERNAL HOME.

No sickness there;
No weary wasting of the frame away;
No fearful shrinking from the midnight air;
No dread of summer's bright and fervid ray.

No hidden grief;
No wild and cheerless visions of despair;
No vain petition for a will relief;
No tearful eyes, no aching hearts are there.

Care has no home
Within the bosoms realms of ceaseless song;
Its billows break away and melt in foam,
Far from the bosoms of the holy throng.

The serpent's black wing
Is never spread all-want celestial skies;
It was flings his direst wiles to the voice of spring,
As some too tender flowers the buds and dies.

No night distils
Its chilling dews upon the tender frame;
Not moon is needed there—no light which fills
That land of glory from its Maker came.

No parted friends
O'er mournful recollections have to weep;
No bell of death enduring love attends
To watch the coming of a pulseless sleep.

No blighted flower,
Or withered bud, celestial gardens knows;
Nor scorching or swift-desolating shower
Scatters destruction like a ruthless foe.

No battle word
Startles the sacred host with fear or dread;
The song of peace creation's sounding board
Is sung wherever angel minstrels tread.

With faith our guide,
White-robed and innocent, to lead the way,
Why should we fear to plunge in death's tide
And find the ocean of eternal day?

Sunday-School Lesson.—July 29.

THE TABERNACLE.

Exodus xl. 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them.—Rev. xxi. 3.

TIME.—B. C. 1490 (or B. C. 1220), March or April; one year after leaving Egypt.

PLACE.—The plain of Er Rahah, at the foot of Mt. Sinai.

1, 2. The Lord spake unto Moses... On the first day of the first month—In Egypt God had selected the month Aoib, or Nisan, for "the beginning of months," the first in the sacred year. Set up the tabernacle—The tabernacle was a movable tent temple, suited to the requirements of an unsettled and wandering people. It was hence, necessarily, small—its length being only about forty-five feet, and its breadth fifteen, which was also its height. We have it upon the highest authority that everything was to be made "after the pattern" which God showed to Moses on the mount... Nothing here was intended as a mere ornament or ceremony: all was symbol and type. Everything had a spiritual meaning—the material of which the ark, the dresses of the priesthood, and all else was made; colors, measurements, numbers, vessels, dresses, services, and the priesthood itself—and all proclaimed the same spiritual truth, and pointed forward to the same spiritual reality, namely, God in Christ in the midst of his church. The epistle to the Hebrews is the Holy Ghost's commentary on the tabernacle and its services. It is the key to the Pentateuch and to a great part of the Old Testament. Everything about the tabernacle pointed to Jesus Christ.

3. Shall put therein the ark of the testimony—So called because it contained the "testimony"—the tables of the law; nothing besides, except the pot of manna and Aaron's rod. It was made of acacia wood. In size it was small, for it measured no more than three feet nine inches in length, and two feet three inches in width and depth. Without and within it was overlaid with the purest gold, a molding of the same material running along its upper edges, to receive a golden covering known as the mercy-seat. This, also, was made of beaten gold, with two cherubim, apparently of human form, rising, one from each end, with outspread wings, and bending inward the center. Rings of pure gold in its four corners, or "feet," received staves similarly plated, and these were never to be removed, lest in taking them out the priests might touch the sacred chest itself. The sacredness of the tabernacle culminated in this supreme symbol of the presence of God; for it was from between the cherubim, as the mystic supporters of his throne and its unsleeping guardians, that he made known his will to Moses, and accepted the atonement made once a year for the sins of the people, when the high-priest entered, at this long interval, to sprinkle the mercy-seat with the blood of the appointed propitiation. Cover the ark with the veil—The separating veil, or curtain, which screened from sight the holy of holies, and which was to be lifted only once a year by the high-priest, bearing the blood of the atonement. The veil was the symbol not only of Christ's humanity, but of separation between God and man, a separation terminated only by the blood of Christ.

4. Bring in the table—"The table of shew-bread," or, better, "bread of the Presence." Its location was on the north side of the holy place. It was made of acacia wood, plated with pure gold, with a cornice a handbreadth deep around the top. Its dimensions were three feet long, eighteen inches broad, and two feet three inches high. It was furnished with bread-plates, bowls for holding frankincense, "flagons" for wine used in drink-offering, cups and small shovels on which to carry the incense, etc. The shew-bread consisted of twelve cakes, which were set in two rows of six each, and renewed every Sabbath, the old being taken away and eaten by the priests. The absolute dependence of Israel, alike in its tribes and as a whole, and of man as a race, on God for daily bread could receive no more fitting acknowledgment; for the bread of the Presence remained before him perpetually. Bring in the candlestick—Or seven-branched candelabra, a central shaft and three curved, parallel branches on either side. It was made of pure gold, weighed a talent (125 pounds), and was provided with snuffers and snuff-dishes. Its location was in the south of the holy place, and its perpetual lamps were fed with pure olive oil. Its typical meaning, evidently, is the sevenfold or plenary perfection of the great spiritual Lightgiver the Holy Spirit, who perpetually illuminates the church. Light the lamps thereof—The lamps were lighted at the time of the evening oblation. They are directed to be kept burning perpetually; but, from their being lighted in the evening, this seems to mean only during the night.

5. Set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark—Made of acacia wood, furnished with staves and staples for carrying, and all overlaid with gold. It was eighteen inches square and three feet high; around the top was a golden molding, and four "horns," or projections, one at the corners. Its place was in the west, near the veil which hung before the holy of holies. On it incense was burned every morning and evening, and its horns were once a year touched with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement. Its fire was never allowed to go out. The symbolism, of course, is prayer—morning, evening and unceasing—and also the prayers of our great Advocate who "ever liveth to make intercession" for us. Put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle—The hanging appears to have been a beautifully embroidered curtain, which could be either drawn up or let down, and which was attached by golden "hooks" to five pillars, plated with gold, thus dividing the entrance into four equal spaces.

6. Set the altar of the burnt-offering before the door of the tabernacle—The great brazen (or copper) altar, outside the tabernacle proper, in the court before the "door," or curtain. It was four and a half feet high and seven and a half feet square; had "horns" at the corners, and was furnished with ring and staves, covered with brass, for transportation. Its interior was hollow, the button furnished with a grate, to allow the ashes to sift through. It was provided with flesh-hooks, fire-pans, etc. Its daily and special sacrifices, while teaching the great lesson that "without shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin," foreshadowed the one divinely-appointed oblation "The Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world." Nothing could be more plainly and impressively taught than the truth which stands out here, that without an atoning sacrifice there can be no access for guilty man into the presence of the holy God.

7. Set the laver—Made of "brass" (copper) out of the "brazen mirrors" contributed by the women, probably circular in form, and located near the altar of burnt-offering, either at one side, or between it and the tabernacle. It was used by the priests for ceremonial washings, and typified spiritual cleansing and purity.

8. Set up the court round about—The sacred tent was inclosed in an open space seventy-five feet broad and one hundred and fifty feet long. Of this, the eastern end, or entrance, was closed by hangings of costly workmanship, though not of the same exceptional fineness as that of the inner curtains; the pillars supporting them being plated with copper, except on the cornices, which were covered with gold. The connecting bars above, however, were gilded through ut, and the hangings themselves were held up by golden hooks, though the sockets of the pillars were only of copper. That the entrance was at the east, and thus faced the west, was in keeping with the usual practice of the age in sacred structures. On the other three sides, a series of pillars and bars, strengthened and ornamented with silver and copper, formed a framework from which hung a line of curtains, depending from silver rods. But their height was only seven and a half feet, while the tabernacle within was fifteen.

9-11. Take the anointing oil—With this all the sacred furniture and utensils, the tabernacle, and "all therein," the altar of burnt-offering, with its utensils, the laver and its base were to be "anointed," and thereby hallowed, or set apart as holy. An altar most holy—This anointing is to signify the hallowing or setting of them apart to a holy use. Everything here has been tainted with the presence of sin. The sinner must be sanctified in order to be received again into the fellowship of his Maker. The great agent of sanctification is the Holy Spirit. His purifying work is here typified by the anointing with oil.

12. Bring Aaron and his sons unto the door—To the open space in the court in front of the tabernacle, and near the entrance. It was here that the altar and the laver stood, and where all the ordinary sacrificial services were performed. Wash them with water—Moses caused them to bathe entirely, not merely to wash their hands and feet, as they were to do in their daily ministrations. This bathing, which the high-priest had also to go through on the day of atonement, was symbolical of the spiritual cleansing required of all, but especially of those who had to draw near to God to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

13. Put upon Aaron the holy garments... anoint him, and sanctify him—In the consecration of the Aaronic order, the inferior priests were only sprinkled with this anointing oil mixed with the blood of the sacrifice, but in the unction of the high-priest the oil was so copiously poured forth as to "run down upon the beard, and even to the skirts of his garments." It was like "the dew of Hermon," says the Psalmist, "descending upon the mountains of Zion." This was because it pointed to him who received the Spirit "without measure." He was "anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows;" that is, above those who possessed with him a fellowship or similarity of office, as types of himself. Minister unto me in the priest's office—Offer the morning and evening sacrifices with the accompanying meat-offering and drink-offering; keep the sacred fires and lamps burning, and instruct the people.

14, 15. Bring his sons, ... clothe them with coats—Their garments were the drawers or breeches, the coat, the girdle, and the bonnet. The first were like those of the high-priest. The girdles of the inferior priests were of the same form as that of the high-priest, but less costly and of less elegant texture. These four garments were of linen, such as were worn by the Egyptian priests as emblems of innocence. This dress, however, was only worn during the performance of duty; that of the people generally being apparently substituted at other times. No one was allowed to sleep in it, and when it was soiled it was never washed, but torn up to make wicks for the sacred lamps. Their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood—Each high-priest was inducted into his office by anointing, whence the high-priest came to be spoken of as "the anointed priest."

16. Thus did Moses; according to all that the Lord commanded—On his part, the same scrupulous fidelity was shown in conforming to the "pattern," in the disposition of the furniture, as had been displayed by the workmen in the erection of the edifice.

Shreveport District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Shreveport District Conference convened at Haughton, a little town on the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad, fifteen miles east of Shreveport, July 5, 1888; Rev. J. B. Cassity, P. E., presiding.

To say we had a delightful session would scarcely express it, for, in connection with the pleasure of meeting with and greeting, by a hearty shake of the hand, brethren beloved for the work's sake, there was a gathering from the various reports the fact that the experiences of others were similar to our own; and each received strength and encouragement to press forward in the work for the Master, with brightened anticipations of realizing at last the promise—"He that goeth forth in tears, sowing precious seed, will doubtless come again bringing his sheaves with him."

Foremost among those whom we were rejoiced to meet was the venerable old veteran, the tried and true, Rev. John Pipes, who, though in failing health, and now laid on the shelf, preached to us the opening sermon with the same old fire of former days; and we could but thank God for the influence of the lives and experiences of such men.

From some cause the attendance of lay delegates was small. Most of the preachers were on hand early, reporting, in the main, an advancement in the spiritual condition of their churches, good attendance on public worship, and a satisfactory progress of the Sabbath-school interests. All seemed to realize in a greater measure the importance of this branch of the work, and the fact that the future prosperity of our church depends greatly on the education of the minds and hearts of the children in the truths of the gospel of the blessed Savior. Another very gratifying feature in these reports was, that nearly all showed a deeper interest in the cause of missions, and nearly all reported collections either in cash or good subscriptions in excess of assessments.

The active and efficient district secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of Shreveport district, Miss Eliza Logan, of Mansfield, La., was present, and delivered an able address with her annual report, showing a decided advance all along the line of that department, which elicited some very animated and telling speeches from the brethren, evidently breaking down the barriers and raising, even to the height of enthusiasm, the interest in "woman's work for woman."

The reports on finances were rather meager on the whole, as only about twenty-five per cent. of salaries had been paid; yet all seemed hopeful, and thought final settlements would prove satisfactory.

Rev. A. D. McVoy, president of Mansfield Female College, was present; proved to be very affable; made a fine impression, and put in some good "licks" for his recently assumed charge.

Prof. McGimsey, of Centenary, was also present in the interest of that venerable institution, and impressed the Conference with his unselfish devotion to the cause, and the importance of educating young men where the social and moral influences were so good as at Jackson.

Our own ADVOCATE was also carefully looked after, and some of us, at least, hope to have it as a weekly visitor in every Methodist family on our works.

The entire work of the Conference was dispatched with care, yet pleasantly and, we trust, with great profit to all; and, after a rising vote of thanks to the good people of Haughton for their kind hospitality, and singing the centennial song, Conference adjourned to meet next year at the pleasant little town of Keuchi.

Our Recent Publications.

OUR NEW MAP

Is seven and a half by twelve inches in size, the face being printed in black ink, and showing all the States and Territories of the Union and about one-half of Mexico. On this face we show the location of churches helped by crosses, and of parsonages by dots, and give at the top the caption, and at the bottom an exact statement of the work done, and at the right-hand side a summary of the same in bold type and red ink. The general appearance is striking, and attracts the attention of grown people and children, who receive, by even a glance, an impression of what we are doing, and by only a little study can inform themselves accurately as to results already accomplished. On the reverse side there are four pages, prepared with much labor and care, of letter-press matter, in small, but clear type, giving a condensed history of the Board and a succinct account of its operations, from which may be gathered about all the public cares to know.

Of these maps we have printed thirty thousand copies, and have the plates ready to print an indefinite number more if they can be used to advantage.

LOAN FUND LEAFLETS.

We have had fifty thousand each of two kinds of these printed. They define our loan fund scheme and demonstrate its practicability by an exhibit of what we have already done, and suggest plans for the multiplication and increase of our named loan funds, which have only to be generally adapted by the Conferences in order to put at our disposal for use before the next General Conference a quarter of a million of dollars for this department of our work.

Let the preachers and the church aid us in the distribution of these publications by ordering them in lots large and small, and scattering them broadcast among the people. We charge nothing for maps or leaflets, but must ask our friends in ordering them to send in stamps, to pay for wrapping and postage, the cost of same as follows:

For 100 maps	16 cents.
For 100 maps and 200 leaflets	20 cents.
For 50 maps	10 cents.
For 50 maps and 100 leaflets	12 cents.
For 25 maps	6 cents.
For 25 maps and 50 leaflets	8 cents.
For 20 maps	4 cents.
For 20 maps and 40 leaflets	6 cents.
For 10 maps	3 cents.
For 10 maps and 20 leaflets	5 cents.

OUR MAP.

Dear Children: Have you seen our church extension map of the United States? If you have not, you must get it. Write to your Conference secretary for it if she does not send it to you with the leaflets and letters sent to her for distribution. If you do not know who your Conference secretary is, write to me, and I will send it to you. I want you to see it. This map has on it a great many red crosses showing where we have built churches, and some red dots showing where the parsonages are which you helped to build last year. I want you to count these red dots, that you may see how many there are and in what States and Territories, that you may see exactly what you have done. I hope it will not be long before we have as many red dots on the map as there are red crosses. Remember wherever a red cross is added to the map there will be another place where the gospel is preached to sinners, and wherever there is a red dot the good man who preaches to sinners has a comfortable home. We can not all preach, but we can help those who do. We want the gospel preached everywhere, for Jesus said we must preach it to every creature. All the red crosses you see on the map were added in the last six years. We must try to have as many dots as crosses, and I think we will before long if you continue to do as well as last year. Whenever I remember that all those red crosses and dots are God's houses, and that there is some one at each place to tell the people of God and win souls from Satan, I wish the whole map was covered with them, and that this whole country belonged to our God, and Satan had no power in it. But, alas! that is not so yet. Satan has a great deal of power. We must help God all we can.

Let me tell you how you helped him last year. There were two places where our preachers were sent to persuade people to love God, but they had no houses to live in. They could not stay in the streets or in the fields. They did not know what to do. They did not want to go away and not preach to the people as God had sent them to do. But you see God had put it into your heart to raise some money for that purpose, and the money was ready for them. Some of it was sent to each one. They got houses to live in, and said where God sent them to save those people from the power of Satan. But for your help they could not have done it. They would have been compelled to go away and leave those people in their sins. You helped them to stay, and God will know you helped to save those souls—that you helped to extend his kingdom over that place. Now you see how it is when we add red crosses and red dots to that map we are helping to extend the kingdom of God. Do you not wish, as I do, that the whole map was covered with them? Then will you not help all you can? If you have not a society in your place, will you not urge some one to organize you, report to your Conference secretary, and go to work? And make haste; for souls are dying every day; Satan is gaining power, and your God is calling on you, if you love him, to help to save dying souls, and destroy the power of Satan. Those of you who have a good working society will, I hope, persevere when you see how much good you are doing, and God will bless you for it.

Progressive Sin.

Nothing is more evident than that sin is progressive in its nature. The moderate drinker becomes a bloated drunkard. The boy, by using bad words, grows gradually into a profane swearer. All of these are living evidences of the Bible doctrine of "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse." Every sinful life has a commencement in some trivial offense against God's law, and develops in some rapidly increasing ratio, until, at last, that life which was so pure, has become so stained and polluted that it is not meet for the Master's use. Peter, in his denial of Christ, began by saying: "I know not what thou sayest." This was his first step. The second was a little worse: "He denied with an oath;" and the third was worse still: "He began to curse and to swear." In the short space of an hour or two he progressed from the simple statement, "I know not what thou sayest," to outright profanity. What the ratio of increase might have been, I will not undertake to say; but it was evidently very great: greater than any arithmetical or geometrical ratio. Let everyone be careful to avoid this rapidly increasing ratio. We talk of dangers and snares, but here is the danger of dangers. What a vast difference between the first little sins of the boy and the great crimes of the man, angelic mathematicians might inform us, but men can not.

I want to state some of the steps in a life of sin, and give one or more passages of Scripture with each. First, a darkened understanding: "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind." (Romans i, 28.) Second, conscience seared: "Speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their consciences seared with a hot iron." (1 Timothy iv, 2.) Third, will enslaved: "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil." (Jeremiah xiii, 23.) "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." (II Timothy iii, 13.) When a sinner's understanding is darkened, his conscience seared, and his will enslaved, he will be eternally doomed unless he embraces salvation through Jesus Christ, the sinner's friend. If doomed, these Scriptures are applicable to his condition. "Salvation is far from the wicked." (Psalm cxix, 155.) "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." (Jeremiah viii, 20.) "And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." (Matthew vii, 20.) "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." (I Corinthians vi, 9, 10.) Here are the great sins which are the direct results of some smaller ones being practiced upon the principle of progression, with an unknown ratio, either of which will exclude a person from heaven. Sin is as much progressive in knowledge or holiness; therefore, let the sinner be careful how he violates God's laws, because sin, "when it is finished, bringeth forth death," eternal death.

From the Work.

AMITE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Amite circuit being so large that one preacher could not do justice to the charge, our beloved presiding elder, J. A. Ellis, appointed an assistant, and I took charge of the northern part of the work, lying on the Homochitto river. The first Sunday in February and a more thankful people I have never met. They received me with open arms, and have been very liberal to me, financially. I lost my horse, and they helped me to buy one. I got the horse, and am going from house to house praying and begging the people to be reconciled to God. These people are natural born prayers. They are not well educated, but you would be surprised to hear the language they use in their prayers, and they have a power with God. Many that can't read make powerful and soul-stirring prayers. Some people do not wait for the preacher to do all the work, they are co-operating with me in the work.

We have had some conversions on the work; twenty accessions to the church; twelve subscribers to the ADVOCATE; collected thirty-six dollars for the poor in our community; collected week of self-denial, seven dollars and seventy-five cents; have sold twenty-one dollars' worth of books from our Publishing House; five dollars' worth of Sunday-school literature; have taken the regular assessments to some extent, and think I will be able to make a full report to Conference.

We are building two new churches on this part of the work—one at Mt. Vernon, and one at Cedar Grove. I have only three regular appointments. There are settlements near that have no preaching, and are asking for it. I am going to extend my labors from now on. My work is thirty miles distant from me.

Our second Quarterly Conference convened at Mt. Vernon on the third Saturday and Sunday in June. Reports and collections good, attendance good, preaching excellent. Our presiding elder made a good impression on this people.

Bro. J. W. Brown is fighting valiantly for the cause of God. He has just closed a meeting at Gloster with good results.

Mr. Editor, I want to see, before the close of this year, every one of the church members do any work converted and consecrated to God and his service. I thank God for his providence that has led me to this work. I will work some more for you paper. Pray for us, that my people may be more consecrated to the service of God, and that I may be more useful in the ministry. Yours in Christ.

M. L. WHITE,

MERIDIAN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a grand meeting at Chunkey Station, Meridian circuit. Fourteen joined the church—four by letter and ten by experience. The church was greatly revived. It had been spiritually dead for some years, but there was a great awakening, and the brethren did not wait until night to let the world know that they loved God. Crops and all other occupations seemed to be forgotten. Notwithstanding the push of crops, we had fine congregations day and night. The great work of our Lord is moving on. The wheels of Zion are in motion, and the kingdom coming; the victory must be won. Pray for us.

Your brother in Christ.

Penny-Wise and Pound-Foolish.

A man that would waste a dollar in order to save a nickel would not be considered a very good financier. Dr. Haygood thinks something of that sort is being on in Georgia. Hear him: "Georgia in her use of public money, in carrying on public business, has not shown an enlightened and broad-minded public policy, but a very narrow and mean money-saving policy. Economy in the public service is a very great virtue, but parsimony is a very great folly. There is no waste of public money like that which comes of not using enough money to get the peoples' business efficiently done. A great State like Georgia, that, in the year 1888, pays its governor $3.000 a year, when he ought to spend that much in hospitality as the representative of the people; that pays its supreme court judges $3,000 per annum—the decisions of our highest court not being of authority outside our borders; that pays its circuit judges $2,500, requiring them to pay their traveling expenses, when such salary can not, long at a time, command men fittest for this most important office; that pays prosecuting attorneys so little that, in most cases, the office is only sought by ambitious boys as a stepping-stone to something better; that leases its convicts to private citizens, not because it is best for the convicts or the people, but because it is cheap; that compels physicians to give expert testimony and receives so much as to pay for their time; that starves its public schools into pitiable inefficiency—such a State is in a very bad way as to its public affairs and very badly governed by the people. Such a State very naturally puts up a shoddy sheet-iron dome on its million dollar Capitol. On the dome that we have followed Georgia can not so much as hold down; let her surrender, before it is torn from her, her title of 'Empire State of the South.' Our present Constitution in relation to the use of money in carrying on the public work is the result of a most extraordinary conjunction of political stars. It is the resultant of ignorance that mistook parsimony for economy and an aristocratic temper and feudal sentiment that only rich men should hold office."

Do we not see something like that in our own State?

Ecclesiastical Camp Followers.

The armies of all civilized nations have distinct bands of men, and sometimes, women, known as "camp followers." They march when the armies march—do not to fight; they camp when the armies camp—but not to discharge the duties of the contented soldier. Actuated by no patriotism, inspired by no love of glory, they follow as the jackal follows the lion, for the sake of the pickings alone. If they can be called soldiers at all, they are soldiers "for revenue only." They are the curse of every army, the bane of every camp, the disgrace and the despair of every general. If they were vampires only, sucking the life blood out of the cause they profess to champion, it would be bad enough. If they were simply nuisances, they could be better endured. But often, by their panic, panic, and heedless flight at the approach of danger, they demoralize the bravest soldiers, and bring disaster to the boldest veterans. Like dead weights on the wheels, they draw back and retard the army chariot, as it rolls uphill to victory, and fearfully increase its momentum when it runs down hill in defeat. "Down with all camp followers!" says every gallant general, every valiant soldier.

But are not the "armies of the living God" subject to the same baneful following? We surely think so. There are in every church men and women, who profess to love Jesus Christ, whose connection with the instrumental host of God's elect" is that of "camp followers" only. They have no stomach for the great fight against sin and Satan. They like the social position and respectability a church connection gives them. They contrive, albeit sometimes with wry faces, to do some few of the decencies of religion, but when it comes to earnest fighting for the truth, and enduring hardness as good soldiers of the cross, they are conspicuously absent. Their gifts never seem to run in any practical channel. They can sing loud, and sometimes shout loud when a "refreshing from the presence of the Lord" is giving his people the victory, but this would be better left undone, as their unwonted zeal and enthusiasm but serves to emphasize their general course of bad living; and the zeal and enthusiasm of all right living Christians goes to the nadir as theirs rises to the zenith, while the ungodly look on with scorn and contempt, at what they know to be the shoutings of a mere set of worthless "camp followers." Both parties know that when the real "tug of war" comes, and the burdensome duties of Christianity are to be borne, Christ has nothing to hope, and the devil nothing to fear, from such people. Both know that when the excitement of the "revival" is past, such people will not have religion enough left even to carry them steadily to the house of God, much less to make them earnest in trying to win souls to Christ by personal effort, or to make them liberal in the use of their means for the spread of the gospel through the nations. However much they may deceive themselves, or the devil may deceive them, everybody but themselves know they are not soldiers, but "camp followers" only.

The ecclesiastical "camp followers" are usually religious "tramps" as well. Regardless of their covenant obligations to God, and their fellow church members, they leave their pastor to preach to their empty pews, while they straggle at their own sweet will, from church to church, in regular "camp follower" style. A new preacher, or a recent bride, or a desire to see some one presumably to be present, or new clothes to be shown off to another congregation, and off they go from the place where they have pledged God and man to be found in worship. Thus, almost every Sunday it is "Tramp! tramp! the boys are marching," away from duty, to the grief of their brethren and to the injury of the cause of Christ. But what cares the "ecclesiastical camp follower?"—he'll be "on deck" at the next "revival," with louder songs and shouts than ever. Reader, are you a true "soldier of the cross," or a mere "ecclesiastical camp follower?"—Christian Index.

The Womanly Element in the Gospels.

Woman occupies a conspicuous place in the primitive church. This will be evident if we simply mention some of the feminine names which appear in the New Testament records: Anna, Apphia, Chloe, Claudia, Damaris, Dorcas, Elizabeth, Eunice, Euodia, Joanna, Julia, Lois, Lydia, Martha, Mary of Bethany, Mary of Magdala, Mary of Nazareth, Mary of Rome, Mary the mother of Mark, Mary the wife of Cleopas, Persis, Phœbe, Priscilla, Rhoda, Salome, Susanna Syntiche, Tryphena, Tryphosa, etc. Moreover, there are many women on whom the Lord bestowed signal favors, but whose names have not come down to us: for example, Peter's mother-in-law, the widow of Nain, the daughter of Jairus, the woman with the issue of blood, the Canaanite mother and daughter, the woman with the eighteen years' infirmity. Once more, there are the many anonymous women who tried, in one way or another, to serve the Lord Jesus: for example, the woman at Jacob's well, the penitent adorer in Simon's house, the widow with her two mites, Pilate's wife, the wailing women on their way to Calvary, the praying women of the upper chamber, etc. Indeed, it may be doubted whether any secular history so small as the four gospels was ever written in which the womanly element so largely prevails as in the life of Jesus the Christ.

Nor is this surprising. For, first, woman's distinctive temperament makes her, if one may so say, a natural believer in Jesus Christ. He is emphatically "the seed of the woman."

"Not she with traitorous kiss her Savior stung,
Not she denied him with unholy tongue;
She, while apostles shrank, could danger brave,
Last at his cross, and earliest at his grave."

Secondly, woman owes an incalculable debt to Jesus Christ. His birth marks the turning point in woman's history. Hitherto, as in heathen countries to this day, she had been the victim of man's caprice, cruelty, lust, scorn and tyranny. Even the Hebrews themselves, although taught from the beginning to reverence women, had been wont to regard her as a man's handmaid rather than his equal; in fact, a Jewish morning prayer prescribes that a man shall bless God for three things, namely, that he was not born a Gentile, a slave, or a woman. But when the fullness of the time came, and God sent forth his Son to be born of a woman, as well as under the law, then was woman herself emancipated and restored to her paradisal equality with man. Henceforth, at least in the realm of the spiritual life, there was to be neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female; for all are one in Christ Jesus. It has been so ever since; wherever Jesus Christ has been best known, there woman has been most honored. Woman owes everything to the Son of Mary.

Aggressive Defense.

"How to Beat the French," was the title of a lecture delivered in 1860, by Prince Frederick Charles, then a young soldier with abundant enthusiasm, but no fame. His words soon found their way into print. In the essay and the discussions which it elicited, principles were laid down which have since revolutionized the whole Prussian military service. The capitulation of France and the treaty, affected, gave singular confirmation to the remarkable forecast and sagacity of the young prince. One of the chief points—borrowed, by the way, confessedly from the French tactics—was this: "Never defend passively, but offensively."

It is right to learn from an enemy. The church ought to take some lessons from the world. The church militant will dare to be grandly aggressive before her conquests shall be worthy of her Leader. The institution of the church does not need change, for it is divine, permanent and competent. But that there is need in many of our churches, at least, of a revolutionary change in the working of the organization is but too evident.

Men say religion must be carried into business. True; but that will be an unpicious day when the sagacity and push which characterize "business" shall be carried into religion. The worst policy is that of inactivity. The celebrated Fabian policy of delay, and "how not to do it," wore out the army of Hannibal; but the resources of Satan are never exhausted in that way. The poorest defense for churches against the ever-pressing encroachments of the spirit of the world, is for them, Micawber-like, to sit still and wait. The best way to fight the dark, is to strike a light; and there is no other way to do it. Lamentations and forebodings do not dissipate the gloom of any night; but one may see the beams of the morning, infinitely aggressive, quickly extinguish it. Nor is emptiness any bulwark of defense—any basis for success. Human hearts can not remain empty and unpossessed. To attempt to remain "empty, swept and garnished," is only to invite the spirit of evil to return, re-enforced.

God helps those who help themselves; and victory goes with those who have the courage of their convictions. Dash and resolute onset are safer than timidity.

First, the theory, then the arms of the German prince have shown "how to beat the French." Now, where are the churches instinct with faith enough in their cause, and the courage of faith, thoroughly organized for work, bold, aggressive, to show how to win the day for Christ? How the divine watchwords come ringing down the ages: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward;" "Be strong and of good courage;" "Go up and possess the land."—Advance

Briefs.

Our Church Extension Board is doing good work for the Master. From April 1, 1887, to March 31, 1888, help was given to 295 churches and 23 parsonages. The General Board aided 50 churches and 6 parsonages. The Conference Boards helped 245 churches and 17 parsonages. The cash capital of all the loan funds in the hands of the General Board amounts to $12,290. Grants were made to 80 churches and 16 parsonages: in donations, $31,500; loans, $16,200; contingent, $1,900. Total, $49,600. The Board received 222 applications for aid, but could only give aid to 96. The amount received from collections was $22,882—an increase of $1,160 over last year. Receipts on loan funds amounted to $5,638. The more this special part of our work is brought before our people, the more they will be disposed to give for its extension. We trust all our pastors will give it special attention in all our congregations, and that the close of this year will bring up larger additions to this fund.

From Interior:

The General Conference on Foreign Missions, which met in Exeter Hall, London, June 9-19, proved to be a larger and more thoroughly representative assembly than even its projectors expected. The Conference was in the nature of a centenary celebration of the beginning of the foreign mission movement in England, and it was thought that about an even hundred societies would be represented. Great was the joy of all concerned when it was found that 126 societies had sent delegates. There were 1,060 delegates in attendance from the 52 foreign missionary societies of Great Britain and Ireland, 150 from the 51 societies in the United States, 27 from the 6 societies in Canada, and 22 from the 13 societies of Europe. If all the delegates can return to their homes with full cargoes of the enthusiasm and of the zeal according to knowledge, which did so much abound at the Conference, it will not be too much to hope that a new epoch in foreign mission work will have its rise this year.

Various efforts have been made in the Legislature to change, modify and repeal the Sunday Law, all of which have failed. Mayor Shakespeare, of this city, it seems, has been waiting to see what would be done. Seeing that the law is to remain on the statute book as it was, the mayor has issued the following order to the chief of police:

The Legislature having failed to pass or amend the Sunday Law, the mayor directs that it be hereafter rigidly enforced in all its provisions.

You will take steps to notify those concerned that from and after Sunday, July 15, they will be proceeded against in the criminal courts.

You will inform your officers that they will be held to a strict accountability in this matter, and that failure to report any violations of the law on their beats will subject them to dismissal from the force.

Every Monday you will furnish the district attorney with a consolidated tabulated report of offenders against the law, which report shall give the names, place of business, offense committed, time of same, and names of witnesses and where they can be found when wanted.

Any information desired by the district attorney will be furnished him direct upon his application, without the delay of sending it through this office.

Let your officers understand that they are not to make their affidavits before the recorders.

It is intended to try these cases directly before the judges of the criminal courts, and under the direction of the district attorney.

What Infidelity Would Do.

There are bad men who are bold in their badness, proclaiming openly, "There is no God!" There are others, not so bold, who are trying to train their minds to a belief which overturns the religious consciousness that has been the heart of our race for six thousand years! Men are inventing some most curious arguments and putting them together in a most skillful manner, in order to prove that the Divine Being has never yet emerged from the unexplored regions of immensity and taken a place upon the plane of human history. They willingly endeavor to exclude God from participation in the affairs of earth. The supernatural, which is but the manifestation of God in the world, and of man as a spiritual being in his relations to God, is denied by many who pretend to be philosophers and scientists, and entirely explained away by some who pretend to be theologians and divines. This is a leaven of the most awful wickedness that was ever manufactured by Satan: and it is diffusing a principle of death from which arises a stench of moral putrefaction that is contributing to spread the direful plague. This is not merely a dishonor flaunted in the face of the Supreme Being, but it is a blow whose aim is to destroy the foundations of all the best hopes of the race. "And if the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

If this leaven spreads until the belief becomes general, that God has but little to do with the world and its affairs, it will break away all the barriers to wickedness and open everywhere the flood-gates to licentiousness and corruption. It will not only abrogate the law of God, but every civil and criminal law of man will be rendered a "dead letter." Back of every statute of the civil code and of the criminal code of the State stands the impartial and eternal Judge, and in his hands are the retributive sanctions of all law. That fact is at the foundation of society, and all our jurisprudence is built upon it. It has been a part of the consciousness of the race during all the past. Eliminate that one fact from the consciousness of mankind, remove it from the foundations of our jurisprudence and civil society, and the whole fabric will totter and fall into ruins. And yet there are men, who have a large part of the public ear and who are listened to with attention, who are endeavoring to do this very thing. They teach doctrines which, if received and lived by, will uproot and destroy everything worth having. Some of these people pretend to think kindly of the church, and go so far as to say that the church is a pretty good institution. They talk and write patronizingly of religion, seeing that men must have something of that sort. But while by this they draw away the attention of some simple folk, like a left-handed Joab, they are stabbing the church and religion to the vitals! Like Judas, they kiss religion on the cheek, and by that hypocritical act purposely betray her into the hands of her enemies. A world without God! A church despoiled its divine glory! A religion stripped of its supernatural elements! What does it all mean? It means man leveled down to the beasts! It means earth transformed into pandemonium! God's presence withdrawn is hell! And those who would bring about such a state of affairs are not merely the enemies of God; they are the enemies of society.

According to the Year Book of the Disciples of Christ, for 1888, they have 6,437 churches, 620,000 communicants, 4,500 Sunday-schools, with a membership of 318,000, and a teaching force of 33,340; number of preachers, 3,263. The value of church property is $10,368,361

Seashore Camp Meeting.

The great annual convocation has assembled: done its work for the year, and dispersed. The people came up from the east and west, from the north and south, in large crowds. Alabama and Mississippi and Louisiana furnished the greater number, but there were many from other sections. The number of people in attendance this season has been equal to, if it has not exceeded, the number of any previous year.

The grounds have been somewhat improved, and the trustees have built a commodious and comfortable depot, which has added much to the looks as well as the comfort of the place. The tents were all occupied, and all seemed to be full of inmates. The number of preachers in attendance was very large, notwithstanding the prediction that not many would go because of the arrangement by which they were required to pay their own expenses while on the ground. The fact is, this arrangement was made at the suggestion of the preachers, and there were many there who would not have been there under any other arrangement. The preachers are not unwilling to pay their way anywhere.

By those who have been in attendance year after year we are informed that the preaching this season was as good as it has ever been. What we heard of it was evangelical, practical, appropriate and pointed, and had often a marked effect upon the audience, the altar at times being crowded with penitent seekers. How many have been converted we have no means of determining, and the good results of the meeting can not be summed up. The influences put in motion, like a wave created on the water, will roll out in all directions, and be a power for good in the days to come. The blessings which have gone out from this Seashore Camp Meeting all over this Southwest country can never be told. For years it has been the supply depot of spiritual things for the whole country. The people of God, preachers and people, wearied and worn in the service of the Master, have come up yearly to this place and had their strength renewed for future service, and sinners by hundreds have here put off the old nature and put on the new and gone out to scatter influences for good. This camp meeting is destined to greater achievements in the future, and the church of the future will be largely influenced in every direction by the power that is originated here!

Our Insane.

We have received from Dr. J. W. Jones, superintendent, a copy of the biennial report of the Board of Administrators of the Insane Asylum of the State of Louisiana to the governor for the years 1886-1888. This is an interesting document concerning a most interesting class of people. To the thoughtful the unfortunate are always interesting; and as there is no more unfortunate ones than those who have lost their reason, there can be no class of people that ought to interest us more, and for whom we should show more sympathy. Dr. Jones' report shows some things that we think ought not to be. When he made his report two years ago, there were 600 inmates; and yet he says there are accommodations for only 450. Since he made that report 118 more have been received. That shows a crowding of these people that ought not to be. Again, he says the buildings are not insured, and there is "great need for some system of extinguishing fires." There is no system of heating, and comfort for the unfortunate inmates during winter can not be had. These things ought surely to be remedied. For the present exigencies of the case, and for much-needed improvement in sewerage, heating, fire-proof engine-house and laundry and brick dining-room, the Board of Administrators asks the Legislature for a yearly appropriation of $137,500.

Some statistics from the report may be of interest to our readers: On April 1, 1886, there were 600 inmates—284 males and 316 females. Received since then to April 1, 1888: males, 75, and females, 43—making 118; died since last report, 76 males and 106 females—making 182; discharged since last report, 52 males and 32 females; discharged recovered, 33 males and 19 females; discharged improved, 19 males and 13 females; number inmates April 1, 1888, males, 231, females, 221; total, 452. In the report no distinction as to color is made. Of the 118 received in the last two years 37 are between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five, 12 of them being females. Ages not stated, 59, of whom 19 are females. Of the 118 received 67 are from our State, and 46 of those 67 are from the parish of Orleans. The married people are 41; the single, 56; widows, 8; widowers, 5; not stated, 7. In regard to the causes of insanity 85 are not stated: religious excitement, 8; heredity, alcohol and old age, 3 each; grief, loss of property, domestic trouble and overwork, 2 each. In regard to deaths the largest number (29) died from dysentery; the next largest (18) from typhoid fever; the next (14) each from paralysis and chronic mania, and 13 from consumption. Of occupations the largest number (29) comes from the laboring class; the next largest (9) from the farmers; the next (6) from the housekeepers; the next (4) from the clerks. We have been much interested in the study of these figures, and our readers will, we doubt not, be as much interested in them as we have been. Our thanks are hereby tendered to Dr. Jones for the copy of the report, which has enabled us to pass a hot summer evening in an interesting and profitable study.

To Bunkie via Alexandria.

Mr. Editor: A late trip into the interior of the State, where I saw and heard much that will be of interest to your readers, and which should receive mention for other reasons, is my excuse for this brief correspondence. Though my ultimate destination was the town of Bunkie, a pleasant commission, as well as a desire to see and converse with the friends of other days, carried me thirty or forty miles beyond to Alexandria. Here I found the Woman's Missionary Society of the State of Louisiana in session under the presidency of that talented and elect lady, Mrs E. J. Fullilove, of Keachie, La., and with a number of delegates from the northern part of the State, but, so far as I could obtain information, without a single representative from the rich and populous region lying south of a line drawn horizontally along the southern boundary of that town. When questioned about it by anxious members of that body, it was a great relief to be able to reply in good sonorous verse from so great an authority as the author of Hamlet:

"'Tis true, 'tis pity; an' pity 'tis, 'tis true."

That was, perhaps, the best that could be done under the circumstances, and when called on for a speech, my impression in consequence was, that I was not only talking out of that nothing void which the philosophers persist in terming the "inner consciousness" (but which odd speakers on extemporaneous occasions know to be quite the contrary), but that I was also holding up, under signal embarrassment, the largest end of an uncommon-sized log.

The opening meeting on Friday night—consisting of an address of welcome by Bro. White, son of the pastor of Alexandria, a response by Miss Lizzie Paxton, secretary of the body, and a telling address by Mrs. Fullilove—was a success; and, incidentally, it was learned that there was quite a breeze of interest among the Methodists of the town on the subject of the conference.

During the eighteen months since your correspondent paid a formal visit to Alexandria, the town has grown amazingly, having put on city ways to a large extent, and it is getting ready with a view for the coming railroad boom. If there ever was a town with an opportunity that can not be escaped, it is this one. The Methodism of Alexandria is likewise growing and progressive. Behind the pulse-beat or surface indications, which may sometimes deceive us, there is the steady heart-beat that bodes excellent things for the future. Bro. White enjoys the favor of the people, and he will, no doubt, have as usual a good report to make at Conference.

On the following day I was caught away by the railroad cars to Bunkie, being met by that large-hearted and iron-framed itinerant, Rev. S. H. Whatley, whose charge I had come to serve by laying the corner-stone of a handsome church on the day following. Bunkie is, comparatively, a new town in the heart of one of the richest and fairest farming districts in Louisiana, the Evergreen settlement being five miles eastward, and Eola and the towns on the Morgan road about an equal distance westward. After prohibition went into effect in Rapides parish, it became the whisky distributing depot for points northward; but that trade has languished of late, and the consequence has been a pari passu revival of more useful branches of commerce and an unmistakable accession of sunlight to the hearts and homes of the people. Most fortunately, too, Methodism in its aggressive form has come into this community in the persons of that humble, Christian, indefatigable worker, Bro. Whatley, and his young helper, Bro. Denson; and that, of course, means healthy revolution. This large circuit is almost wholly new ground, and in many quarters the heavy timbers had to be felled; but there is now a waving harvest from end to end, and, if we mistake not, there will be ere long a sound of rejoicing as the reapers come home with abundant sheaves.

From present appearances this work will take rank with our best circuits after the approaching session of Conference. The church at Bunkie will be an architectural gem, copied after one of the plans of Dr. Morton's book, and will cost when finished fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars. Bro. Whatley has received most efficient aid from Sister Rhodes, a Methodist lady of the vicinity, with both means and popularity, and a steady resolution to use both for the glory of God.

On Sunday morning, the day set apart for the corner-stone ceremonies, a tremendous rain storm swept the country, lasting until one o'clock in the day, turning back many hundreds of people, drenched and chilled, who were en route to the place of sacred rendezvous, and preventing, it was said, the attendance of, at least, two thousand persons who had resolved to be present—so well had the occasion been advertised, and so thoroughly is the community en rapport with the building enterprise. As it was, about six hundred persons, or fully one-third more than seating accommodations had been provided for (in a large cotton warehouse adjoining the depot), assembled in a storm of wind and rain, and after a long sermon and a collection, which was longer than broad, and endless chicken pie (?) we said the beautiful ceremony of our ritual at the laying of the corner-stone, and went away with the profound conviction that the ruin had been a godsend. Surely here are fields white unto the harvest!

J. M. Beard.

An Appeal.

The cry, "Come over and help us," is heard from many mission fields; but from Lochie Rankin (our pioneer missionary), who stands alone in the great walled city of Kading, who can turn a deaf ear?

Dr. Allen reported to our Board, while in session at Nashville, that her time, her heart and hands were more than full, and that help must be sent. From that body of earnest Christian workers a prayer arose that the Lord should lay his anointing hand upon one for this place. With joy and thanksgiving we bless God for the speedy answer and feel sure that the hearts of all Mississippians will rejoice to know that from our State a gifted young lady—Miss Mary McClellan, a teacher of Whitworth College—has consecrated her time, her talents, her all to the Master's work, saying gladly "Here am I; send me."

At a recent session of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, held at Wesson, she determined to lay down her work in the home land where there are many willing workers, and go to help the "faithful few." From a telegram received to-day we learn that she was accepted by the Board—"as a gift from God"—for this place in Kading, and now is ready and anxious to be sent.

The amount necessary for the missionary's outfit is two hundred dollars. At the annual meeting of the Woman's Mission Board, in May, the Memphis Conference asked to be permitted to furnish the requisite amount to send help to "Lochie." But since the Lord has honored our State, by calling one from our midst, I feel it will be a pleasant duty for Mississippians to contribute this amount. Sisters, brothers, "sacrifice to your gold, the Lord hath need." May you each give as he has prospered you and find in heaven your treasure laid up where thieves do not break through and steal! All contributions received will be acknowledged through the New Orleans Advocate.

Another Missionary.

MR. EDITOR: A telegram from Miss Mary McClellan announces that she has been "accepted and will sail with Dr. Allen." This means that Miss McClellan, one of the teachers in Whitworth College, and a member of our church at Brookhaven, has offered herself to the Woman's Board for work in some foreign field; that she has been accepted by the Board, and will sail for China, on July 31 or August 11, with Dr. Young J. Allen, who will at that time return to his work in the Celestial Empire. God has highly honored Mississippi Methodism, and especially the church at Brookhaven and Whitworth College, by calling to the foreign work this cultured and consecrated young lady.

Miss McClellan was for several years a student of Whitworth College. In 1886 she graduated at the Nashville College for Young Ladies, and then took a normal course at Lebanon, Ohio. She has been a member of the faculty of Whitworth Female College for one year, and her services were engaged for next session. She joined the church at Brookhaven several years ago, and has been one of our most active and useful young members. Her experience as a teacher has shown her to be possessed of the elements necessary for success in this field of labor, and her fervent piety and unreserved consecration render her eminently qualified for the work to which God has called her. The Lord, who in ancient times claimed as his own the first fruits of the field and the firstlings of the flocks, in laying his anointing hand upon this young lady, has chosen the best that Brookhaven can give.

Miss McClellan will return to Brookhaven before sailing for China, and we wish, just before her departure, to hold in honor of her a public farewell missionary service. We would be glad, Doctor, to have you with us on that occasion.

A. F. WATKINS.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., July 16, 1888

Alexandria District Conference.

District Conference will convene, July 26, at Evergreen. Conveyances will be at Bunkie Station on the arrival of trains, July 25, 26 and 27, to convey preachers and delegates to Evergreen. The rate of fare over the Texas and Pacific road will be five cents per mile for the round trip; on sale July 25 and 26, good to return until the thirty-first. C. R. GODFREY, P. C.

In view of the fact that at political meetings men wave handkerchiefs and shout themselves hoarse and "call up all sorts of antics," an exchange asks these questions:

In the light of these facts, why is it that hands go up in holy horror when some old saint of God gets loose at camp meeting or in times of revival and becomes the center of a veritable amen corner? Why is it that a political shout is cheered and a religious shout hissed? Why is it fashionable to shout in a political convention and a disgrace to shout in a religious gathering? Why is a live politician called a patriot and a live Christian called a fanatic?

Wildworth Female College.

In another column will be found the advertisement of this famous institution of learning, which on account of its unsurpassed advantages is one of the most largely patronized female colleges in the South. Under the able administration of Prof. L. T. Fitzhugh, President, and Rev. W. B. Murrah, Vice-President, it has achieved a success which is almost phenomenal.

The faculty for the coming session is composed of an exceptionally able and brilliant corps of teachers, five of whom are college-bred male professors.

The President has assumed entire control of the Boarding Department, which will hereafter be under the immediate supervision of himself and wife. It is just now being refurnished throughout with new and attractive furniture, and everything will be arranged for the best comfort of the pupils.

Population in India, according to the principal religions: Hindus, 187,937,438; Mahommedans, 50,121,598; Aboriginals, 6,426,511; Buddhists, 3,418,895; Christians, 1,862,620; Sikhs, 1,853,426; Jains, 1,221,855; Parsis, 85,397; Jews, 12,009; others, 962,066; total, 253,891,821.

Personals.

Bro. G. D. Anders, of East Baton Rouge circuit, reports "telling sermons," "the Lord's presence in power," and fifteen conversions, and as many accessions to the church."

We are glad to learn from Bro. John Pipes that our congregation at Grand Cane, La., has grown so large that a new church is to be built for its accommodation. We rejoice with our brethren there.

Bro Mellen writes that he has just closed a meeting which resulted in thirty-three conversions and sixteen accessions, and the whole membership revived. That is good news.

We have had a call from our old friend, James Manette, of Morehouse parish. He says the united ages of himself and wife amount to 163 years. They were married by the father of Allen G. Thurman, fifty-nine years ago. These old people were en route to Seashore Camp Meeting.

Dr. Patterson, who was for several years superintendent of our missions in Mexico, is now in Venezuela, working for the American Bible Society.

Dr. Rivers, in Central Methodist, says:

In a little more than one month this pastor has made about one hundred and seventy-five pastoral visits, which were usually closed with an humble, tender, earnest prayer. Of course weariness has often come over a frame upon which rests the burden of three score and ten years; still we have not been laid up one day since our last Conference. We have been at the opening of each Sunday-school, and have done what we could in that great department of our work. We have preached as many as twenty-two sermons in three weeks, and have seen many precious souls brought to Christ. God is good, and we give to him all the glory.

Monday's dispatches brought us the sad news of the death of Judge J. Harvey Brigham. He has been in low health for many years and died at Kingston, Jamaica, where he held the post of United States consul.

On last Monday, at the Seashore Camp Ground, Dr. Hannaniy had an informal but free and full conference with the members of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, there present, and accepted the presidency of the college. Before we left that same evening, he informed us that he had secured that day $2,100 toward the endowment of the college. Centenary has started upwards! And let everybody give a helping hand.

The following brethren gave us a call, en route to the Seashore Camp Meeting: Rev. J. T. Nicholson, of Hazlehurst, Miss.; Rev. R. S. Isbell, of Natchitoches, La.; Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Greenville, Miss.; Rev. J. H. Shumaker, of Arcola, Miss.; Rev. John Pipes, of Grand Cane, La.; Rev. T. J. Newell, of Grenada, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Medlock, of New Iberia, La.

We are pleased to receive from Dr. Barbee the catalogue of Sunday-school publications of our Publishing House. We hope he will send one to every Sunday-school in our church.

The Clarion Ledger, of Jackson, Miss., announces that the contract for building the episcopal residence for Bishop Galloway has been let out. It is to be completed by November 1.

We see it stated in the dispatches that Rev. J. W. Boswell, of Arkansas, has been elected assistant editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, in place of Dr. Candler.

Col. D. F. Boyd, formerly of the State University at Baton Rouge, La., has leased the Kentucky Military Institute at Frankfort, Ky.

The late Legislature passed fifty-seven House bills and twenty-four Senate bills. Two of the House bills were vetoed by the governor.

Items of Interest.

By a late decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, saloon-keepers are made responsible for any injury, loss or damage suffered by their patrons in the saloons, or as a consequence of their visits there. And the Supreme Court of Nebraska has decided that a woman may sue and recover money her husband has squandered for liquor.

The Century is our authority for saying there are in this country 320,000 teachers, four-fifths of whom are women.

The statement was made in the late Pan-Presbyterian Council in London that there are 4,000,000 communicants; that 60,000 have been gathered from heathenism, and 500 ministers have been sent to preach to the heathen.

Grand Rapids, Mich., has forty-two furniture factories, employing 12,000 men.

H. H. Bancroft, the San Francisco historian has the largest private library in the country. It consists of 50,000 volumes and is valued at $200,000.

One peculiarity of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, or "Covenanters," is that they refuse to exercise the right of the ballot because Christ is not recognized in the Constitution of the United States.

The Northern Presbyterians gave last year an average of $5 a head.

Vital statistics just published show that the annual death rate in New York City is about 26 to 1,000 persons. In London it is a little less than 20.

The total number of city missionaries in New York may be set down at 266, who probably make 800,000 visits a year. Besides these there are hundreds of tract visitors, and hundreds of poor visitors and other voluntary agents of various churches and societies, who are going about continually doing good.

In May, 73,770 immigrants landed in New York City. Altogether the arrivals for the first five months of the year were 187,139, or over 21,000 more than the number during the corresponding period of 1887.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

The many friends and well-wishers of this young institution will be glad to know of its improved condition. Bro. Newell is and has been giving his leisure seasons in going over the patronizing territory informing all of its successes and needs of the future. Bro. Newell proposes to visit all the District Conferences yet to be held in North Mississippi, and will take pleasure in giving all information of the school; and his desire is to be wearied with inquiries.

Randolph-Macon College.

See the announcement for the fifty-fourth session of Randolph-Macon in this issue of the ADVOCATE. This live institution continues to improve with age. Under a liberal management no expense is spared to add every improvement necessary to keep it well up in the first rank, while the location, health and educational advantages are unsurpassed. The moral influence of Randolph-Macon are of the highest order.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia R.R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

A Methodist preacher, Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., Greensboro, N. C., has discovered a wonderfully successful remedy for catarrh, bronchitis, etc. It is smoked in a pipe. He will mail a trial sample for a two-cent stamp.

Medical students, desiring excellent clinical advantages, should address the Dean, for Catalogue of the Memphis Hospital Medical College, Tennessee.

Our Young People.

WHICH SIDE ARE YOU ON?

BY ANNA B. HENDERSON

Come, children, and listen; I'll tell you in rhyme
A story of something which happened one time:
There was war in the land, and each brave heart beat high,
And many went forth for their country to die;
But words fail to tell of the fear and dismay
Which swept the small village of W—— one day
When the enemy's army marched into the street.
And their own valiant soldiers were forced to retreat;
Such hiding, surrendering, and trembling with fear!
When what in the midst of it all should appear
But Grandmother Gregory, feeble and old,
Coming out from her cottage, courageous and bold!
She faced the intruders who marched through the land,
Shaking at them the poker she held in her hand.
"How foolish!" her friends cried, provoked, it is true;
"Why, grandmother, what did you think you could do?"
"Not much," answered grandma, "but ere they were gone
I wanted to show them which side I was on."

Now, child en, I've told this queer story to you
To remind you of something the weakest can do—
There is always a fight 'twixt the right and the wrong,
And the heat of the battle is borne by the strong.
But, no matter how spalls or mutt for the field,
Or how feeble or graceless the weapon you wield,
O, fall not until the last enemy's gone,
To stand up and show them which side you are on.

—Our Youth.

If the friends of our little cousins would look over their letters before they are sent to this office, it would be doing them a great service. We receive letters which we can not publish because they contain so many mistakes in spelling that we have not time to make the corrections. Young people need help just at that point, and if their parents and friends would give it, good would be done at both ends of the line.—ED.

MR. EDITOR: I see your little folks' department and wish to add myself to the list. Slaughter is a new little town on the Mississippi Valley railroad. We have a nice, large, new Methodist Church near my pa's house, and a nice Sunday-school. My mother is one of the teachers. My little sister Ollie and I are scholars. I am very much interested in Bible questions. Please, in your next paper, tell me how old was Isaac when he was offered for a sacrifice by Abraham. I am a little boy twelve years old. We have a nice college here. We have two teachers. Their names are Prof. Vandiver and Mrs. Vandiver. I will close.

Your little friend,

WILLIE H. KENT.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking of writing to your paper for a long time, but have never written. I have decided to write now, and if this is published, and it is acceptable with you and the little cousins, I will probably write again. We are greatly blessed here with religious services. We have Sunday-school and prayer meeting every Sunday; Young Men's Christian Association twice a month, and preaching every second and fourth Sundays, and sometimes oftener. Fearing my letter will be too long, I will close by asking the cousins a question: Is the word "hell" used in any of Paul's writings? and if so, where? Your little friend,

A Sharp-Eyed Boy.

A poor lad, living near Philadelphia, was invited, a couple of years ago, by a wealthy friend in town to dine with him. Among the dishes new to him on the table, he noticed that one which he particularly relished was set down on the menu as "filet de bef aux champinons." A sharp scrutiny soon showed him the "champignons" were only mushrooms, such as he had gathered on the sheep-walks. These, however, as his friend explained to him, were of finer quality, and had been cultivated and canned in France. They sold at retail, his friend explained to him, readily at sixty cents a can. Strolling through the market the next day, the boy saw one or two quart baskets of native mushrooms marked at that price.

"Is there much demand for these things?" he asked. "We do not think much of them in the country."

"They are considered a rare delicacy," said the man, "but only epicures can afford to buy them."

The lad passed on with a new thought in his brain. Why could he not grow mushrooms? He was poor, to be sure, had little time to spare from his regular work, and had no land. Here was a crop which he had been told could be raised in a cellar, one for which there was already a demand which could be easily increased, and no supply.

He went home, and during the next few weeks read every book he could find on mushrooms, laid out beds in a back cellar, manufactured his spawn with a few cold mushrooms and the manure heap, and last fall filled the market with his boxes of tiny silver buttons, blushing delicate pink. They were of precisely the same quality as the French-canned champignons, only they were dewy-fresh and sold at twenty cents. Epicures eagerly filled their baskets, and others who never had tasted them, in the prevailing high prices of all kinds of food, tried the new cheap vegetable, and came again and again. The crop fairly took the market and the boy has already laid up a snug sum toward going to college.

The Hard Problem.

I know of a boy who was preparing to enter the junior class of the New York University. He was studying trigonometry and I gave him three examples for his next lesson. The following day he came into my room to demonstrate his problems. Two of them he understood, but the third—a very difficult one—he had not performed. I said to him, "Shall I help you?"

"No, sir. I can and will do it if you give me time."

I said, "I will give you all the time you wish."

The next day he came into my room to recite another lesson in the same study.

"Well, Simon, have you worked that example?"

"No, sir," he answered; "but I can and will do it if you will give me a little more time."

"Certainly, you shall have all the time you desire."

I always like those boys who are determined to do their own work, for they make our best scholars, and men, too. The third morning you should have seen Simon enter my room. I knew he had it, for his whole face told the story of his success. Yes, he had it, notwithstanding it had cost him many hours of the severest mental labor. Not only had he solved the problem, but, what was of infinitely greater importance to him, he had begun to develop mathematical powers which, under the inspiration of "I can and I will," he has continued to cultivate, until to-day he is professor of mathematics in one of our largest colleges and one of the ablest mathematicians of his years in our county.

My young friends, let your motto ever be, "if I can, I will."—Evangelist.

Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor of England, after having been tried at Westminster and condemned to death without any just or reasonable cause, concludes his speech to his judges thus: "More have I not to say, my lords, but that as St. Paul held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen to death, and as they are both now saints in heaven, and shall continue there friends for ever: so I verily trust, and shall, therefore, most heartily pray, that though your lordships have now here on earth been judges to my condemnation, we may nevertheless hereafter cheerfully meet in heaven in everlasting salvation. —Myer's Lectures on Great Men.

We must not look on that only as prayer to which our lips give utterance; the wish of the believing heart is counted prayer by God; it is the smoke of the incense which ascends in silence before him.

A STRIKE.

Once upon an evening dreary,
As I pondered, sad and weary,
O'er the basket with the mending from the wash
the day before;
As I thought of countless stitches
To be placed in little breeches,
I rose in heart rebellious in me, as it oft had done before.
At the fate that did condemn me, when my daily task was o'er,
To that basket evermore.

John, with not a sign or motion,
Sat and read the Yankee Notion,
With no thought of the commotion
Which within me rankled sore.
"He," thought I, "when day is ended,
Has no stockings to be mended,
Has no babies to be tended,
He can sit and read and snore;
He can sit and read and rest in;
Must I work thus evermore?"
And my heart rebellious answered,
"Never more; no, nevermore."

For though I am but a woman,
Every nerve within is human,
Aching, throbbing, overworked,
Mind and body sick and sore.
I will strike. When day is ended,
Though the stockings are not mended,
Though my course can't be defended,
Safe behind the closet door
Goes the basket with the mending, and I'll haunted be no more.
In the daylight shall be crowded all the work that I will do;
When the evening lamps are lighted, I will read the paper, too.

SUMMER HINTS.—Dr. William Hammond makes some suggestions in the Boston Journal that are of value in these torrid days. Excessive heat causes gastric and intestinal diseases, and especially a peculiar disorder known as heat-fever or sunstroke. To lessen the liability to the first group mentioned, some attention to the food taken into the system is necessary, and it is especially requisite to avoid vegetables or fruits that are not fully ripe, or in which decomposition has begun. Children are especially liable to suffer from eating such substances. Their digestive systems are exceedingly delicate, and their nervous systems are very impressionable.

"The clothing should be light, and that worn next to the body should be of some material capable of readily absorbing the perspiration. Wool is probably to be preferred, and it should be unmixed with cotton. For the head during very warm weather, nothing is better than a straw hat, for not only is it of light weight, but, if properly made, free passage of air round the head takes place. The so-called Panama hats, which are so closely woven that they will hold water, are the worst possible coverings for the head in summer.

"It is a remarkable fact that sunstrokes are very seldom met with among persons who expose themselves to the full heat of the sun in the country, or outside of the limits of large cities."

SCHOOL WORK AT HOME.—The amount of school work to be done at home is a subject in which parents and teachers are equally interested. Aside from the physical injury caused by carrying loads of books to and from school, is the time consumed out of school hours in the preparation of lessons. No one with the least knowledge of physiology will contend that ten hours a day of intellectual labor is a reasonable tax upon a growing child. Confinement at a desk in a school-room should not be followed by an almost equally close confinement at home for the rest of the day and evening. Fresh air and exercise are of infinitely more consequence to the child than the successful reduction of a certain number of pounds to a certain number of pence, or the ability to recite the list of the kings of the Saxon Heptarchy. If, in order to get the work done it must needs be crowded into the hours rightly belonging to rest, recreation or home duties, then less should be attempted, that the teacher may have opportunity to personally superintend the labor which is legitimately hers. —Caroline B. LeRow.

To make boots waterproof, for hunting or fishing, rub into them a preparation made of four ounces of lard and one ounce of resin. Both boots and mixture must be warm when it is applied.—Harper's Bazar.

Great mistakes are often made in trying to economize. It is a safe rule to follow that the best is always the cheapest. A cheap physician may cost you your life. If you have Malaria in your system, you will not only be miserable, but unfit to work. Lost time is money lost. One dollar spent for Shallenberger's Antidote will cure you in twenty-four hours. MISCELLANEOUS.

The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.

"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Molunous, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffit, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 75 years old, of Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

PRITT—The sad intelligence of the death of J. M. PRITT brings the keenest agony to the hearts of a loving family, deep sorrow to a legion of friends, as well as casts a cloud of gloom over the entire community. He died at his home, Montrose, Miss., February 28, 1888. Through his sickness—four long weeks of lingering death—which was of a dangerous type from the beginning, he met it with the spirit of a hero in battle and bore its pain through all of his sufferings with the fortitude of a martyr. And while death gained in the conflict, still it is some consolation to know that he has left the cares and troubles of this world to enter the enjoyments and blissful pleasures of the Christian in the "beautiful city of God."

—He was a member of the Methodist Church for many years, and, as a member, was consistent in conduct, visiting his church vows neither in word or deed. At the time of his death he was a steward and was always a pillar of support to the charge where he lived, ever willing to do his full part towards aiding it, not only financially, but in any other way. He was an earnest and untiring laborer for the welfare and advancement of the school located in his community, and it owes much to his zealous work in its behalf. He was always alive to the prosperity of the vicinity and never failed to take an active interest and a toiler's part in any movement calculated to result in its benefit and improvement. While a man of enterprise and public spirit in all respects, yet he was tempered both with a discerning judgment and business sagacity which made him avoid the endorsement of rash and hasty plans, but almost insured the ultimate success of any movement of which he was the director.

His private life was pure. He was kind and affectionate to wife and children, obliging alike to neighbor, friend and stranger. Finally, let it be said that he was an honest man "the noblest work of God"—a living example of the good results of sterling honesty and strict integrity.

But he has gone. Let us hope that as he felt life ebbing away, as he felt himself being wrapped in the dreamless drapery of eternal sleep; that as this world, with its manifold burdens; were fading he saw in the darkness the gleam of a star, and felt in the gloom the touch of a tender hand, rested his gaze on the streets of gold, the walls of amethyst and the gates of jasper, which mark the everlasting city of the righteous, wherein shall be his abode for all time to come.

W. B. MASSEY.

The following resolutions were adopted by the school:

Whereas, In the wise dispensation of Almighty God, it has seemed good to remove from our midst, our beloved friend, J. M. Pruitt; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the school has lost one of its strongest pillars, and that community has lost one of its best citizens.

Resolved, That we deplore the loss with deep feelings of regret, softened only by the confident hope that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That we tender to his afflicted family our sincere condolence and heartfelt sympathy in their affliction at the loss of one who was a good, benevolent and loving father, a devoted husband and an upright man.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and a copy sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

TUMLEY—Died in Minden, June 16, 1888, Mrs. E. M. G. TUMLEY. She was born December 16, 1808, and died aged seventy-nine years and six months. She became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in childhood, and adorned the doctrine of Christ all her life. Her last end was peace. She died of paralysis after an illness of eight months. Thus one by one they are gathered home to their Father's house, where are many mansions. She leaves behind to mourn their loss two noble daughters, and thus is verified the passage: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

H. O. WHITE.

HOUGH—THOMAS J. HOUGH was born near Columbia, Caldwell parish, La., 1814, and died at his home, near Opelousas, La., Friday, June 8, 1888. During the earlier years of his manhood he chose the law as his profession, being admitted to the bar at twenty-one years of age, and served in the capacity of district attorney for two terms. In 1875 he was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. C. R. Godfrey, having been much impressed by the earnest, zealous preaching of Bro. M. C. Manly. From this period in his life's history he served as class leader, until he entered the ministry in June, 1876. From the session of the Annual Conference, which convened at Trenton, the following winter, he was sent to Natchitoches, La. Here he gave full proof of his calling and election. He reckoned the four years spent there as the happiest of his life. He must have found enjoyment in his Master's work, for success crowned his faithful efforts in this hitherto unfruitful field. He was pastor in charge of the Opelousas station during the years of 1881, '82 and '83, and here he closed his career as an effective minister. He retired to private life at this time and still maintained that tireless energy and trustful faith so characteristic of the man. He was married, December 27, 1865, to Miss Mary E. Faulkner while yet twenty-one years of age. One daughter was given them who, with widowed mother, now mourns the loss of father and husband. May the God of all consolation be with them in their dark hours of bereavement!

S. J. DAVIES.

DAVIS—Bro. WILLIAM A. DAVIS was born near Black Hawk, Carroll county, Miss., August 10, 1850; married to Miss Lula O. Bromgoole, March 17, 1885, and died in Edwards, May 10, 1888. Bro. Davis united with the Methodist Church when quite a youth, and, from what we learn, was ever faithful to his vows and did his duty. Almost his last railroad act was in the interest of his church. He left home only a few days before his death in the hope of the change being beneficial; and only a short while before becoming speechless he called some one and requested them to send some money to one of the stewards for his pastor, that he had forgotten to leave it, thus testifying to his love and interest in his church. Kind, gentlemanly and courteous, he won friends wherever known. Sick for many months, yet no complaints; anxious to live for his loved ones, yet there were no murmurings. His friends, though anxious, did not apprehend such an early death, but entertained hopes of final recovery. Yet all the remedies used, all the tender solicitude, loving attention of the loving ones was unavailing, all hopes shattered, for God saw best to take him to himself. Bro. Davis leaves a mother, brother, a dear little boy and a devoted wife. He had no fear of death, and we hope to see him again in the city of our God.

J. W. COOPER.

CUNYUS—JOHN W. CUNYUS was born in Perry county, Ga., September 28, 1811; died at his home near Edwards, Miss., April 18, 1888. Bro. Cunyus was a steward in the Methodist Church. He loved his church, her doctrines and polity. His was a kind, generous and affectionate nature. Integrity, industry and hospitality were elements prominent in his character. In his home he possessed the magic power of making friends and strangers feel perfectly welcome and at ease. His hospitality was not assumed; but was the development of his noble and sympathetic nature. Christ was often welcomed at the beautiful home in Bethany, and the same spirit in our brother welcomed the itinerant pastor. His home was a Bethany for God's servants. Bro. Cunyus trusted in Christ, and we have the assurance that he has entered into that rest which awaits the people of God. As a citizen, Christian, husband, father and friend he will be sadly missed. "He giveth his beloved sleep."

PASTOR.

Warm weather often causes extreme tired feeling and debility, and in the weakened condition of the system diseases arising from impure blood are liable to appear. To gain strength, to overcome disease, and to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

How marvelous it is that this little gospel, which a child can hold in its hand, which everyone of us can carry in his pocket, is the power to lift the human race upward and forward, the power that stimulates general education. A man said to me not long ago, who had been traveling in the East: "There is one thing very remarkable about the Coptic Christians: they are there in Egypt, obscure, persecuted, and pushed down into the very dirt and mud of the Nile; and yet wherever you find a Coptic Christian, however impoverished he may be, however weak, you find a man who has a certain degree of education in him, who has a certain acquaintance with the literature of the world, more or less, though it may be very slight. How can you explain it?" "Explain it perfectly and at once," I said; "because his religion came to him in a book, and because it came to him in a book which makes all books and all knowledge of books precious in his sight."—Dr. R. S. Storrs.

Are you busy? Are you making money? If so, stick to it, you are fortunate. If you are not, then our advice is that you write at once to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va. They can show you how to enter quickly upon a profitable work.

Morality apart from religion is but another name for decency in sin. It is just that negative species of virtue which consists in not doing what is scandalously depraved and wicked. But there is no heart of holy principle in it, any more than there is in grosser sins.—Horace Bushnell.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

Water-Spouts in the Atlantic.

Many interesting reports in regard to water-spouts, sighted by masters of vessels during January and February off the Atlantic coast of the United States, have been received by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department. Water-spouts are a special class of whirlwinds, and their manner of formation is described as follows in a supplement to the "Pilot Chart of the North Atlantic Ocean," for March: "A layer of warm, moist air at the surface of the ocean happens to have above it a layer of cooler, drier air. This condition of things is one of unstable equilibrium, and sooner or later the warm, light air at the surface rises through the cooler and heavier air above. This process sometimes takes place gradually over large areas, but at other times it is more local, and there seems to be formed in the upper layer a break or opening through which the air of the lower layer begins to drain upward, as through a funnel. Under favorable conditions—that is, when the differences of temperature and moisture and the supply of warm, moist air at the surface are great—this action becomes very intense, and this intensity is still further increased by the fact that as the air rises its moisture is condensed, the latent heat thus liberated adding to the energy of the rising column of air. Now, as this surface air rushes in and escapes upward through the opening thus formed in the upper layer, it takes up a rotary or whirling motion, the velocity of which increases toward the center or axis of the funnel, and a suction or partial vacuum is created, as indicated by the low reading of the barometer at the center of a cyclone or whirlwind. When a whirlwind is thus formed over the ocean, water is often drawn up the center of the whirl some distance, owing to the suction created, and at the same time the moisture in the air is condensed as it rises, so that the name 'water-spout' is very applicable. Indeed, sometimes a spout will burst over a vessel and flood her decks with water, as a cloud-burst does a mountain-side. When a spout is forming, its upper portion is often visible first, seeming to grow downward from the clouds. By observing carefully with a telescope, however, it will be seen that the motion in the column itself is upward, although the moisture in the air which is rising is condensed lower and lower down, thus rendering the whirl visible lower down continually, and making it appear to be actually descending." That part of the North Atlantic from Cuba to the latitude of Philadelphia, and from the Atlantic coast of the United States to the Bermudas, is pre-eminently a region where water-spouts are liable to occur, owing largely to the warm, moist air lying upon the Gulf Stream, and the cool, dry air brought over it by the northwesterly winds from off the coast. Most of the water-spouts referred to were seen within this region. The office wishes to receive many full and accurate reports of such marine phenomena, in order that knowledge of them may be increased. The most important observations regarding a water-spout are the temperature of the air and water, the reading of the barometer, direction and force of the wind, and the changes which take place in each while the spout lasts; also, the direction of rotation of the whirl, and an estimate of its size, character, and changes of form, with, if possible, photographs or sketches, however rough, of its appearance at the various stages of its formation and progress.—Popular Science.

OTHER WORLDS THAN OURS.—Recent improvements in telescopes have enabled astronomers to make interesting discoveries, and it is positively asserted by Sig. Schiaparelli, of Milan, who, it is said, has the finest instrument in the world, that Mars is inhabited by a people somewhat like ourselves. He has made the wonderful discovery of a series of canals in that planet. They are nearly a hundred miles wide, and run from the seacoast to the interior. According to Prof. E. A. Boyle other astronomers have seen the same phenomena. It is known that Mars has snow and rain, while there are indubitable evidences of animal life.

Recreation.

When you walk along the street, study human nature. It is a book you will never tire of perusing if you bring to it a catholic spirit and a touch of that common humanity that makes the whole world kin. If you walk in the fields, keep your senses open to that wider nature that everywhere encircles the human, asking you to "consider the lilies" and listen to the voices among the hills. They will not tire, but rest your brains. I shall be no whit the worse doctor nor any the less fit for my work tomorrow that I look up to-night and know the "sweet influence of Pleiades," nor does it task the brain to remember the familiar faces of Orion, Arcturus, Cassiopeia, and all that host accompanying her that in the northern sky outwatch the night, waiting for the morning. Yet am I humbled and awed when I think of the almost infinite distance of those orbs that have seen our puny generations come and go; the spectrum analysis that shows me across such abysses of space the familiar substances which burn there unconsumed; the mighty spaces over which these stars are momentarily flying, science unerringly indicating whether in advance or retrograde. Then remembering that it is the eye that sees all this—no, not the eye, but something that sits behind the eye, call it brain-cell if you will—which, putting forth its far-reaching fingers across limitless space, takes hold upon the stars. I wonder if the brain that takes cognizance of all this can have differentiated from the simple, primordial cell common to vegetable and animal life, and, if so, then what infinite power must have stood behind protoplasm in that genesis.—W. W. Godding.

Barnabas.

The church has allowed the noblest of the primitive Christian band to fade into obscurity. In what pulpit is allusion made to the good Levite, Joses? The sacred writers, by a line here and there, have drawn his portrait—a grand and well-nigh faultless character.

He comes into view when the crucial test is applied to the new convert. The young church was in great straights. The son or daughter who had joined the disciples were driven from the paternal door. Many were suddenly homeless and without a meal. Barnabas lived in the Island of Cyprus. He had never parted with the old homestead near Jerusalem. No price could have bought it. It may be, for centuries his ancestors had held it. Their bones were there. He lived far away, but his heart clung to the cherished spot. It was sacred soil. The thousands crowding the church must have bread. They had lost their employment and their homes by their fellowship with the apostles. The call for help was urgent. The property that was above rubies must go. It was ripping away a hemisphere of the heart. Tears wet the parchment that passed the play-ground of youth and the graves of ancestors to the hands of strangers. He sold it, and gave the money to the poor saints. Did there ever a purer shekel fall into the treasury of God?—Richmond Christian Advocate.

DOING.—The sacred history tells us of a certain exemplary disciple in the old town of Joppa who was "full of good works and almsdeeds which she did." (Acts ix. 36.) Herein is a great contrast to some of modern times. They are full of large charities which they fail to do. Their imagination is lively and their purpose strong. Methods of usefulness are criticised and new ones invented, but the did is wanted. All is talk, excellent, seasonable, and often sensible, yet without fruit, so that one can not help wishing that they would say less or do more, for "the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury." It is what we do, not what we contemplate or fancy or hope or promise, that counts in the result. We may be full of good works which we are going to do, but unless this fullness in some form passes into act, it pleases neither God nor man. But when, as occasionally happens, one stumbles upon a woman whose memory, like that of Dorcas, is full of the good works which she did, there is a new appreciation of Christian character and a fresh tribute to the grace which produces such blessed results.—Christian Intelligencer.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5.

WITH STANDARD SELECTIONS

BY IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN AND GEO. C. STEBBINS.

244 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges Not Prepaid:
Music Edition, Boards Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 5 00
Music Edition, Boards Covers..... 40 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy for Music and two cents for Word Editions.

Earlier editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published — No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be issued with the consolidated book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Senor Antonio Flores, President of Ecuador, called upon President Cleveland, on July 11.

The Seashore Camp Meeting began on July 11. A large congregation was present at the opening service.

The naval appropriation bill will contain an item of $50,000 for a commission of three officers to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to report as to the most desirable location on or near the Gulf of Mexico for a naval yard and docks for shipping.

About seven thousand people attended a prohibition meeting in Chicago on July 13.

There does not appear to be any substantial basis for the report that the President proposes vetoing the river and harbor bill. The President was entirely satisfied with the bill as it left the House, and the members of the committee do not believe he will veto it because the Senate has chosen to increase this amount $1,560,000.

A deed was filed for record in the county clerk's office in El Paso, Texas, by which a real estate transfer of over 1,300,000 acres of land was consummated, the consideration being over three and one-quarter million dollars. It is the sale of the grant lands of the Texas and Pacific Railway Company to New York parties.

The French residents of New Orleans celebrated the fall of the Bastille, on July 14.

Two freight trains collided on the Western North Carolina railroad, near Asheville, N. C., on July 15, wrecking both engines and smashing up a number of cars. A negro brakesman was killed and five persons wounded, though not seriously.

The bill extending the limits of the port of New Orleans was passed by the Senate, July 16.

The Republican ticket has been indorsed by the Independent Labor party.

Among the acts approved by the President is the joint resolution reserving the public lands in Louisiana and Florida for homestead entry.

An appropriation of $1,000 to teach cooking in the public schools has been made at New Haven, Conn.

FOREIGN.

It is said that Cardinal Moran has had frequent interviews with the Pope on the Irish question, and that he has impressed the latter greatly, showing that it is not good policy to interfere with the politics of the Irish, who, he points out, have great power in the colonies and in America.

Lord Salisbury, in a recent letter referring to the rumor that Mr. Balfour, chief secretary for Ireland, had resigned, said he was glad that story had been invented because it had given numerous associations a chance to put upon emphatic record their appreciation of Mr. Balfour's policy for the advancement of Ireland.

The taking of the Bastille was celebrated throughout France on July 14.

A papal encyclical letter was read to-day in all the Catholic churches in the diocese of Dublin. In it the Pope says he has heard with regret that excited meetings have been held at which inconsiderate and dangerous opinions regarding the recent papal decree have been uttered, even the authority of the decree itself being unspared. His Holiness reiterates his affection for the Irish people and says he has always urged them to keep within the bounds of justice and right.

Five thousand persons assembled in Hyde park, London, July 15, to take action with reference to the imprisonment of Mr Dillon and the death of Mr. John Mandeville. Resolutions were passed protesting against the course of the government in the case of Mr. Dillon, and declaring that the death of Mr. Mandeville was due to the ill-treatment he received while in prison.

The Riforma, commenting on the appointment by the United States House of Representatives of a committee to inquire into the evasion of the contract labor law, with special reference to the influx of Italians into America, says the Italian government will be on its guard to see that neither America nor any other country shall take measures contrary to international law or in opposition to the rights conferred on Italy through diplomatic relations.

A mass meeting of workingmen, held in Montreal, July 15, condemned the landing in Canada of undesirable immigrants, and called upon the government to put a stop to the practice by imposing a fine of $1,000 for each offense upon any steamship bringing such people to Canada.

The Emperor William is on a journey to Russia, on board the royal yacht "Hohenzollern," with the accompanying fleet.

A Lisbon dispatch announces the death of Senor Jose Borges de Castro, a distinguished Portuguese diplomat.

Prince Albrecht of Prussia has been appointed inspector general for the coming army inspection, the first since the accession of Emperor William. Gen. Von Caprivi becomes commander of the Tenth Army Corps, in place of Prince Albrecht.

There have been heavy storms in Hungary, destroying much property and the harvests. Many persons were killed by the hailstones.

The insult offered by Gen. Boulanger to Premier Minister Floquet in the Chamber of Deputies, on July 12, resulted in a duel which was fought on the thirteenth. Gen. Boulanger was wounded in the arm and neck. His wounds are serious.

The differences between King Milan of Servia and his wife, Queen Nathalie, have at length reached a crisis, the only solution of which is the judicial separation or absolute divorce of the royal couple.

Dropping out of the hair, with itching of the scalp, prevented, and the scalp made cool and healthy by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The second annual meeting for St. Tammany Camp Ground will begin September 21, 1888, and continue six or eight days. This camp ground is beautifully located seven miles northeast of Covington, La., and five miles south of the celebrated Abita Springs, on a clear, bold, running stream called Little Bogue Falla river. There will be ample accommodations for all who attend. All ministers of the gospel, with all others, are cordially invited to attend. Those coming by the East Louisiana railroad will get off at Abita Springs, where they will be met by stage.

"Emerson's Anthems of Praise."

A new book by the veteran author, L. O. Emerson, containing nearly one hundred choice anthems, jubilates, sentences, etc., suitable for large chorus choirs, quartets, or classes studying church music. The pieces are new, fresh, spirited, of medium difficulty, and of that peculiarly tuneful and satisfying character which has made Mr. Emerson's music so popular everywhere. Besides the larger anthems and jubilates, there are a few choice sentences, hymns, prayers, selections for special occasions, such as Easter and Christmas, etc. Some of the pieces have solos, duets and trios, and the entire book will not only interest most choirs and chorus classes, but will prove a valuable source of instructive practice. By mail, postpaid, $1. Per dozen, $9.

THERE ARE NO STORMS THAT NEVER CLEAR.

BY REV. JAMES THURSTON.

Why should our hearts be filled with fear,
Since gladness waits the day of sorrow?
There are no storms that never clear:
'Tis dark to-day and bright to-morrow.

The patriarch's bark of gopher wood—
As in the ancient Book related—
Rode out, long time, the stormy flood,
Till the deep "waters were abated."

Fierce blew the winds that fearful night,
Gennesaret's waters darkly flowing,
When Jesus from the mountain's height,
Beheld His servant's "toil in rowing."

Their Helper came in time of need,
His word the winds and waves controlling;
Henceforth upon their voyage they speed;
The waters ceased their angry rolling.

When clouds shut out the light of hope,
And life repeats the old, sad story,
Then to the mountains faith looks up,
And sees the morning's coming glory.

The storms will pass, the skies will clear,
As testify both faith and reason
And hope, in that celestial sphere,
Finds God's eternal summer season.

Rev. Almarin G. Miller.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

He was born in Eastern New York about the year 1815. His parents were very pious members of the Methodist Church, and trained their large family accordingly. Their son, Almarin, was converted to God and became a member of the Methodist Church in his twelfth year, under the pastorate of the Rev. Gleason Fillmore, brother of President Fillmore.

On his twenty-sixth birthday he was graduated to the degree of artium baccalaureus from Allegheny College, in Pennsylvania. On the same day he was married to his first wife, Miss Pattie McCalmont, and went immediately to take charge of his first circuit as a member of the Erie Conference. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Soule, August 6, 1843, and elder by Bishop Hamline, July 27, 1845. In the earlier years of his ministry, particularly, he was a great revivalist, and was instrumental in bringing members into the church by the scores and hundreds. Very many instances of remarkable displays of divine power under his ministry were narrated, and occasionally there were occurrences bordering quite closely upon the miraculous.

He came South in about 1846, and became a member of the Louisiana Conference under the articles of agreement of separation of the Church, North and South, which allowed a minister to elect for himself which division of the church he would attach himself to. Bro. Miller's sympathies from the beginning were with the Church, South, and he became thoroughly identified with all the interests and peculiarities of Southern society, Southern politics and Southern church life.

He became principal of the preparatory department of Centenary College, of Louisiana, and continued in that relation until the war disorganized the college. During the war he taught a private school, but when the college was reorganized he was again made principal. In this position he gave great satisfaction, and aided much in achieving the great success to which the college attained before the war. He had in those days a peculiar faculty for managing boys, inspiring them with a wholesome dread of his discipline, but at the same time drawing them unto him with thorough respect and filial love. His old pupils all delighted to meet with him in after life, and showed the warmest attachment for him, even though some of them, while at college, had smarted under his summary methods of enforcing obedience to law.

In addition to his labors as principal, for some years he had the editorial management of the Southern Mirror, a newspaper published in the town of Jackson, indirectly connected with the college, and, to some extent, reflecting its literary character. He had a taste and a fondness for writing; his style being easy, graceful, and often impressive. Not unfrequently he indulged in making poetry, and many of his effusions seemed worthy of the inspiration of the muse.

Bro. Miller's devotion to the church was a paramount obligation of his life. Whatever service his church demanded was freely and enthusiastically given, no matter what the sacrifice of personal interest might be. He delighted in protracted meetings. During a successful revival of religion he was in his congenial element. No duty could be so pressing, no interest so imperative, as to keep him away from such meetings. His cotton fields might be white unto the harvest in autumn, or the grass running riot with hiscrops in the spring; he would leave them both in the hands of the Lord, and labor in a revival until the last benediction was pronounced. He claimed it as a matter of faith that the Lord would never permit him to lose anything, so long as he was faithfully laboring in the vineyard.

He had a happy faculty in conducting a revival service, and had wondrous power in bringing the unconverted to the altar for prayer. He was always the chief agent in the sweeping revivals annually experienced at Centenary College before, and even since, the war. No matter who did the preaching, it was expected that Bro. Miller's peculiar and persistent exhortations should bring up the rear. He always succeeded in filling the altar-place with anxious inquirers. Oftentimes not only the space about the altar would be filled with kneeling penitents, but all the adjoining pews. Then it was that he was in his peculiar element. His confident manner and his shout of victory were contagious, bringing saint and sinner under the glowing inspiration. Many converts of those meetings live to bless his memory. Not a few of them are watchmen on the walls of Zion, and are living to sound the silver trumpet which has fallen from his grasp. Faithful old man! Everybody loved and respected him. He did not compromise with sin of any kind, and if any spoke against him, it was an evidence that they, not he, were blameworthy, their ire having been excited by his conscientious admonition.

Twice in his life he had seasons of mental depression, during which he shrank from society, and resigned himself to silence and sorrow. But even in the darkest moments, when the fear of reprobation would torment him, yet no act or word ever compromised his consistent Christian character, or indicated that he had ceased to be governed by the law of his God. His health was perfectly restored after the first attack, and he returned to his loved employ with a zeal, perhaps, greater than ever. But age and feebleness extreme prevented recovery from the last attack. He died with his last earthly consciousness under a mental eclipse; but, without doubt, his first vision of the spirit land was greeted with supernal light and glory.

A brave, true heart has ceased to beat; an unflinching champion of the right has laid his armor by; an efficient servant of the church has gone to claim his crown. Oh, that characteristics like his could be oftener seen and more consistently exemplified in the church he loved so well!

Here and There.

BY REV. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Besides the romantic and the beautiful, there are places of great interest to the traveler in the neighborhood of this charming Arcadia Valley. All aboard, ten in number, 8 A. M., we started for the granite quarry, six miles distant. How picturesque the scenery as our road winds around the foot of the mountains! What great rocks lie here and there; some spread out upon surface, others standing upon a mere point, as if wrought out and balanced by the hand of man! What a perpetual grinding and screeching our wagon wheels keep up, with an occasional shaking up, as we bounce over some large stone which projects above the surface! At last we arrived at the place of our destination, with no bones broken, but considerably jolted. Here is a wonderful sight, indeed. The whole face of the earth seems solidly paved with rock; and large boulders lie piled one upon another in every conceivable shape and position. What a mighty upheaval it must have been which threw up such huge masses of solid rock! For the benefit of scientists and visitors the government has reserved a plat which the workmen are forbidden to touch. This is a great place for picnic parties to gather, and a very pleasant place, too, for such pleasure-seekers. The low, scrubby oaks which grow up among the rock serve to furnish abundant shade, and the rock supply the lack of better tables very well, indeed. As usual, names are given to certain rocks and places. One is known as Elephant Rock, from its resemblance to that animal, though as large as a half-dozen Jumbos combined. Creeping in at a narrow passway we found ourselves in a delightful cool room formed by the rocks. This is known as "Lovers' Retreat," or the "Devil's Kitchen." I will leave it to some of your younger correspondents to tell what connection there is between the two names.

After rambling awhile among these wonders we went to the quarry, where we found the workmen taking the rock from a hundred feet beneath the surface. This is called the new quarry, because of its recent opening; and yet the rock had been renewed to this depth over a space of an acre or more. What machinery it must take to lift these great weights, though they seem to handle them with ease. Of course, everything possible is done by steam. The most surprising sight to me was the ease with which these great thick chunks of stone are split. A few small holes drilled five or six inches deep, into which iron pegs are driven, suffice to sever the largest. From hence we went to the cutting shed, where we found fifty men, with all-sized chisels and mallets, bringing the stone from its rough, rugged surface to a smooth, even face. "Clink, clink, clinkerty clink." What a constant din and rattle they do keep up! Here are stones of all sizes and shapes, from the square blocks for buildings and pavements to those of peculiar form and beauty for facings, furniture, tombstones, etc. Next to this we went to the polishing rooms, where, by means of iron filings, emery stone and other compositions, the face of the stone is brought to a beautiful polish. For a long time I have wondered why Solomon employed so many men for so long a time in building his temple. At last I am satisfied. This is a slow, tedious work, and none too many were employed to complete such a structure in so short a time.

From this place we visited what is known as "Pilot Knob," a very significant name given to the highest mountain peak in all this section. Our trip here was for the purpose of visiting the iron mines, which are being worked by a force of two or three hundred men. We were somewhat disappointed here. The falling rocks from above have injured and killed so many people of late that the authorities forbade our going only a few steps into the mouth of the tunnel. The constant digging for ore has so undermined the ground that we found it difficult in places to make our way over the mountain, because of the crevices and caves which have been made by the sinking surface above. How easy it is for the inexperienced to be deceived! These shining, sparkling fragments, which look to me like they are almost solid iron, are poor "chunks;" and those which appear dull and of a greasy look are the best. Tons upon tons of this ore are dug from this mountain every day, and the supply seems almost as great as when the work began many years ago. After gathering a few specimens for those at my parsonage home, we began to turn our steps homeward, where, footsore and weary, we arrived at six o'clock P. M.

Rambles.

BY REV. J. W. MALONE.

My good people at Koscinsko having voted me a leave of absence, we—that is, Mrs. M. and myself—boarded the train early on the morning of the eleventh instant for a visit to the "red hills" of Georgia, where I was born and reared, and where I lived until a few years since. At Starkville we had a stop-over of some six hours, during which time we saw something of the city; but spent most of it with Bro. T. Cameron, our faithful and solid preacher in charge at this place. The next session of our Conference convenes here, and Bro. Cameron will have his church completed and everything in readiness for its entertainment. When completed, the Starkville Church will be a thing of beauty, and will justly be the pride and joy of her people.

At Columbus we were joined by Mrs. Dr. Price and her smaller children, who were off for a visit to friends and relatives in Kentucky. We only had the pleasure of shaking the hand of the genial Doctor, as he remains behind to hold the post. At this point we made close connection with the Georgia Pacific, and were rapidly borne on by this splendidly equipped line to the Gate City. There is no road in all the South that is now so indispensable as this line, and certainly none that has developed so many natural resources. The results to Alabama and Georgia can now be counted by millions, and when it is continued via West Point and Winona, and through the great delta to Greenville, Mississippi will find it one of the best lines in all her borders, and it will bring with it, beyond any manner of question, large material prosperity to the State.

At Villa Rica, thirty-eight miles from Atlanta, and the place of our principal sojourn while in Georgia, we found, greatly to our pleasure, that the District Conference of the North Atlanta district was in session. This district, presided over by Dr. W. F. Glen, is at the head of the great North Georgia Conference. Bishop Key was expected to be present and preside, but was detained at home by the illness of his wife. Dr. Morrison, of First Church, on account of the continued affliction of his little son, was also absent. The Conference was well attended; however, and the reports show that Georgia Methodism, and particularly that of Atlanta, is a genuine and live branch. The subjects of home missions and education were given special emphasis. The financial secretary of Emory College, Rev. J. W. Roberts, was present in the interest of this noble institution. To my great surprise it was revealed that in order to carry on their work at Emory, the faculty, from the president down, have been living on half salaries for years. The college is in no worse condition than it has been heretofore; but it is time that this condition was improved, hence those in authority are calling loudly for a permanent endowment fund. And this is not a bugle blast to die away on open air. It is being heard and heeded. The financial secretary secured some $13 50, after his address to the Conference, in a very few minutes, and also reported that like responses had been made by every District Conference before whom that matter had been laid. In addition to this, the North Atlanta district subscribed fifty shares, at $10 each, to the Educational Loan Fund. This fund is to be deposited with the financial secretary, to be loaned without interest to worthy young men, to help them through college, but to be paid back to the college by the beneficiary, allowing him sufficient time to make it, so that the same money can be used in helping other young men, over and over again, thus making it not only a perpetual endowment, but one in which the principal is used, instead of simply the interest.

The greatest work for the church in Georgia to-day is her educational work. The Bible is being ruled out of the public schools, and, in some places, every text-book that mentions the name of God. Though the Florida and two Georgia Conferences, composing the group here, have not been so recreant of their duty along this line as some Conferences that I wot of, yet they have never risen hitherto to a proper sense of their duty in this line of work. But they are waking up, and, from what I can hear and see, I am persuaded that in a very short time Emory College will have an endowment creditable both to Methodism and to the State. Warren A. Candler, the newly elected president, was born and raised at old Villa Rica, in two miles of this place. He is here now visiting his people and attending Conference. His many friends and relatives enjoyed his sermon on Sunday morning, no doubt, very much. It was certainly a happy and masterly effort. With such men at the helm as Candler and Roberts, with all their noble young manhood, their consecrated genius and talents laid upon the altar of the institution from whose walls they were sent forth as graduates only a few years ago, Emory College can but carry on her noble work only to greater success.

WHY I VOTE, AYE.

In your last issue a correspondent casts a negative vote on the question of endowing Centenary College. I wish to cast my vote in the affirmative, for the following reasons:

I advocate the endowment of this institution because no school can successfully compete with heavily endowed State colleges, unless similarly supported; because we need more departments and more instructors than can be sustained by the meagre patronage which the church grudgingly bestows on its struggling institutions; because buildings out of debt, valuable as they assurredly are, do not and can not constitute a school of real importance, unless supplied with men and apparatus such as other colleges boast of; because with an endowment tuition can be reduced to rates within ordinary Methodist means, which can not be done so long as the instructors depend on patronage for pay, and have not an endowment; because of the prestige which the possession of money will give the institution, independent of other results; because, unless the college is endowed, it must die, as people prefer to send their boys to schools that seem prosperous; because these valuable buildings, rendered useless by neglect, would be forfeited to the church, and probably bought by the more thrifty Catholics, who would make something out of it; because it will be cheaper to endow this college richly than to build another, and equip it for equal usefulness; and, finally, I vote aye, because to neglect and ruin this college will be to discourage the friends of education who have long looked to it as the hope of our young men, and to give the cause of denominational education a blow from which it will not recover for years.

Centenary College has an able president and four competent professors; but a college of high grade in these days should have double that number of teachers, and should pay them well. Only by an endowment can these wants be filled. Give us a half-dozen well-endowed professorships, a building in good repair, a complete apparatus, and a freshly stocked library, and in a few years Centenary will stand abreast of any other institution, not only as it always has, in the beneficence of its influence, but also in the extent and breadth of its patronage and power.

The uneducated, but clear-headed fishermen of Galilee, to whom was committed the diffusion of Christianity in the world, had special qualifications for their calling. When the Master promised to make them "fishers of men," he foresaw that their nimble intellects would be quick to perceive the close and instructive analogies between the successful work of fishermen upon the sea, and the more important work of fishers of men upon the shore. The mending of the net would suggest that the gospel net must not be weakened by rents in any part. The casting of the fisher's net would suggest prudence, vigilance, and adroitness in the casting of the great spiritual net, if it were not to prove in vain; the fact that the landing of the net must be done with care, had its lessons; and the fact that the strongest of nets, cast and hauled by the most faithful and expert of fishermen, were often found empty, indicated that the most careful, and apparently the most wisely directed labors of the spiritual fishermen, were not always productive of visible results; that Pentecostal seasons were not always the fruits of the most faithful labors. And the direction, "Cast the net on the right side of the ship," and the results of obedience to it by those who had toiled all night and caught nothing, would teach those fishermen apostles that while no faithful work for the Master is ever lost, a change of methods involving no departure from truth and duty, will sometimes close with precious results a long season of discouraging and apparently useless labor.—Evangelist.

Loyalty to that which is a man's real self, is of primary importance. A man must not tamper with himself by being false to his convictions or inconsistent with his profession, nor allow pleasure to allure him, or pain to frighten him, into a course which would compromise his honor or his salvation. The martyrs were no less loyal to self than they were loyal to Christ. But man is body as well as soul, and loyalty to that is imperative. Disobedience to the laws of health is inconsistent with that reverence which is due to the body as the temple of the Holy Ghost, and may involve at least involuntary disloyalty to principles which only a healthy body can work out.—J. W. B.

"MY YOKE."

BY LUCY DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

"My yoke is easy," called well;
I fashioned it near weary heart for thee;
Think not I gave thy service to compel,
As lords would drive a slave using cruelly,
And scorns the gifts they sell.

Never were my yoke and chain;
Itself so light the wearer feels it not;
And as he can follow fits the wain
So I bear those to God for whom
In me God keepeth rest.

My strength is added to thine own;
We two are conquerors against the world;
There's not a power between thee and my throne
So strong but it must yield, and earthward hurled
Make feet a stepping-stone.

To do great things with little toil,
This is the secret which I give to those
Who take my yoke and labor for the spoil,
That makeeth rich beyond the wealth earth knows
Of gold, and corn, and oil.

My labor is indeed but rest;
I go before my life's in the way,
We work together, and our mutual test
Is love, and for my servants all I pray
Who follow my behest.

THE BURNT-OFFERING.

Leviticus 1, 1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.—Isa. liii, 6.

TIME.—B. C. 1490 or B. C. 1290, in April or May.

PLACE.—In Sinai, at the foot of Sinai.

INTRODUCTION.

Origin of Sacrifices. Sacrifices had been offered ever since the fall. We read of the whole burnt-offering, such as those of Abel and Noah, the thank-offering, as that of Jethro, and the sacrifices by which covenants were ratified. To these the law of Moses added the special sacrifices for sins and trespasses, and for particular classes of persons, as the priests, the meat-offerings and the drink-offerings.

1. The Lord—In the Hebrew text of Leviticus, Jehovah is the name by which God is always called, except when the word Elohim is used with a possessive pronoun, so as to designate him as the God of the chosen people. Neither Adonai nor Shaddai occurs throughout the book. Called unto Moses. Out of the tabernacle of the congregation—When Jehovah was about to give his people the Law of the Ten Commandments (Exodus ix, 3), he called to Moses from the top of Mount Sinai in thunders and lightnings and a thick cloud. When he was now about to give them the laws by which their formal acts of worship were to be regulated, he called to Moses out of the tabernacle, which had just been constructed at the foot of the mountain.

2. Speak unto the children of Israel. If any man . . . bring an offering—Hebrew Korban; it is the technical word for an offering to the Lord. The directions given here relate solely to voluntary or free-will offerings, those rendered over and above such as being of standing and universal obligation could not be dispensed with or commuted for any other kind of offering. Of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock—In Scripture three kinds of four-footed beasts—oxen, sheep and goats; and two of birds—turtle-doves and young pigeons—are appointed for sacrifices.

3. If his offering be a burnt sacrifice of the herd—The original term for burnt-offering (olah) comes from the root which signifies to ascend. It is so called because it was laid whole on the altar, and then, with the exception of the skin, being consumed by fire, the greatest part of it ascended toward heaven. A male—Males were required in most offerings, as the stronger sex, which takes precedence of the other. But females were allowed in peace-offerings, and were expressly prescribed in the sin-offerings of the common people. Without blemish—Free from bodily faults, either of defect or redundancy. Of his own voluntary will. At the door—Where the altar of burnt-offering was. If the sacrifice was most holy, he entered by the northern; if less holy, by the southern gate. Next he placed it so as to face the west, or the most holy place, in order thus literally to bring it before the Lord.

4. Shall put his hand upon the head—That is, both his hands. This meant transmission and delegation, and implied representation; so that it really pointed to the substitution of the sacrifice for the sacrificer. Hence it was always accompanied by confession of sin and prayer. It was to be done "with one's whole force;" as it were, to lay one's whole weight upon the substitute. Shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him—To provide a covering whereby he may be hidden, and sheltered from the anger of God for his sin. The power to make expiation—that is, to cover an unholy man from before the holy God, or to cover the sinner from the wrath of God, is attributed to the blood of the sacrificial animal, only so far as the soul lives in the blood, and the soul of the animal when sacrificed takes the place of the human soul. When God, therefore, said, "I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls" (chapter xvii, 11), and thus attributed to the blood of the sacrificial animals a significance which it could not naturally possess, this was done in anticipation of the true and perfect sacrifice which Christ, the Son of man and God, would offer in the fullness of time through the holy and eternal Spirit, for the reconciliation of the whole world.

5. He shall kill the bullock—If we take the text of Leviticus in its most obvious meaning as our guide, the person who brought the sacrifice had to slay it. It is most likely that the duty devolved on the sacrificer, but that he could employ a deputy who might be a priest or not. In the public sacrifices, and on certain peculiar occasions in later times, the priests or the Levites were appointed to do it. Before the Lord—That is, in immediate view of the place where his presence was especially manifested. The worshiper could come no further than the altar. "The altar," says Gibson; "was the people's place of meeting with God." Priests . . . shall bring the blood—With the blood began the exclusively priestly functions. Sprinkle . . . round about upon the altar—In all burnt, trespass, and peace-offerings the blood was thrown directly out of the vessel or vessels in which it had been caught, the priest going first to one corner of the altar and then to the other, and throwing it so that each time two sides of the altar were covered. Any blood left after these two "gifts," as they were called (which stood for four), was poured out at the base of the altar. We associate blood with death. The Jews, on the contrary, associated it with life. An illustration of this will be seen in Leviticus xvii, 11-14, especially these words, repeated again and again: "The life of the flesh is in the blood." The idea of death was in the killing of the animal; and the sprinkling of the blood upon the altar meant the dedication to God of a life which had been reached through death. "Dead unto sin"—such was the idea connected with the slain animal. "Alive unto God"—such was the idea connected with the sprinkling of the blood upon the altar. Thus, while penitence is the prominent feature of the presentation and killing, faith is prominent in the sprinkling of the blood.

6. He shall flay the burnt-offering—The offerer skinned the animal, and the skin was the perquisite of the officiating priests. Lange says: "With the slaying the life departs, while the skin goes the old appearance of life, under the conventionally commanded division disappears also the old figure of life, in the burning disappears the substance of the body itself. Only the blood, the soul, does not disappear, but passes through the purifying process of sacrifice, and goes hence into the invisible, to God." Cut it into his pieces—To wit: the head, the fat, and inwards, and legs. Signifying the laying open to the eye of God of the inmost being of the offerer.

7, 8. Sons of Aaron . . . put fire upon the altar—Supply the perpetual fire with fuel. The fire was originally kindled from heaven, and was not suffered to go out. The priests, not the offerer, attended to the fire and the arrangement of the slain victim on the altar. Lay the parts, the head, and the fat—The pieces were first confusedly thrown, and then arranged upon the fire.

9. Inwards . . . legs . . . wash in water—When the blood was disposed of, the skin removed, and the animal cut into pieces, the sacrificer, or his assistant, washed the entrails and feet. In the case of a burnt-offering, all the pieces were then taken to the altar and salted in accordance with the command, "with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt." It is said that the salting took place on the slope of the altar. Priest shall burn all on the altar—According to the strict meaning of the Hebrew, as shown in the name by which the burnt-offering was commonly called, signifying that which ascends, as well as in the verb uniformly applied to the act of burning on the altar, the flesh was spoken of not as destroyed by burning, but as sent up in the fire like incense toward heaven. It was in this way that the believer confessed the obligation of surrendering himself, body, soul, and spirit, to the Lord of heaven and earth, who had been revealed to him. Offering made by fire—Thus the sacrifice consumed by a fire which had originally come down from God himself—not by strange fire—would ascend "for a sweet savor unto the Lord." Sweet savor unto the Lord—We need no other commentary on this than the words of the Apostle Paul in Romans xii, 1: "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." There we have not only a commentary on the old burnt-offering, but a suggestive presentation of the difference between the old one and that which is required in the new covenant. "Present your bodies" (as distinguished from the bodies of bulls or of goats) "a living sacrifice" (as distinguished from the slain sacrifice of the old covenant), "holy" (there we have the significance of the separation of the parts, and the cleansing of the inwards), "acceptable unto God" (the sweet savor of Leviticus i, 9), "which is your reasonable service" (as distinguished from the symbolical service of the old economy). No other exposition of the symbolism of the burnt-offering is needed than these striking words.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

God leaves it to man whether he will worship him or not, but himself decides how that worship shall be rendered.

Man must suffer for his sin, either in person or by substitute.

The Christian's atonement is the Lamb of God; but it is his duty to bring his "burnt-offering"—his own body daily mortified and offered up in the flames of devotion to God. (Romans xii, 1.)

Obedience, self-surrender, consecration, are still "a sweet savor" unto the Lord.

Mansfield Female College.

To the Members of the Louisiana Conference—

BRETHREN: Please allow me to address you in behalf of the interests of this institution. You are doubtless aware of the change in the administration. On coming into the management of the college, I desire to gain the confidence and earnest support of the brethren of the Conference, without which all my efforts would be in vain. So far, I have been cordially welcomed in your midst, and greatly encouraged by the interest manifested on the part of the brethren of this district. It is necessary to secure the vigorous co-operation of every member of this Conference in sustaining and advancing this college to its highest point of success. If every member of the Conference would send but one pupil, a great work would be done to build up the institution, and it would at once be placed in a flourishing condition. The president will do his part, and put forth all his energies in the work; but he can not do everything. On account of the limited time he can not visit all the places desired. Then some of the District Conferences have already been held, and some are to be held upon the same days at a distance from each other. I shall put forth every effort to increase patronage; but I need the united support of the Conference, which I hope to obtain on account of the abiding interest of its members in this institution. This is the only female college in the Conference, and its interests are too great and too important to the church to be allowed to languish. Here is a massive brick structure, well adapted to the purpose, surrounded with a campus not surpassed in beauty by any female college in the whole connection. The surrounding buildings afford enlarged facilities for the work of the college. The music department is well supplied with new instruments of the best make. Here is an extensive library and apparatus, both chemical and philosophical. The faculty will be composed of experienced teachers of reputation, so that the facilities for advanced instruction will meet the highest demand. It is proposed to enlarge the curriculum, so as to embrace the department of industrial arts and all branches of woman's work.

Surely, then, the members of the Conference and Methodists throughout the State ought to support this institution and work for its advancement. Will not every preacher at once see what can be done within his charge by way of sending pupils here. This certainly is not too much to ask, and you will not think the less of me for making the request. I desire to obtain at once the address of all persons who have daughters to educate, and I entreat every preacher and friend of the institution to send me a list of all parties within their knowledge, as I can not otherwise obtain the desired information. The college opens on Wednesday, September 19. Between this and that time I shall visit all the places I can reach, where there is a possibility of patronage. I am in earnest in regard to this institution, in love with the work; and, in co-operation with the friends of the institution, there is no doubt of large success. Those who are closely associated with this institution say that the present prospect is better than it has been for five years. Now for a grand rally on the part of the friends of the institution! Give to the president and the college your prayers, your sympathy, your aid in securing patronage, and great success will crown our united efforts in advancing Christian education within the bounds of the Conference. I shall be happy to receive communications from the brethren, giving me all necessary information to assist me in the difficult work I have in charge.

A. D. M'VOY,
President.

Woman's Work.

Again the claims of the Woman's Department of Church Extension are presented, and some reasons why the work should be connectional. The scarcity of parsonages proves that some other method should be tried instead of the old plan of each charge building its own parsonage unaided. In God's church especially the strong should help the weak. A community of feeling awakens an interest in and appreciation of the necessity for parsonages. This is already proven by the unusual stir throughout the church, and the general revival on the subject of parsonages since this movement was inaugurated. One of our presiding elders said: "One encouraging feature in his district is, a greater interest is manifested in parsonages for their own use since the district secretary of Woman's Department of Church Extension has been at work."

The small amounts, gained from time to time for building parsonages, are often diverted from their intended use before the necessary sum is obtained. These sums, placed in the hands of an association, go out to help others, and they will give help in return: and the hope of getting help stimulates some to build. Rev. E. C. Stanley writes of a charge in Montana aided by Woman's Department of Church Extension: "The preacher at Boulder has a comfortable home, result of donation by your Board. The preacher could not live at that place without it. He could not stand to pay the rent—would have to abandon his post; and it would not have been built but for that $100." A brother in Indian Territory, whom this organization helped out of a most trying position, writes: "The $200 was truly a benediction to us. You have no idea how happy I am. We have a delightful home. I wish you could see it. God bless you in your noble work!" Valuable property is sometimes obtained at a reduced price by timely aid. Valuable property is sometimes sacrificed for the want of a little assistance. Those charges having Parsonage Societies feel free to ask aid of the Board of Church Extension. Aid has been given to the building of twenty-four parsonages. In places where parsonages are being built the adult membership fee is fifty cents, and twelve and a half cents the membership fee for children. The fifty per cent. due the Mississippi Conference is given by the Board to the building of these parsonages. If the entire church would enter this work, how quickly needy places would be supplied, entailing such a small individual sacrifice. The rent now paid out for parsonages would be saved to the church, and valuable property would be secured, affording permanent good. Sending out reports periodically advertises the needs of the ministers. When actual and pressing wants are made known to the church, a response is cheerfully made. A district secretary writes of a minister who lived in the drouth-impoverished parts of Texas: Said the faithful man: "I have gone hungry to bed one hundred nights this year." His people were poor, and suffered, too, from the drouth. Many affecting presentations of need could be given.

By correlating the local aid societies on the circuits with the connectional work, and having a Parsonage Society at the place where the parsonage is located, and some person at each charge to superintend a sub-auxiliary where a full organization can not be effected, the advantage of the home interest will be very materially enhanced. The monthly visits of the leaflets, inciting to active work of various kinds, and calling for reports of what has been accomplished, will surely awaken zeal and kindle enthusiasm which will be felt at home as well as abroad. One large circuit hopes to adopt this plan. To quote from a gifted one, and one accustomed to society work: "Each exists and subsists alone, which fact is necessarily the death-knell." As a society, the hour of retiring is the one in which we remember this work in prayer. Do we properly estimate the value of concert of prayer? Do we hinder "the day of God's power" by the weakness of our faith?

This connectional work is another link in the chain that binds our great church. The more interests we hold in common, the greater will be the love for the Master's cause and for all coworkers. As there is beautiful harmony among the myriads of stars, and the same unerring hand guides and controls the various interests of the church, they, too, may move on grandly, each aiding the other in its mission of the earth's redemption. As is the home, so is the nation; as is the home church, so is the universal church. Hear what our great missionary, Dr. Y. J. Allen, says: "It can not be too strongly insisted on that he contributes most to the civilization and conversion of the world who contributes most to the right government of his own people." He also said "that the time might come when we may change attitude with China, and missionaries from the Celestial Empire be sent to us to revive the once-possessed (but now lost) power of the gospel of Christ." We are so nearly in sight of all heathendom that it may be well to remember "the Christian looks to the Bible as the great standard of truth and duty, but the world's Bible is the Christian himself." How much we could improve the sermon of the church in the home land! Its representatives in other climes "have been permitted to see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God;" and how beautifully do they shine forth amid their dark surroundings!—are truly "a peculiar people."

Cultivate the home field, from whence cometh supplies of men, women and money.

This work is a beautiful combination of the home and foreign interest, and is conducive to equilibrium of character, which, by its fruits, gives evidence of loyalty to Christ and his church. Engaging in all the lines of work, bringing the individual in contact with suffering humanity, who are hungering for human sympathy, would call forth loving echoes from hearts made congenial by the angelic touch of Christian love. We would be more appreciative of the needs of the distant heathen, and would more lovingly sympathize with our brave ones who labor among them. This home missionary work would develop and put in practice much good that lies dormant in the hearts of our people. There are hearts that burn for those around them. This opens the way, and a welcome is prepared among our unfortunate kindred. The poor are receiving the Word gladly. I have seen responses where efforts have been made that plainly show the leadings of God. A Sunday-school was organized in a grove, and began its itinerancy by going to the dwelling, and afterwards to another dwelling, as an accessible point for the attendance of pupils of two secular schools. The teachers, who were females and members of the Sabbath-school, gave some attention during the week to the preparation of the lesson by the children. Clothing, as well as books, were supplied. I had occasion on one Sabbath to attend to an infant class. One little motherless girl, with an interesting face, knew nothing about the lesson. In vain did I endeavor to arouse her interest. Finally I asked her if she knew any little prayer. She replied, "No." I then asked her if she ever heard, "Now I lay me down to sleep," etc. Her countenance lightened, and, with a smile, she said, "Yes." I requested her to ask her father to teach her that prayer, and ask him to let her kneel beside his knee and pray every night. One said, "The father doesn't know it himself." The father and children are at present members of the Sunday-school, which has located at the church, although they have to walk some distance.

We will find Christ among the poor lovingly revealed to our own hungry hearts. Like the Pharisee, we seem to be thankful that we are not as these publicans who "are in reach of the gospel." We, too, are in reach of the gospel, but we are preached to Sabbath after Sabbath, and exhorted and entreated for successive days; and yet with all this nursing have we the spirit of Christ sufficiently to go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in? Individuals have and may perish by the thousand, and nations may crumble, but God will preserve his church, bought with such precious blood. What are we, as individual members, doing to prevent this beautiful country from being numbered with the nations that forget God, and having him say to us, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof"? Has not our beloved church, with all its boasted achievements, gained impetus enough to propel it to a loftier standard and the taking on of other means for soul-saving, which is really economy instead of thriftless expenditure, dividing labor and adding strength to the individuals composing the whole, thus enabling it to press forward with greater force in its pioneering, and leading others, as helpers, in gaining a lost world for Christ, who placed a higher estimate upon fallen humanity than we are wont to do?

Woman's Missionary Convention.

This meeting was held in Alexandria, La., June 22-25, inclusive. While the attendance was not very large, good feeling pervaded every session, and we parted feeling that each individual had been benefited.

The reports from the different parts of the State show an increase of interest. Seventeen new societies are reported. Among our best workers are several juvenile societies, one of which has collected more than one hundred dollars since last July. The treasurer's report shows an increase of about $400 over last year's report. Delhi was selected as the place to hold the next convention. We were very kindly assisted by the pastor, Rev. B. F. White, and cordially entertained by the citizens.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. E. J. Fullilove, Keachi, La.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. B. Foster, Shreveport La.; treasurer, Mrs. S. B. McCutcheon, Shreveport, La.; recording secretary, Miss L. Paxton, Keachi, La.; auditress, Mrs. P. Younie, Shreveport, La. District secretaries: Shreveport district, Miss E. M. Logan, Mansfield, La.; New Orleans district, Mrs. M. M. Anvray, 310 St. Andrew street, New Orleans; Alexandria district, Mrs. Tate, Alexandria, La.; Delhi district, Mrs. J. D. Harper, Delhi, La.; Homer district, Mrs. J. A. Parker, Ruston, La.; Opelousas district, Miss Mary Goodale, Alexandria, La.

WHITTINGTON CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: In obedience to the appointment of Bishop Keener, at the last session of the Mississippi Conference, we (myself, wife and little babe) packed up the small amount of this world's goods belonging to us, and set out for Whittington charge. After a journey of 100 miles over rivers and creeks and rough roads, we reached our work in good condition. There being no parsonage on this work, we began at once to look for a house in which to dwell. Very soon we met with a good brother who the Lord had blessed with more houses than he could occupy, and at once he opened up his heart and gave us possession of a good home for the year, free of rent or charge of any kind; and the good people of the circuit gave what they could of their pittance in furnishing the house and shipping us up for housekeeping. There are five churches on this charge, averaging more than a 100 members each, many of whom are aglow with the love of God. We have ten Sabbath-schools, teaching about 250 children. Prayer meetings are kept up tolerably well, and everything seems to be moving on nicely. I have just closed my first protracted meeting with good success. Seven accessions, ten or twelve conversions, and a general awakening and moving up in the church. Bros. Boone and Cox were with us, and preached with power. The ADVOCATE is not forgotten. Old subscribers nearly all renewed; five new names forwarded, and I think more to follow. May the good work now begun go on, and the fire continue to burn until Satan be banished from our midst and Christ reign supreme.

R. A. BRELAND.

STONEWALL, Mississippi.

DOWNSVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Downsville has been visited with a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord—a most gracious and powerful season. Our meeting continued just one week, and the blessed influence of the meeting is permeating the whole surrounding country. Church quickened into renewed life; many precious souls groaning after perfect love, and quite a number stood in response to a proposition, professing to have entered into this most precious experience. Eighteen persons were received into full fellowship in the church, and about forty passed from death unto life. Glory to the name of Jesus!

We were assisted by Bro. G. A. Mandeville; our beloved presiding elder, Rev. R. Randle; our young local preacher, C. F. Staples; Rev. L. L. Pickett, of Dangerfield, Texas, and later in the meeting by the father and two brothers of the writer. How near heaven such an oasis? Upon the last night of the meeting the pastor's heart was made to overflow with gratitude, and a sense of unworthiness intensified, by a proposition from some kind friends to pay off last year's indebtedness to him; and a response of $90 of an indebtedness of $111, and the remaining $21 referred to safe hands. God bless the dear people!

ED. B. GALLOWAY.

SALTILLO, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: On July 6 we started a protracted meeting at this place. Bro. W. D. Bass did the preaching and managing of the meeting. Resulted in a glorious revival in the church. Backsliders reclaimed, denominational prejudice overruled by the grace of God; twenty-odd conversions. Had ten accessions to my charge since Conference. Just starting into my protracted meeting. God be praised!

The Prohibition Convention.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The convention of non-partisan prohibitionists at the Alexandria meeting, last year, decided to hold the next convention about the middle of August, but left to its Executive Committee to determine the precise date, the locality and basis of representation.

Having duly considered the matter, it has been determined to hold a three-day's session in Monroe, on August 22-24, and that each parish shall be entitled to twice as many delegate as it has members in the House of Representatives. In addition, each member of the State and Parish Executive Committees shall be ex-officio a delegate, and every church, Sunday-school and temperance organization in Louisiana is entitled to representation. A cordial invitation is extended to each Union of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to send one or more of their members as delegates to this convention.

A committee selected from the leading citizens of Monroe will have charge of the entertainment of delegates and the well-established reputation of this beautiful city for hospitality is full guarantee that they will leave nothing to be desired in this direction.

Such arrangements as are possible will be made with the railroad companies for reduced fares, and timely announcements thereof made.

Every possible effort will be made to secure a full attendance, and distinguished speakers from this and other States will, it is believed, render the occasion one of unusual interest.

In conclusion, we repeat from the announcement of last year "that this is only a wave of that non-partisan prohibition movement that is striving so mightily in every Southern State, strictly within the lines of present political organizations, and which aims to draw to itself all persons of every party, creed, sex and race who can see no good reason why the normal rate of taxation should be increased four-fold in order that a mere handful of men may be protected in selling poison to the rest, and who propose to make this 'a government of the people, for the people and by the people,'" instead of in the language of Canon Wilberforce, "a government of the whisky traffic, for the whisky traffic and by the whisky traffic."

The press of the State is respectfully requested to copy this announcement.

WILMOT-H. GOODALE, Chairman.

J. W. NICHOLSON, Secretary.

From Our Mission Rooms.

BY SECRETARY I. G. JOHN.

Rev. H. D. Hogan, reporting the work in Council Grove district, Western Conference, says: "The charges report 100 accessions since Conference. There have been quite a number added to the church this quarter." A good work for a sparse, but growing population.

Rev. J. L. Lynch, reporting the work on Hensley circuit, Western Conference, says: "I try to preach two and three times every Sunday. Yesterday I preached three times, and traveled thirty miles by private conveyance." A strong buggy or a horse and saddle furnishes the usual traveling conveyance of the Western preacher. If in a timbered country, an open-top buggy has an advantage. In narrow roads the limbs of trees soon demoralize the top. Thirty miles over rough roads, and three sermons, is good work for an able-bodied preacher.

We often have letters from young preachers making inquiries about the Western work. We reply: "If you are willing to accept hard work, large circuits, meagre pay, in order to lay the foundations of the church in a land which will one day be the home of a great people, go West, and you will find such a field." Others ask: "To what part of the West do you advise us to go?" We answer; "Go where you are needed. Write to the Bishops in charge of the West. They are informed as to the needs of the work, and know how to inform themselves as to your fitness for the field." Another writes: "If I go West, I am anxious to preach, but I have some means that I wish to invest." Answer: "If you are going out to invest, you will want rich land at a low price, with good title, accessible to market. Every land agent you meet will say he can show you the spot. Before you look at the land, be very careful to look at the agent."

Bro. J. L. Kennedy, presiding elder of the San Paulo district, Brazil, has been down for three weeks with malarial fever. He is now at work, and rejoices at evidences that the Master is with him and his fellow-laborers. Referring to the Expositor Christar, the monthly organ of our church published in the Portugese language, he says: "It is having its influence for good, and will be felt more and more." He adds: "I wish all the papers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, would exchange, whether they can read it or not. Its editor could read their papers, and great good would result to Brazil. Would it not be a comfort to any religious editor to know that the divine truth he sought to sound through his columns in the United States was reverberating also in a strange tongue over the hills and valleys of Brazil? By exchanging, he may sit on the tripod at home and speak loudly to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death. His voice may be heard in the Land of the Holy Cross, from the Amazon on the north to the Parana on the south. Will he speak?" We hope the editors will heed this appeal. They will help Bro. Kennedy in furnishing a good paper to his readers. It will bring our church at home in closer sympathy with the church in the mission field. It will aid in preserving the connectionalism of the church from its religious centers at home to the broad circumference of the mission field. Bro. J. L. Kennedy's address is San Paulo, Brazil.

Right here let me say if any of the old friends of our missionaries would write them a kind, Christian letter, now and then, it would help them. We will furnish the address of any of our missionaries to those who wish to write. Bro. Kennedy reports a revival at the District Conference, at Piracicaba. For the first time possibly in Brazil, penitents were invited to the "mourner's bench." At times, fifteen or twenty presented themselves. "Some fifteen professed religion." He adds: "Bro. Farboux, on the sick list, came up to rest, but he would preach, talk, exhort, sing and pray. How a revival stirs the heart of a Methodist preacher the world over?"

Giving and Worship.

BY GEORGE W. CARLE.

The moment religion begins to comprise our life, the moment our life begins to be religion, we begin to give. Imparting, bestowing is the essence of Christianity. It is a necessity of our religious vitality. It supplies our own inward need. True, we do not give aid to the needy and comfort to the distressed for the purpose of cultivating holy graces within ourselves, or, if we do, we have poor success; our giving is the fruit of those graces. And yet, like other fruits, it carries the seed also, hidden in its heart. So our benevolence grows, and except it bear fruit it will not grow. It may be covered with blossoms and redolent with perfume; but the seed of increase is only to the yield of ripened fruit.

But there is another sort of giving, also necessary to our spiritual life and growth. It is not a benevolent ministration to needs, but a tribute of love to love and excellence, a testimonial of reverence or delight. And so we give, and are commanded to give, our gifts to God, who has no needs, and to whom we can give nothing that he has not first given to us. These fruits of our hearts, too, carry their seed within them, and give back to us their own increase. This is why the spirit and activities of beneveolence are not and can not be the whole of religion. It requires also the spirit and activities of worship.

For we need to love God, and love is a very cultivable thing. It is transplantable also. Wheever we willingly give what we prize, there our affections follow, take new root and grow. Even our gifts of mere time and attention have this effect in degree. Be a man's treasure what it may, wheresoever it be transported there will his heart follow. Pleasant intercourse with the object of affection cultivates love. And the nobler, the more profitable the pleasure it yields, and the wider number of our perceptions and faculties that it delights, the finer will be love's response to its cultivation. So worship is made an intercourse with God, pleasant and full of delights to every perception and faculty whose enlistment may help us—not to materialize, but to realize, our God, his personality, presence and perfections. By giving a holiness to joy and beauty, worship emphasizes the joy and beauty of holiness.

But why is there a need, as well as a must, that we love God? We come again, as we ought in every lesson from Exodus, upon the Ten Commandments. For our need to love God, and hence our great need of worship, is, that the more we realize—not materialize, but realize—and love him of whose nature the Ten Commandments are a reflection, the easier and lighter will be the yoke and burden of those Ten Commandments, until at length they count as less than nothing—an adornment—a delight; and, outrunning God's commands, we reach beyond them, and embrace by choice his yet higher precepts. Let the mere moralist beware how he neglects worship.

We do not only need to worship, we need to perform public and congregational worship. It is of the very nature of all spiritual profits and pleasures that the more, and the more widely, they are shared, the more they multiply. We need each other in the worship of God. For one thing, we need all community of worship can do for us to keep our religion—which is our life—from the blight of individualism. Our religion is not only and entirely a private matter between each of us and his God. There are priceless results of religion and of worship that we can not get by ourselves, and our fellowmen can not get without us. In public worship it is not good for man to be alone; he needs woman; woman needs man; and both need their fellow-men and women.

How willingly God's religion, especially his worship, which includes the ministration of his Word, leans upon all the arts and industries of civilization! Religion was never intended to displace and supersede, but to comprise and absorb them. She accepts them all as necessary parts of her work. These activities must all go on in order for the ministration of the word of salvation to go on. How absurd—I am almost tempted to say, how cowardly—it is for us, as we sometimes do, to assume that the demands of church and missionary work are a bottomless deep into which we could pour all our wealth and impoverish ourselves! If missions controlled all the wealth of the world, they would still, for their own sake, have to keep every useful and beautiful industry and art a-going.

Times were hard in Moses' day. Very few of the great instruments and vehicles by which truth and right now spread and prevail had then been developed, much less cheapened. So the tabernacle and its construction fairly stands to us for all the modern scheme of religious activities; for it cost so large a proportion of the public wealth that, if such a proportion of the wealth merely of church members were available now for missions, the lack in that field would, for the first time since the days of the apostles, be the lack of workers, and not our present universal, woeful lack of funds. There is one kind of man you never saw, a man to whom you could point, and say: "That man was rich, but gave all his wealth to home and foreign missions, and now is poor, and wishes he had it back."—Sunday-School Times.

Faith, though weak, is still faith a glimmering taper, if not a glowing torch; but the taper may give light as truly as the torch, though not so brightly.—H. Muller.

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Briefs.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The Southwestern Methodist says that in the last six years "our own church here in St. Louis has increased 80 per cent." in membership.

How often we forget that "a man may have a pure purpose, and yet do a great injury"! How apt we are to think that "a clean heart implies an infallible judgment"!

Six-tenths of our words are from the Anglo-Saxon; and the English Bible contains, perhaps, a larger proportion of Anglo-Saxon words than any other book! Inference: If you would know the English language, you must know the English Bible.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Louisiana Conference held its annual meeting not long since. The year has been prosperous. The members in the society have increased 535 during the year. The total amount collected was $1,160 29. The expenses incurred were $35 35. The total amount remitted to the treasurer of the Woman's Board at Nashville was $1,130 44. Well done for Louisiana!

There are a great many things we desire to understand and can not for want of opportunity to study them. There are a great many things that we desire to understand and can not for want of capacity to take them in. But this sentence from the Interior we have learned in two years to understand most thoroughly:

The religious newspaper has to mind its p's and q's. Shaking hands with people who have sore thumbs is nothing to the delicacy of touch required to avoid a grimace or a sharp complaint.

The Watchman, of Boston, says: "The greater our colleges grow, the less they do for the gospel;" and witnesses Harvard, Yale and Johns Hopkins. If it is so that those great institutions are doing less for Christ as they grow larger and more influential in their several communities, it is a matter that should produce profound regret; but we are sure that our Southern colleges are not growing in that bad way. We believe that their influence for good is increasing with their growth. A college rightly manned will not do less for the gospel because it grows in prosperity.

"The grace of God bestowed upon the churches of Macedonia," is a perpetual supply depot for preachers who desire to preach on liberality. We present our preachers with a "sketch" clipped from an exchange. Now is a good time to preach on the subject.

The churches of Macedonia had ten excellent points in giving:

1. They gave themselves to the Lord.
2. Then to those who needed help "by the will of God."
3. They gave of their own accord.
4. Out of their deep poverty.
5. In trial of affliction.
6. With abundance of joy.
7. According to their power.
8. Yea, and beyond their ability.
9. With an abounding liberality.
10. Earnestly entreating the opportunity as a favor ("grace") to themselves.

A Bishop on His Travels.

MR. EDITOR: Having a few hours to wait here for a west-bound train over the Northern Pacific, I will send you a little "copy" for your columns. With the mercury far up in the nineties, and the day of publication near at hand, an editor is less critical in taste, and more grateful for anything to fill up "the forms." My original plan was to spend Sunday last in this city, but a telegram, announcing a meeting of the College of Bishops in Nashville for the tenth instant, enabled me to enjoy a few more days at home.

The selection of a successor to Dr. Candler, assistant editor of the Nashville Advocate, was the occasion of our meeting, as also a special meeting of the Book Committee. Emory College laid violent hands on our gifted young editor, and at some possible personal sacrifice, but in obedience to what he regards the call of God, he takes the headship of his alma mater, from whose halls he graduated less than twenty years ago. Of his successor you have heard before this writing. He was born in the itinerancy, is vigorously orthodox, catholic in spirit, broad in connectional sympathy, and has some journalistic experience. Dr. Fitzgerald will find him a genial associate and faithful co-laborer.

I noticed the usual business activity in the Publishing House. Every press is running full time, and every desk is busy. The Agent is enterprising larger things as the church increases his volume of business. Some recent publications no only do great credit to the mechanical skill and taste of the House, but are an honor to Southern Methodist scholarship. It gave me special pleasure to learn that "Summers' Systematic Theology," so ably edited by Dr. Tigert, is having a liberal sale. Into every preacher's library it must surely go, and ought to find a place in every Methodist home. It is the rich, ripe, precious fruit of the old Doctor's laborious life and consecrated heart. The first edition of Dr. Fitzgerald's "Life of John B. McFerrin" was already exhausted. A charming book is that biography of the great Commoner. Few lives were ever so crowded with vivid incidents and varied experiences. The author had a grand subject, and well sustained his reputation as a master delineator of character. The full-length portrait of that great personality could scarcely have been more skillfully drawn.

A severe critic of Thomas Carlyle said of him that he had written "many things, but not much." No such judgment could be passed upon the facile and versatile pen of our voluminous chief editor. He writes much. By the way, I noticed an attractive shelf in the House devoted to the Doctor's various volumes. The books are different in size, but are bound in only two colors—both very bright. The author's taste on the outside happily corresponds with the popular judgment of the sparkling pages within.

From the mission rooms I learned that the receipts from the week of prayer and self-denial this year have passed beyond twenty-five thousand dollars, and will reach thirty. With this amount to start another missionary year, and the going out of several new missionaries to each of our foreign fields, we ought to raise three hundred thousand dollars by the close of the Annual Conferences. Less than this will not meet the emergencies upon us.

During the afternoon, I called to see a young Mississippi missionary who sails in a few weeks for China to take work in Miss Lochie Rankin's school. She had just that morning passed her final examination, and been accepted by the Woman's Board of Missions. Knowing her well from early girlhood, and her father and venerable grandfather also, I had great pleasure in giving her cordial endorsement for the work. No more conscientious and laborious missionary will we have in this field than our gentle, modest, affectionate Mary McClellan. May the Father's blessing be upon the sweet heroic daughter of the church!

On bidding the brethren good-by for a long western trip, Dr. Barbee handed me a new book, just from the press, to entertain the hours of travel. It was entitled, "Life Work;" and, opening it, I found a volume from the pen of Rev. John Pipes, of the Louisiana Conference. Before retiring to my berth in the Pullman that night, I had well-nigh reached the closing chapter. His Louisiana brethren especially will welcome this book. He writes out of long experience and varied observation. He has the wisdom of age, and a sage. Though superannuated technically, he is active with brain and pen. Bishop McTyeire contributes an appreciative introduction.

Leaving Nashville at half-past seven o'clock, Tuesday evening, I reached Chicago, Wednesday morning, at eleven. The crops all through the "Prairie State" never promised greater abundance. No farmer can find apology for abusing the times or the seasons. The early and later rain have assured not only seed for the sower and bread for the eater, but millions of bushels for the speculator to "corner." It was the time of hay harvest and the display of new agricultural machinery. As the groomed horses drew the great mower around the field, the rider seemed rather like one taking an outing than a farm hand at daily labor. We need such machinery and harvests in Mississippi and Louisiana. While the breath of new-mown hay floated in the car window, I began to muse on this proposition: The relation of grass to civilization. Some of your agricultural readers might study it to profit.

I had a few hours in Chicago, but the heat was too intense to admit of more exercise than securing railroad tickets and making a few purchases near the hotel. But the great union depots furnished food for reflection. Such surging tides of humanity! and of every color and nationality! To assimilate this heterogeneous mass is already straining to exhaustion the power of our social and governmental institutions. What will result if there is not some check put upon this eastern influx, the son of a prophet is not necessary to foretell?

En route from Chicago to St. Paul, on a vestibuled train, I had a young Buckeye for a traveling companion; at least, he occupied the berth over me in the Pullman. He was self-assertive, slangy, and seemed bent on "having a good time." After some hours of effort to engage me in conversation, he finally said: "Let us have a little game of draw to pass away the time." When informed that I did not know what was meant by a "game of draw," he wore an expression of mingled pity and contempt for my ignorance. And then I began to wonder why he should have assaulted me with such a proposition. I had on a regulation clergyman's vest, with white cravat and silk hat. My bearing and manner of conversation were such as became a gospel minister. Why, then, should this brusque Buckeye challenge me for "a game of draw"? I at last concluded that he had mistaken my ecclesiastical identity, supposing me to be one of those liberal preachers who enjoys an evening of "progressive euchre" with some worldly member of his church, and bids for popularity by dispensing with the gospel. Alas! for such cheap appreciation of the highest office in heaven or earth!

St. Paul has felt the fabled touch of Midas since I saw it sixteen years ago. It was then an unpretentious little city of 25,000 inhabitants. Now it has two hundred and twenty-five thousand; and its magnificent business blocks of brick and stone and palatial private residences will compare favorably with any city of the East. Here the Mississippi river is narrow, and the water very clear. I could scarcely realize this morning that it is the same mighty, turbid stream that rolls by your Crescent City, and in which the ships of all nations can ride. Near the city limits Hamline University is located—a well-endowed and successful institution, conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. But of these and other observations I may write at another time.

Thanks to the courtesy of Mr. C. H. Manship, the son of my old friend of the same name at Jackson, Miss., I have found favor in the eyes of Northern Pacific officials, and have secured reasonable rates and admirable accommodations for my trip to Montana.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

ST. PAUL, MINN., July 12, 1888.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have traveled over a thousand miles, and have just reached this city. I have found a cordial welcome here from Bro. Fleenor and his little flock. To-morrow I shall preach for them, and next week visit the Yellowstone Park, returning in time to preach at Helena on the Sabbath.

C. B. G.

BOZEMAN, MONT., July 14, 1888.

Mississippi Prohibition Convention.

BY C. G. ANDREWS, D. D.

This body met in the hall of the House of Representatives, in the State Capitol, Wednesday, July 18. Forty-three counties were represented. About three hundred delegated members were present, besides a great number who had come up of their own motion to note the progress of the cause so popular with the people, and so praiseworthy in its purposes. Representatives of very many classes were present: the planter and the politician, the merchant and the minister, the lawyer and the legislator, the judge and the mechanic, members of various churches, black people and white people, male and female—all sat down together, forgetting for the time being the questions which divided them, intent upon the one great purpose of stamping out forever the traffic in strong drink.

Hon. E. G. Peyton, of Copiah county, who for many years so worthily wore the ermine as chancellor of this district, was elected president of the convention, and wielded the gavel gracefully and effectively. E. L. Martin, editor of the New Mississippian, was chosen secretary, with Rev. J. B. Gambrell, editor of the Baptist Record, as assistant. Prohibitionists hope for success only through the blessing of Providence; so, in obedience to this principle, Rev. R. G. Porter, of the North Mississippi Conference (more familiarly known to your readers as "Gilderoy") was called upon, and most earnestly invoked the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit upon the deliberations of the body.

The Rev. Bishop C. B. Galloway, D. D., for many years the chairman of the State Executive Committee, sent a graphic letter, expressing regrets at his necessary absence, pledging continued consecration to the cause, but asking permission for the future to work only in the ranks on account of his pressing duties in the church. The Clarion-Ledger, the official paper of the State, in this week's issue, has this item: "A portrait and biographical sketch of Bishop Galloway, the recognized leader of prohibition in this State, will appear in next issue."

Quite an inclination toward a "third party" cropped out in the speeches and intercourse of certain delegates, but the overwhelming majority opposed any deliverance looking in this direction, and even the more zealous admitted that the proper time had scarcely come.

A resolution was offered, expressing gratification that the Scientific Education Bill, requiring that the injurious effects of alcohol upon the system be taught in the public schools, had passed both Houses of the last Legislature, and regretting that so salutary a measure had failed to become a law for want of the executive sanction. Quite an animated discussion followed. The impression prevailed that the bill had failed not because of objection to instruction on temperance in public schools, but because the bill in question was impracticable in some of its features. So, finally, the resolution was passed with the clause animadverting upon the governor removed. It was quite manifest that the great majority of the convention were indisposed to antagonize anybody, and were actuated only by the purpose of moving steadily forward with one grand aim—the extirpation of the saloon.

Complimentary resolutions were adopted in regard to Hon. Put. Darden, late Grand Master of the State Grange, who had been an efficient temperance worker.

Very honorable mention was also made of John H. Martin, late editor of the New Mississippian, expressing deep regret that the prohibition cause had sustained the loss of such faithful and effective services as was occasioned by the untimely death of this gifted young man.

The utmost harmony prevailed in the convention, and a platform, substantially the same as last year, was adopted. It seemed to be recognized that the same banner and declaration of principles, under which victories so steady and signal had been gained, should still float from the masthead.

The prospects of prohibition are very flattering. Everywhere that it has been tried the effects have been most salutary—commercially, socially and morally. Here, in the Capitol city, although the beer-shops have been closed only a little over a year, yet leading business men aver that Jackson has never been in so healthful a financial state. A prominent physician declares that he has never done so small a credit practice—the poor pay cash. Two sessions of the grand jury—one at Raymond, the other at Jackson—in their official reports congratulate the country upon the success of prohibition.

A very exciting contest is now pending in Lauderdale county. The whisky people are importing money and orators, and are putting forth their best efforts to place King Alcohol back upon the throne from which he was so effectually hurled two years ago. The temperance workers are thoroughly organized, and are determined by God's help to keep the heel of popular suffrage upon the neck of the remorseless, repulsive tyrant.

A contest is also pending in Yazoo county. By consent of both parties, Prohibs and Antis, the determination of the question is to be made by a preliminary election, in which only white men are allowed to vote. The Prohibs say that the question with them is no longer a mere matter of victory, but of how large, how convincing; how establishing a victory. They believe that they will bury the rum power so deeply that no effort at resurrection will ever be made.

Notes.

It was a most significant fact, that, on the very evening, at the Seashore Camp Meeting, that President Hamilton fully accepted the presidency of Centenary College, he raised before night two thousand and one hundred dollars toward the endowment of the college. It is a confirmation of a prophecy this paper made when first announcing his election. Let all the people lend a hand, and get their sons ready for Centenary, next September.

The Scripture which announces, "God was manifest in the flesh," introduces a subject which transcends every other subject of thought, while, at the same time, the fact stated brings the Divine Being within the range of human contemplation in the only way by which our feeble minds can take hold of the great subject. Paul says, "God hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." God in Christ can be understood because there he is revealed in his true relations!

This from an article in the New York Christian Advocate is worthy of the attention of every parent who reads this paper. The money expended in good literature for the children is one of the best investments that can be made and will be paying large dividends long after the parent is sleeping in the dust. The Advocate says:

> The parent who sends his son or daughter out into the world with a genuine love and appreciation of fine and noble literature has little cause to fear that vicious companionships will have power to draw them downward. They will gravitate to libraries and lecture-rooms; to churches and Sunday-schools, where they will be most likely to meet those of like tastes with themselves.

The revelation of God in Christ settles beyond all dispute, and forevermore, the question of God's relations to us and our relations to one another. The fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men are the great lessons of the incarnation. When the "Word became flesh," these two things were definitely determined. We know who God is, and we know where we are. The revelation of God in his fatherly relations with men is a most precious revelation, and Jesus, the Son of God, in human flesh, being indissolubly connected with our race, declares the brotherhood of men by a fact at once precious and potent—"We be brethren." "One is our Father, even God."

A writer in the Evangelist, commenting on the growth of the Presbyterian Church as evidenced by reports made at the late Centennial in Philadelphia, asks this pertinent question: "Is not the sole and simple secret of the degree of growth which we have enjoyed, to be found in the degree that we have proclaimed, not our distinctive dogmas, but the simple gospel of Jesus Christ?" We think that is the truth, not only as regards the Presbyterian, but as regards all the churches. The "simple gospel of Jesus Christ" preached with earnestness and in love is the only way to growth in the churches. It is well to remember, too, that preaching about the gospel is not always preaching the gospel. We may talk a great deal about Christ to the people without talking Christ.

What greater contrast in the supremest moment of life than this? Strauss said to his daughter:

> My daughter, your father has finished his course. You know his principles and views. He can not comfort you with the assurance of seeing you again. What your father has done will live forever; but his personality will forever cease to be. He must bow to the unchangeable law of the universe, and to that law he reverently says, "Thy will be done."

Paul said to Timothy:

> I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day.

Which character is preferable?

It delights us to read from Z. A. Parker, in the Alabama Advocate, the following:

> In looking over the last catalogue of the Southern University I find that institution placing the Bible in its course of instruction with a boldness and fullness that must be exceedingly gratifying to the church which fosters and supports it. In the Freshman, Sophomore, Junior and Senior years, also in the Master's Course, also in every year of the Scientific Course, also in the first, second and third year of the B. P. Course, the Bible is placed on an equality with Homer, Demosthenes, Horace, Livy, Tacitus, and other books. And why not? In this particular the Southern University stands far in advance of many colleges and universities designed for the education of young men under the control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.
> God is honoring that institution greatly, and it is simply because the institution is honoring him by placing his Word in the course of study. "Them that honor me, I will honor, saith the Lord."

Support for Centenary College.

In order to reach the highest efficiency in the work of education a college must have support in two ways. It must have students. It must have money coming from other sources than tuition fees. A college full of students without endowment can not meet the enlarging demands of the education of this present time. An endowed college without students amounts to nothing at all. Students and endowment are the two essentials needed by all our colleges. These two wants appeal to all our people in such a way that nearly everybody can contribute aid in making our schools successful. As a general rule, the poor people have the children to send, and the rich have the money to give.

Many of our people think that a school full of students needs no money above what is received in tuition fees. While such a state of affairs is good, it does not afford the means necessary to enlarge and perfect the facilities for a most thorough training. At best, tuition fees barely pay the running expenses of a college. There can be no hope of keeping up with improved methods and appliances and apparatus where dependence is placed entirely upon those fees. Sciences are continally being developed more and more. Philosophical and scientific intruments are continually being improved; and the college that would keep its students up even with the advance of improvement and discovery in this direction must have on hand a fund upon which to make drafts as these wants occur.

Just this much has induced the editor of the ADVOCATE to enter into hearty co-operation with President Hunnicutt and Agent Johnston, and others earnestly engaged in the work, for the endowment of Centenary College. We will endow it with students, and we will endow it with money. We are in position to know that many parents are already looking there for a school home for their boys. As to endowment with money, the fact of $4,000 having been secured at Seashore Camp Meeting is a strong pointer. Brother Methodists, the thing is going to be! Are you going to stand by and see this college grow into a most flourishing school, and not take part in the work and in the honor? Nay! You are going to help. Amen!

Yea! Yea! Yea!

CENTENARY'S ENDOWMENT.

MR. EDITOR: By the consent of the Jackson, La., congregation and the authority of Bishop Keener, I will spend two months in canvassing for Centenary College. This move, together with the $1,400 subscribed by the citizens of Jackson, indicates their deep interest in the success of the college. The tide is rising elsewhere. The people are awakening as never before, and the success of the endowment is assured. For the encouragement of the friends and workers I subjoin a list of amounts raised from various sources up to date, and, at Bishop Keener's suggestion, ask you to keep it in the ADVOCATE, adding to such amounts as may be subscribed until the $25,000 requisite is raised:

Bishop Keener	$ 100
Dr. J. E. Coker	100
Mrs. J. W. Taylor	100
H. C. Scarborough	100
Capt. J. N. Pharr's list	1,00
Citizens of Jackson, La.	1,400
Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt	500
Rev. R. Carradine	100
Peter James	1,000
Capt. J. N. Pharr	1,000
Rev. C. Keener	1,000
J. C. Grant	1,000

"I expect to make a thorough canvass of the Woodville district at once, and I earnestly solicit the aid of the brethren in bringing Centenary's home district to the front in this noble work. I will be glad to hear from any point where funds or patronage can be secured. Let me state in closing that, by a recent act of the Louisiana Legislature, the sale of liquor is prohibited within five miles of the college.

Centenary Stock Going up.

MR. EDITOR: One thousand more for Centenary at Seashore District Conference, and the promise of two or three boys. The tide is rising. May there be a flood!

Two hundred dollars were raised at the Jackson District Conference, making in all that I have raised to date fourteen hundred dollars.

BOOKS.

A TREATISE ON SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY. By Rev. R. C. Armstrong, of Northwestern Texas Conference. Publishing House of Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn. 71 pages. 20 cents.

The formidable title quadrates imperfectly with the size of this unpretending pamphlet, but the disappointment becomes agreeable when the purpose of the author to furnish simply an outline for theologues and lay readers is seen to be so judiciously executed. This little volume will be quite a help to our young preachers in understanding Watson, Pope and Summers, which, of course, they will eventually read.

NO. 13 STATE STREET. By David G. Adee. Cassell & Co., New York. For sale by Wharton & Bro., 3 Carondelet St., New Orleans. Price 50 cents.

JOHN B. FINCH, HIS LIFE AND WORK. Prepared by Mrs. John B. Finch and Frank M. Sibley, assisted by many eminent contributors. Nearly 600 pages, crown 8vo. Price $1 50. Sold by subscription (mail or agent). New York: Funk and Wagnalls.

The story of the life of John B. Finch is one that should interest old and young alike. The boy's struggle for an education; his experience as a teacher; his improvement of every opportunity and his dauntless courage, displayed in countless ways; the development of his natural power as a debater and orator; his early love, marriage and sorrow; the consecration to a life of advocacy of temperance principles; his great ability as an organizer, and his diplomatic skill as a peace-maker; his happy home-life with his last love and his boy, John; his rank and place in the hearts of his co-laborers; his sudden death (October 3, 1887), and the lamentations which followed—all these are simply, yet impressively told in the narrative.

Some of his famous speeches, which exhibit the qualities that gained for him his great reputation, are given in full in this book.

PERIODICALS.

There are other articles of value, among which we note, The Steppes of the Irtish, by George Kennan, and an illustrated article on, The Career of the Confederate Ram "Albemarle." Century Company, New York. Price $4.

It is the intrinsic merit above of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer that has gained for it great popularity for restoring the natural color of the hair.

Personals.

Dr. B. T. Kavanaugh, of the Kentucky Conference, died July 3. "He was a man of great learning and a scientist of wide fame."

Our correspondents will do us a great favor if they will send their contributions in an envelope. The editor and printers would rather see a moccasin than a "rolled manuscript."

A note from Rev. P. H. Dieffenwierth, a superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, now living near Clear Water Harbor, Fla., has this gratifying sentence: "It seems to me that I am becoming more familiar with the things that are not seen. There is a greater hungering and thirsting after a greater Christ-likeness. I have been graciously sustained in my grievous bereavement and increasing burdens and necessities." Bro. Dieffenwierth still preaches and holds prayer meetings as he has strength.

The catalogue of Centenary College, Jackson, La., has been received. The faculty is full. The president and professors are preparing to enter upon the most successful session since the war. Now let the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana get their boys ready to enter next September.

Rev. John Pipes and Rev. R. S. Trippett, two of the four members of the Louisiana Conference now living who were present at its organization, met in our office the other day, and talked something of old times.

Prof. Henry Drummond, the author of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," is said to be a "tall, slim, fair young man, with a trim moustache and well-fitting frock coat. Although so well known in scientific and religious circles, he is exceedingly modest in manner, a charm not always accompanying sudden notoriety."

If this paper should publish all that comes under the eye of the editor in shape of communications, letters, etc., there would be a rumpus raised in the church which twenty-five years of prudence and judgment would not allay. Be thankful, then, for a somewhat reticent editor, and give him the benefit of all the prayers you can spare.

The catalogue of the Port Gibson Female College, for 1888, has been received. This institution is under the patronage of the Mississippi Conference, and is successfully conducted by Rev. E. H. Mounger, and deserves the patronage of "the people called Methodists" who are in reach of it.

If the preachers in charge would send us church news once a quarter, everybody could keep up with everybody. Send short, crisp notes once a quarter, brethren.

Dr. John S. Martin, of the Baltimore Conference, and secretary of the last General Conference, died recently in Baltimore in the seventy-third year of his age. He was an able minister of the grace of God, and has gone to the reward of a life service.

Bishop Wilson left last week for his work in Japan and China. The prayers of the church go with him for his peace and the prosperity of his labors.

On account of the pressure of episcopal duties, Bishop Galloway has resigned the chairmanship of the Executive Committee of the Mississippi State Prohibition Convention.

We agree to a good many things said in "A Friendly Letter," which came to this office the other day, but we do not see how we can avail ourselves of its teachings except by regular gradations. This we have been trying to do and will so continue. As the author did not give his or her name, we cannot print the letter.

Hattiesburg High School.

The trustees of Hattiesburg High School solicit correspondence with some experienced and competent educator who desires to locate permanently and build up a first-class male and female school at this, one of the most eligible sites in Mississippi. They desire the school to open early in September. One commodious and well-arranged building, with ample grounds, already provided. The applicant must give satisfactory reference, and be a member in good standing in the Methodist Church. For further particulars address R. J. Collins, Secretary of Board of Trustees, Hattiesburg High School, Hattiesburg, Perry county, Miss.

We call attention to the advertisement of University School, Petersburg, Va., in another column. The twenty-fourth annual session of this school for boys begins the first Monday in October. For catalogue, address W. Gordon McCabe, Head Master.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time in Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

A KIND OF MEADOW-SWEET.

BY ROSE HAWTHORNE LATHROP.

Baby's wandering in the field,
Talking with the breezes,
Nodding to the daisy groups,
Laughing as she frets and stoops,
Tumbling when she pleases.
Big as ever she can wield
Is her lunch of posies,
Pulled off from their stalks, I fear,
By the crop, or by the ear,
Or by their yellow noses—
How they lend about her sweet
Toppling sunrise shoulders!
Glad they grew this very day
When Miss Baby goes their way,
While the great sun smoulders.
And she makes the place complete,
The sky looks bluer, surely;
Birds on all sides sing at once,
To praise her only, for the nonce,
Which she receives demurely.
A bee falls into a mistake,
And buzzes round her gold head;
Then down she sits among the stems
Where he can't find her, so he "hems!"
And "haws!" as though he scolded,
And darts away: but never'll wake
(Pray do the bees e'er slumber!)
To meet a flower like this one
He lulled to-day to-night on,
Among others without number.

—Wide Awake.

MR. EDITOR: As you were so kind as to publish my letter, it has encouraged me to write again. I have only missed Sabbath-school once this year, and that was on account of illness. I read my Bible every day and I am trying to be a good boy, but I very often fail. I shall keep trying until I succeed. I want to grow up to be a good, useful man. I have no little brothers or sisters to write to you about, but I have a cunning little nephew, ten months old, living with us, named for Rev. F. N. Parker. By the way, he paid our town a short visit last week. All were delighted to have him among us again. We love our new pastor, Rev. C. B. Carter, ever so much. He is as good and kind as he can be. He preached us little folks a splendid sermon on Children's Day in May. I enjoyed his sermon very much. Some things he said I shall try never to forget. Can any of the little cousins tell how often the word "spirit" is mentioned in the Old Testament, and in how many books of the Old Testament it is not mentioned at all? Wishing much success to the ADVOCATE and a long and prosperous life to the editor, I remain,

Your little friend,
HENRY HULL.

To Miss Daisy Lester, Atlanta, Miss.:

Having seen your questions in the ADVOCATE, I give you my opinion as I find it here and there. (1) The First Methodist Church was built in the City of New York and dedicated to God in the year 1768. (2) The first Methodist preacher was one Philip Embury, who emigrated to this country from Ireland in the year 1760. My mamma knows everybody in and around Atlanta. I suppose the graveyard was at Pleasant Grove Baptist Church, where she joined the church. I am ten years old and a member of the Sunday-school at Duck Hill, Miss.

N. B.—How many verses are there in the Bible?

From Two Points of View.

"Run out on the walk and see if your papa is anywhere in sight," said Mrs. Graves to her little son. The child obeyed, and presently returned saying, "Papa has just come around the corner; I am going to meet him." And away he ran, while Mrs. Graves went to put the oysters to stew.

The cat and dog, who had been reared together and were great chums, lay on the wolf-robe before the fireplace.

"How I do pity those poor creatures!" sighed the dog, as he stretched himself and yawned.

"Who?" said the cat, as she licked her left paw and rubbed her cheek with it.

"Human beings, to be sure," answered the dog.

"Why?" asked the cat. She was in a very laconic mood just then.

"Why, indeed!" echoed the dog; "reasons enough to be sure. Just think how terrible it must be to depend upon your eyes almost entirely for everything you know. Fully a minute (or at least fifty-five seconds) before our mistress asked about our master, I had scented his approach. I knew he was nearing home. Yet she and our little playfellow Willie were obliged to see him on the street before they knew he was coming. I don't believe they have any sense of smell at all."

"I am sure they have big enough noses," said the cat, rubbing her paw over her little pink pug.

"Then, too," continued the dog, "even when I have a bad cold and my keen scent is impaired, I can always hear his approach long before she does. Why the house would have been robbed the other night if I had been a poor human being instead of a fortunate brute."

"And how was that?" asked the cat.

"Oh! it was the time master was expected home on the midnight train. I was lying at the foot of the bed when I heard a sound below. I barked. 'Keep quiet! It is only your master,' said my mistress quite sharply; but I barked again, and ran out in the hall. I knew very well it was not my master below; my ear and my nose both told me a stranger was in the house. And sure enough, as I went down the stairs a man ran out of the front door which had been opened by removing the lock. Why, if I were a human being, I should never dare sleep a wink! They are the most defenseless creatures in the world. I pity them."

Later in the evening a friend dropped in to call upon Mr. Graves. "What intelligent eyes th is animal has!" the gentleman remarked as the dog sat looking in his face.

"Yes; he seems almost human sometimes," Mr. Graves replied. "It is a great misfortune such animals are denied the privilege of speech I pity them often."

"Humph!" said the dog as he walked away in disgust to where the cat was sitting. "Almost human indeed! I wonder who needs the most pity."

"It all depends on the point of view," said the cat. "Actually a dog told me one day he pitied me for being a cat; the idea!"—Wide Awake.

DOING AND BEING.—A young girl had been trying to do something very good, and had not succeeded very well. Her friend hearing her complaint, said:

"God gives us many things to do; but don't you think he gives us something to be, just as well?"

"O dear, tell me about being," said Marion, looking up. "I will think about being, if you will help me."

Her friend answered:

"God says, 'Be ye holy,' 'Be ye therefore perfect,' 'Be kindly affectioned one to another.' 'Be ye also patient.' 'Be ye thankful.' 'Be courteous.' 'Be ye not conformed to this world.' 'Be not wise in your own conceit.' 'Be not overcome of evil.'"

Marion listened, but made no reply. Twilight grew into darkness. The tea-bell sounded, bringing Marion to her feet. In the fire-light Elizabeth could see that she was very serious.

"I'll have a better day to-morrow. I see that doing grows out of being."

"We can not be what God loves without doing what he commands. It is easier to do with a rush than to be patient or unselfish or humble or just or watchful."

"I think it is," returned Marion.—Christian Guardian.

Carry religious principle into common life, and common life will lose its transitoriness. The world passeth away. The things seen are temporal. Soon business, with all its cares and anxieties, the whole "unprofitable stir and fever of the world," will be to us a thing of the past. But religion does something better than sigh and moan over the perishableness of earthly things. It finds in them the seeds of immortality.—John Caird.

THE WASHERWOMAN'S SONG.

Wring out the old, wring out the new,
Wring out the black, wring out the gray,
Wring out the white, wring out the blue—
And thus I wring my life away.

An occupation strange is mine;
At least it seems to people droll
That while I'm working at the line
I'm going, too, from pole to pole.

Where'er I go I strive to please,
From morn to night I rub and rub;
I'm something like Diogenes—
I almost live within a tub.

To merchants who vault and spring
In circuses I take a shine;
They make their living in the ring,
And by the wringer I make mine

My calling's humble I'll agree,
But I am no cheap cad to
As some folks are who sneer at me:
I'm something that will wash, you know.

I smile in calm, I strive in storm,
With life's difficulties I cope,
My duties cheerfully perform;
My motto: While there's life there's soap.

Wring out the old, wring out the new,
Wring out the blues, wring out the gray,
Wring out the white, wring out the blue—
And thus I wring my life away.

Family Economy in Germany.

As a people we have not learned the art of getting the most out of what we have. With our larger incomes and better opportunities we often enjoy far less of comfort and contentment than our foreign brethren, who with their limited resources have learned how to husband and to make the best of the little that falls to their lot. Those who have seen the inside of life in France and Germany know how true this is. I well remember how it impressed me in my first experience in Germany. Living in a private family, my breakfasts, which, though consisting only of the usual rolls and coffee, were nevertheless ample, were always brought to my room. With the coffee there came invariably a little jar of milk and some lumps of sugar. During the whole six months of my stay in that house, the number of lumps was never more nor less than five. An American lady living in another family in the same city was wont to aver her conviction that her landlady counted the grains of coffee for every potful she made. Every scrapful of food was utilized.

Like economies were manifested everywhere, indeed, they were a part of common education, not only at home, but at school, where, for instance, the girls were taught to sew and mend, as they were to read and write. And when I went about with the people and saw how they lived; how contentedly and pleasantly they took the affairs of life; how much they made of simple and inexpensive pleasures; how little they were beset with false pride or show, and the petty ambition to go ahead of their neighbors, which are such corrosive influences in American and English society; how much of human kindness and home joy and social satisfaction they had with incomes and prices which would make life for average Americans of similar station a torturing struggle with want—I could not avoid the conviction that in their ways was a lesson which it would be a blessing for us to learn.—Prof. W. O. Atwater, in The Century.

STAY IN THE SUN-LIGHT.—Sleepless people, and there are many in America, should court the sun. The very worst soporific is laudanum, and the very best sunshine. Therefore it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours as possible in the sunshine and as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs, and yet they do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and their hearts, they wear veils, they carry parasols, they do all possible to keep off the subtlest and yet most potent influence which is intended to give them strength and beauty and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change this, and so get color and roses in their pale cheeks, strength in their weak backs and courage in their timid souls? The women of America are pale and delicate, they may be blooming and strong, and the sunshine will be a patent influence in this transformation.—Family Visitor

Dear Sir: I wish you to send me a bottle of your Antidote for Malaria, which I see advertised in the Methodist Advocate, Chattanooga, Tenn., and which I cannot get here. Fifteen years ago my mother had third day chills, and after trying the doctors and other medicines without relief, a friend recommended your Antidote. She tried it. And one dose effected a permanent cure. Truly yours.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Constipation
Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leitlsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an Effective Remedy
for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Gretner, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—O. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

STEEL.—Little JANIE R. STEEL was born March 7, 1878, and left for her far-away home, October 1, 1887. She was the daughter of H. J. and Dora F. Steel. Her father preceded her to the grave a few years, and at her father's death she was quite young and left to the sole care of a tender Christian mother. Mrs. Steel, after the ruthless blow that stripped her of a husband's care, support and protection, came face to face with terrible consequence of the battle of life, and she saw it had to be fought, and by her alone. How sad the condition! Like a noble, sensible Christian woman, she nerved herself with Christian fortitude, she wielded the ax and felled the forest, took the plow to furrow the ground to make bread for her children, and she was somewhat successful until God, who is the father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow, gave to her in a few years another model Christian husband, who was a father in truth and in deed to little Janie. She was loving, truthful and obedient. She never complained nor grumbled under any circumstances; never resented an insult or an injury only by kindness; never exhibited anger or unpleasantness. Her mother very seldom had to scold or correct her; nor did her teachers at school. Her mother could commit any interest of the household affairs when she was absent to Janie. She never would neglect anything that was committed to her care. She was attacked by spinal meningitis. She lingered on the confines of time and bore her painful affliction without a murmur or complaint, submissively resigned, waiting her Master's will. When the last moment came on earth she stood a moment upon the crumbling battlements of time. She looked backward for a moment with her submissiveness, obedience and goodness, and exclaimed: "Come on, mamma; come on, papa, brothers, sisters."

J. B. NELSON.

MCCLENDON—ELISABETH J. MCCLENDON was born March 22, 1830, in the State of Georgia, and died near Walnut Grove, Miss., March 1, 1888, in the fifty-fourth year of her age. She was married to W. S. McClendon, in 1852, at Franklin, Heard county, Ga.; moved to Mississippi in 1855. Sister McClendon joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1853, and lived a consistent and honored member of the same till the Master called her to the church triumphant. Her death was very sudden, though not unexpected to herself or her family, as she had been troubled with heart disease for a year or more previous to her death. At the time of her death she was not confined to her bed. On the day of her death she seemed unusually cheerful, superintended her domestic affairs, and while sitting at the table conversing with her family she suddenly threw up her hands and fell from her chair and, almost before she could be carried to her bed her spirit took its everlasting flight up to God who gave it. She leaves a husband, three children (all married and settled in this community) and many relatives and friends to mourn her loss.

She was a woman of solid piety, a model of propriety in all things, and universally beloved by all who knew her. She was also a woman of great energy and industry, looking after all her domestic affairs with rare diligence. She was very hospitable, and always welcomed her friends with a natural grace of manner which was agreeable to her visitors. This writer bears witness to these traits in her character with pleasure, having been a visitor in the family for thirty years. But that home is now desolate; a loving wife and mother has gone to reap her reward. When I visit her home I find her place vacant. Her seat at the church is also vacant; but when we assemble on the banks of sweet deliverance we shall see her. The Lord bless father and children, and may they all meet in glory, where parting will be no more!

MOORE—MRS. JENNIE E. MOORE, daughter of Alford and Helen Jones, was born in Spring Creek, Madison county, Tenn., May 6, 1838, and departed this life, near Mooringsport, La., June 12, 1888. She came to Louisiana in 1858, and was married the same year to Mr. D. d. Mooring, who died in 1862, leaving her with one child. She was married again, in 1868, to Mr. J. M. Moore, whom she leaves with three children to mourn her departure. Sister Moore had a religious mother, who made upon her mind religious impressions that never faded away. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church when sixteen, to which she was ever loyal and true. She loved her church, its members and ministers. In October, 1887, she sought, obtained and professed the precious experience of entire sanctification, which fully prepared her for every coming emergency. As a wife she was noble, affectionate and true; as a mother, was tender, devoted and loving.

As time bears us on to other scenes and cares, we shall ever have a precious memory of Sister Moore. For more than a year she was a constant sufferer. Many and long were those weary hours, but she bowed in submission to him that doeth all things well. As the disease advanced, and friends became despondent, she had always a word of cheer, saying so often that the good Lord would do what was best. When all hopes of her recovery had fled, and the last enemy appeared and must be met, she calmly moved on, fully assured that through Jesus she would conquer. As she drew near the valley her soul was filled with delight at the thought of being so near her heavenly home, and, amid smiles and tears of joy, she talked of loved ones with whom she expected so soon to be. When just at the water's edge, she saw bright visions of the heavenly world and heard the angels singing to cheer her as she crossed the narrow stream. With a pleasant smile, she breathed her last, and took her flight to the city of God. For her to die was gain.

J. S. SANDERS.

HUNTER—Bro. M. S. HUNTER was born in Mississippi, January 28, 1830, and died in Delhi, La., June 24, 1888. The deceased was for a number of years a citizen of Morehouse parish, and on December 25, 1883 was united in a second marriage with an estimable Christian lady (Bishop) of Delhi, and became a citizen of that place. During Bro. Hunter's residence there he was much admired as a kind husband, a good citizen, a good mason, and, more than all, as a consistent, faithful and devoted Christian. He promptly filled his place in Sunday-school, in prayer meeting and at preaching. The day he died, which was Sunday, the writer heard a good Baptist lady remark: "To-day is the first time I ever attended this church when Bro. Hunter was absent." He was always ready to pray in the public congregation, and, as his life was unspotted, he wielded a great influence for good. Such men are so scarce that the loss is the more deeply felt. His bereaved family and entire community mourn their loss. Bereaved ones, by the grace of God, you can go to him. "And God shall wipe away all tears from your eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

H. ARMSTRONG.

HARDY—Mrs. M. C. HARDY (nee Chapman) was born in Jasper county, March 17, 1849, and died in Paulding, Miss., June 6, 1888. She was the daughter of T. and M. E. Chapman—both of whom preceded her to the grave—and married R. W. Hardy on February 23, 1880.

Sister Hardy professed religion early in life, and attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she remained a consistent member until her death. She was a patient sufferer for several months. She was pious and devout; not a murmur escaped her lips. She did not charge God foolishly; but was perfectly resigned to the will of her heavenly Father; for so she expressed herself to her pastor and others during her afflictions. Truly the grace of God was magnified in her sufferings, and Christ's sustaining power was shown in her dying hour. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." She leaves one brother and four sisters and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss; but, thank God, they sorrow not "as others who have no hope," for they trust also in the living God. May God heal all their wounds and draw them closer to himself by this, another tie in heaven!

C. C. CAMPBELL, P. C.

TAYLOR—DR. PETER TAYLOR died at his home, near Buckatunna, July 12, 1888, in the fifty-fourth year of his age. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church early in life, and remained faithful until death released him from trouble. Naturally of a genial, happy temperament, sanctified by divine grace, he possessed a magnetism over all classes, binding them to his great loving heart, and then in unison to the cross of Christ. He was a first-class physician, always ready to respond to the call of the poor and needy. His was a mind that could rise superior to all opposition and remain the same in adversity as prosperity, ever ready to respond to the cause of benevolence. He loved the church and its cause. His home was the preacher's home. I have known him since January intimately, and to know him well one could not refrain from admiring him. He was true to the church which he supported liberally and to the God whom he adored. We buried him yesterday, surrounded by his family and friends, who fully realize our loss in his eternal gain. A trusted friend and physician, a kind husband and loving father is gone. Gone, but not lost. We shall meet beyond the river where the surges cease to roll.

J. M. MORSE.

MARSH—Whereas, Our all-wise heavenly Father has, in his infinite mercy and love, seen fit to remove from our midst our dearly loved friend and associate, MOLLIE MARSH; on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church Sunday-school, Lake Charles, La., of which she was a faithful and devoted member, be it

Resolved, That, while God knows best, yet in her death the Sunday-school has lost a most faithful attendant, the church a devoted member, and the community one who gave promise of being one of its brightest and noblest.

Resolved, That we offer to the grief-stricken father, our dearly loved and revered superintendent, and to his deeply afflicted family our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this, their dark hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That these resolutions be sent to NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, The Sunday-School Visitor and our city papers, and that a copy of these papers be sent to the family.

Train Telegraphy.

The value of train telegraphy was well demonstrated at the accident on the Lehigh Valley at Three Bridges. The snow plough, with three engines and two construction cars behind it, ran into a twenty-foot drift of hard snow in a deep cut. The force of the blow against the packed snow was so great as to pile the great engines on top of each other, causing a complete wreck of the train, and killing and injuring several men. The scene of the accident is six or eight miles from the nearest town or station, which could only be reached through the almost impassable snowdrifts, and in the face of the terrible blizzard that was then prevailing, and the regular telegraph lines were all down for miles in either direction. It was here that the new railroad telegraph system came into play. Its single steel wire, stretched along the side of the railroad on poles sixteen feet long, had withstood the fury of the storm, though in many places it was covered by the great drifts and buried out of sight. The messages were transmitted by induction from the metal roof of the car to the line, a distance of ten feet, and even when cars and lines were both buried in the drifts no inconvenience was suffered, as the dry snow acted as a good insulator. The operator on the train soon recovered from the shock of the accident, and within three minutes after it occurred, and while standing in the wrecked and overturned car, flashed this message to the railroad office:

"Train wrecked. Three engines piled on top of each other. Several injured. Send wrecking train and doctors."

Another message was sent to the nearest town in the opposite direction for medical assistance. A relief train was dispatched at once to the scene of the disaster, and reached the place in time to give the wounded prompt attention. Within a short time Superintendent Donnelly arrived, and during the entire day messages were sent to and from the wrecking train. All the beleagnered passenger trains, every one of which was equipped with the new system, were located by means of train telegraphy, and provisions were sent to the hungry passengers. Belated passengers sent despatches to anxious wives from various stalled trains, and all the manifold business of railroading was carried on with celerity. More than 200 messages were sent back and forth over the single line of the company during the three days of clearing the road.

New Style in Barometers.

"Does that sky move and show the expected condition of the weather?" asked a reporter for the Mail and Express, while in a Maiden lane store looking at an instrument resembling in shape a small clock, with a painted landscape instead of the regulation dial.

"Yes," replied the dealer; "that is a movable heaven, and shows every coming change in the weather by either a bright, cloudy or variable sky. It is not a toy, but a useful barometer. The landscape is painted on the glass and is immovable, leaving the upper part clear. Behind the glass is a movable plate of mica on which is painted the sky in all its various aspects of storm and fine weather. The mercury in the barometer affects this plate and causes it to move to the right or left according to the indicated condition of the weather. On this plate is a graduated scale and the fixed arrow at the top gives the accurate pressure, for those who may desire that information. But here is another barometer which is more useful for public places. You see it is constructed like an office clock. The dial plate has an indicating hand which like those on a clock face points out the actual condition of the barometer inside, while above are two movable flat-sided rollers worked by electro-magnets connected with the barometer. On each of the sides are printed legends as to the expected condition of the weather, and which can be seen at the same distance as the ordinary clock. These legends state on the upper roller what the weather is likely to be, from "very dry" to "stormy," while on the lower one you learn whether the mercury is rising or falling. Of course those who desire to know the exact condition of the thermometer or barometer will have to make a closer inspection, as you see there are graduated instruments appended to the lower part of the case. This is likely to be extensively used in places where it is actually necessary for such information to be ascertained in advance.—Mail and Express.

The Indictment.

BY GEN. C. B. FISK.

Alas! how true and terrible is this indictment of the saloon. Oh, that from every hill-top and valley, from mountain and prairie, from city and hamlet, from lakes to gulf, and from sea to sea, there might this day arise the united voice of our sixty millions of people in most solemn declaration of independence of this cruel king, whose injuries and usurpations threaten the destruction of our free government. As did our fathers when they resolved to throw off the absolute tyranny of a bad king, so let us give certain facts to a candid world. This monster, sitting supreme in the politics of this country, has enacted laws authorizing him to open in all our towns and cities slaughter-houses of men, women and children and of all virtue.

He has enacted laws permitting him to transform men into beasts.

He is the direct cause of nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows which blight and curse our people.

He, hiding his monstrous deformity under the forms of law enacted by his own vassals, over whose heads he cracks the slave-driver's lash in halls of legislation, maintains at our expense an army of miscreants who, at the very doors of our homes and in the shadows of our sanctuaries, prosecute the work of murder and death.

He has despoiled labor, burdened property with excessive taxation, impoverished whole communities, hindered education, corrupted morals, fostered crimes, aided all classes of vice and wrong, and plunged his unhappy victims into shame and degradation.

He would have us transmit to our children a heritage of distilleries, breweries and saloons, and chain to the weary backs of society increasing burdens of paupers, criminals, idiots and insane.

He seizes and debauches innocent children, tears sons from the arms of sorrowing mothers, and bears them away to dishonored graves.

He wrings hot tears from the eyes of widows whose husbands he has sacrificed at the shrine of the drunkards' Moloch.

He sits supreme in the national Congress and makes laws in the country's capital.

He governs courts of justice, and makes ministers of the law and Legislatures his lackeys.

He silences the preacher in his pulpit and muzzles the editor at his desk.

He wastes, directly and indirectly, in his revels annually more than a thousand millions of our dollars, and marshals in his staggering procession to death and hell a half-million of our people.

He is a cold, heartless, cruel murderer and assassin of the deepest dye.

He counts his victims by millions. His butcheries go on daily and nightly within sight of the portals of our homes. We can hear the shrieks of his victims and the wail of the bereaved.

He is the howling, prowling, destroying wolf, with scorching, fierce breath, descending upon every fold, slaying and devouring our best loved. Let us rise in our united might as did our ancestors in Old Windham at the call of Israel Putnam on Pomfret Heights in the last century. Let us hunt this wolf to his den and shoot him.

Clark—"Well, I will declare! Smithers, how you have picked up lately!" Smithers—"Yes, yes; things were bad enough with me a little while back, but I happened to run across the advertisement of B. F. Johnson & Co., of Richmond, Va., and they put me in position to make money right along. If you know of anybody else needing employment, here is their name and address."

Flowers never emit so sweet and strong a fragrance as before a storm. Beauteous soul, when a storm approaches thee, be as fragrant as a sweet-smelling flower.—Richter.

For Rickets, Marasmus, and Wasting Disorders of Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is unequaled. The rapidity with which children gain flesh and strength upon it is very wonderful. Read the following: "I have used Scott's Emulsion in cases of Rickets and Marasmus of long standing, and have been more than pleased with the results, as in every case the improvement was marked."—J. M. MAIN, M. D., New York.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

BY (RA D. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN AND GEO. C. STEBBINS.

284 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

Used exclusively by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:

Music Edition, Board Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 5 00
" " (Minion Type) Board Covers..... 10 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The "Charleston," the first government vessel ever built on the Pacific coast, was successfully launched at San Francisco, on July 19.

It is said that John Mackay has disposed of his cable to Jay Gould for $11,000,000. Negotiations have been pending for some time. Mackay originally asked $13,000,000, but Gould refused the cable at these figures and finally offered $11,000,000, which was accepted.

The towboat "Conroy" exploded on July 20, near Louisville. Seven of the crew were scalded to death.

The bodies of fourteen victims of the flood have been recovered from the wreck of the Baltimore and Ohio bridge, over Wheeling Creek, in West Virginia.

Melville W. Fuller, of Illinois, has been confirmed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States by the Senate.

The Mill's Tariff Bill was passed by the House, on July 21, by a majority of thirteen votes.

The Southwestern Lumbermen's Convention, after a two-days' session, in Galveston, Texas, adjourned July 20.

Yellow fever is prevalent in South Florida.

The Sunday Law was strictly enforced on July 21, and several violators were arrested.

A disastrous collision between two trains on the Norfolk and Western railroad occurred near Lynchburg, Va., on July 22. Eleven lives lost.

About 2,000 Italians assembled in Philadelphia, on July 22, to protest against statements that had been made that they were a pauper class.

Gen. Sheridan's health has improved, and his physicians think his symptoms favorable.

The Senate, on July 23, concurred without a word of debate in the conference report on the River and Harbor Bill, and the measure now goes to the President for his signature.

In the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the Jackson (Miss.) election, the negro vote is said to have been suppressed by force, and the administration is assailed because of its refusal to punish the officials implicated.

The striking engineers and firemen on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road have decided unanimously to carry on the fight.

The House of Representatives instructed the Committee on Appropriations to include in the Efficiency Bill a provision for paying the French spoliation claims so far as they have been allowed by the Court of Claims.

The Mississippi Baptist Convention, which met in Jackson, completed its labors and adjourned July 23.

FOREIGN.

At Cambridge, on July 18, the exercises of the University were distinguished by the conferring of honorary degrees upon Bishop Potter, of New York, and the Bishops of Minnesota and of Fredrickton, N. B. The senate was crowded on the occasion of the conferring of the degrees, and they were greeted with loud cheers.

The Earl of Earne has been elected Grand Master of Orangemen throughout the world.

Emperor William and the Czar met near Cronstadt, on July 19. The imperial guest was received with the honor due his rank.

The Neuesten Nachrichten asserts that since the Emperor Fredrick's death, a case containing confidential reports made by German military attaches has disappeared. It mentions the name of a member of Empress Victoria's household as being implicated in the affair.

It is stated that Prince Bismarck, Count Kalnoky and Premier Crispi will meet in Carlsbad at the end of August.

General Boulanger's wound has healed. He is convalescing rapidly.

The police of Madrid, July 20, searched the houses of prisoners suspected of plotting against the government. The raid resulted in the discovery of 3,000 weapons.

The Emperor's projected meeting with King Humbert is definitely fixed for October under the instigation of Prime Minister Crispi. King Humbert has asked the Emperor to visit Rome, and the latter has assented. The Pope being apprised of this fact, has sent a vigorous protest to Prince Bismarck, declaring that the Emperor's presence at Rome would be an act of hostility toward the Vatican, especially during the pending crisis with the Italian government.

The political results of the Emperor's visit to the Czar remain absolutely unknown. The disposition of official circles is toward a disbelief that the interviews have determined anything. The immediate effect has been to lessen the strain of the relations between Berlin and St. Petersburg foreign offices.

Convenience and comfort are essentials to study and improvement; and these are amongst the features of the Nashville College for Young Ladies. The present main building, completed in 1882, and furnished since that time, is specially adapted to the boarding department, while the building now being erected is specially designed for the school work proper. We note this improvement, and trust those having daughters to educate will see to it that they avail themselves of the advantages offered by this institution. Write the President, Dr. George W. F. Price, for information, which he will be glad to furnish.

Mrs. M. E. Clark's Select School for Young Ladies, Nashville, Tenn., is unexcelled for healthful location, handsome buildings, in 14-acre lawn, advanced and complete curriculum, superior faculty. Fourth Week in July.

Hot! hotter! hottest. Hot weather has its joys; but, alas! its sorrows. It is particularly in midsummer that sufferers from debility have their heaviest burdens. They are "all run down" and have a feeling of "all gone-ness." Sometimes they go out of town in order to get strong, but with the close quarters and ill-cooked cookery of the "summer resorts," they are apt to lose more than they gain. Then comes the attacks of the various bowel disorders. Among the children, cholera morbus and cholera infantum prevail, and need prompt attention. Don't think of going through the hot weather without TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT, the great Summer regulator. So many thousand people, old and young, have been helped through midsummer trials by this favorite medicine that there is no need of argument concerning it. The public know "Tarrant's." The physicians prescribe it, for they have tested its value. Whether at home or abroad; summering by the seashore or rambling among the mountains; bicycling over smooth roads or fishing in the Adirondacks, Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient is a necessity as part of the Summer outfit.

The composition of Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient is no secret. There is no mystery about it. If there were, the doctors would not prescribe it as they do. For forty-four years they have used it. If you have any doubts about its merit, ask the leading physicians of this country. The druggists sell this medicine.

HOUR OF PRAYER.

My God, is any hour so sweet,
From blush of morn to evening star,
As that which calls me to thy feet,
The hour of prayer?

Blest be the tranquil hour of morn,
And blest that solemn hour of eve,
When on the wings of prayer upborne
The world I leave.

Then is my strength by thee renewed,
Then are my sins by thee forgiven;
Then dost thou cheer my solitude
With hopes of heaven.

Words can not tell what blest relief
Here for my every want I find;
What strength for warfare, balm for grief,
What peace of mind.

Hushed is each doubt, gone every fear;
My spirit seems in heaven to stay;
And even the penitential tear
Is wiped away.

Oh, till I reach that blissful shore,
No privilege so dear shall be
As this my inmost soul to pour
In prayer to thee.

A Bishop on His Travels.

MR. EDITOR: I believe my last letter, except the postscript, was written from St. Paul. A trip over the Northern Pacific gives one an idea of the vastness of our country and its marvelous, undeveloped resources. The distance traversed by that road is 2,251 miles, and most of the area tributary thereto has scarcely been touched by the hand of American enterprise. For miles, as we sped over the prairies of Dakota, no human habitation was visible, save here and there a railroad section-house, or the hut of a herder hid away in a little cave for protection against the winds and snows of winter. The country contiguous to Fargo, where we enter the territory, has become famous for the large yield and quality of its wheat. I was told that a certain Dakota brand of wheat, known as "No. 1 Hard," ranks first in the markets of the world, commanding from ten to fifteen cents more per bushel than other grades. The railroad guide-books tell of a bonanza wheat farmer in that section who employs a thousand hands, owns 75,000 acres of land, over one hundred and seventeen square miles, and in harvest season runs two hundred and twenty reaping machines. Without a particle of sympathy for agrarianism, I must say that is too much terra firma for one man to own. A few more such agricultural kings would develop social conditions worse than the South now feels because of her unmixable races. Worse, because such a peasantry have many of the vices and few of the virtues of the Southern negro.

But population is flowing in, and those untilled fields will soon become the homes of men seeking room and a chance. Population will come, because the railroad owns the land and wants to sell. By industrious and skillful advertising, liberal transportation and easy terms of sale, settlers will be attracted and secured. The Northern Pacific railroad owns 1,350,000 acres of land in Minnesota, 7,000,000 in North Dakota, 19,000,000 in Montana, 1,750,000 in Idaho, and 12,000,000 in Washington Territory and Oregon, an aggregate of over 40,000,000 acres. This is all located in alternate sections within a certain distance on both sides of the line. It was by this immense land subsidy the road was built over bleak prairies, across wild gorges, through or over lofty mountains, and down beautiful valleys on to the Pacific.

This route of travel will grow in popularity as its scenic wonders are better known. There is every variety of scenery and every comfort known to modern travel. Some ascents are marvels of railway engineering. From Livingston, Mon., to the Bozeman tunnel, a distance of twelve miles, there is a grade of ninety-six feet to the mile. Two strong engines, puffing, as if straining to the utmost every rod and screw, are necessary for the train to make the summit. And in the neighborhood of Livingston, the junction of the branch road to the Yellowstone National Park, the first snow on the mountains is seen by the traveler from the East. The mornings become chilly and overcoats are eagerly donned.

On reaching Bismarck, the capital of Dakota, the first morning out from St. Paul, I found a daily paper with the press dispatches. Bismarck is a small place of about four thousand inhabitants, well located on the banks of the Missouri river. Already it indulges the luxury of a daily paper. Before reaching that point, looking out over interminable, uninhabited prairies, I had begun to feel the loneliness of a strange, far-away land. But the morning paper brought news of yesterday's doings in Washington, London, Berlin and elsewhere. I discovered my social whereabouts, and recovered the normal tone of my spirits. Among other evidences that I was yet in the midst of our progressive civilization, the local columns of that territorial paper gave account of a woman's missionary meeting, and advertised a church festival with strawberries and ice cream.

Some distance beyond Bismarck we passed through what is known as the "Bad Lands," called also, and more euphoniously, "Pyramid Park." This is a sudden transition from the green rolling prairies. The hills are totally bare of any vegetable growth, and have tossed themselves into various heights and every conceivable shape. At one glance you see cones, domes, spires, castles, turrets, etc., and in variegated colors, determined by the several geological formations. Along the little watercourses, between these ranges of rugged desolation, a few small trees are seen; otherwise the entire region seems to have been baked by fires within, and scorched by the sun from above. I learned, however, that back some miles from the railroad there were excellent grazing lands, and some of the largest ranches in the West.

At Glendive we were in Montana, and caught a first glimpse of the Yellowstone river. Along its banks, and up this strikingly beautiful valley, the railroad runs for three hundred and forty miles. At Glendive the river did not present its usual clearness, on account of recent freshets in that section. A few miles from that point we passed Fort Keogh, where a regiment of soldiers are stationed in neat, homelike quarters. That military station and a few Indian camps just below revived vivid memories of the bloody wars which, fifteen or twenty years ago, made historic the whole Yellowstone Valley. We passed near several places where the red and white man went down to a common grave. Not many miles off was the scene of Gen. Custer's last charge, in which that gallant chieftain fell, together with every man under his command. Not one was left to relate the story of the fatal conflict. But peace now reigns everywhere, and this famed valley will learn war no more. Only here and there an Indian is to be seen off the reservations, and they are quietly engaged in pastoral or agricultural pursuits. Their hunting grounds have given place to grazing lands and wheat fields. The buffalo and bear have yielded the valleys to the short-horn cow and the thoroughbred horse. Though Eastern Montana no longer affords sport and support for the hunter as in other days, she can rival any section of the country in cattle and horses of the best record and finest strains. And all this change has been wrought within the past ten years!

I reached Bozeman on Saturday morning, the fourteenth instant, and there spent the Sabbath. Our young pastor, the Rev. H. C. Fleenor, transferred from the St. Louis Conference last winter by Bishop Hendrix, has wrought a good work. He has gathered together our little flock, inspirited them with new hope, organized a flourishing Sunday-school, and impressed himself upon the whole community as a man of push, purity and piety. His congregations are increasing, and our church influence extending. Bro. Stateler, the venerable leader of our cause in this territory for so many years, came in from his home, forty miles distant, on Saturday afternoon, and added much to the pleasure and profit of our Sabbath services. He has partially recovered from the paralytic stroke of twelve months ago, and expects to meet his brethren in Conference next week. I had the pleasure of preaching twice on the Sabbath, talking to the Sunday-school, baptizing two children and dedicating our tasteful little brick church. Bro. Stateler, who had contributed over $600 toward its erection, presented the building for dedication, and named it "Morton Chapel," in honor of our church extension secretary who gave one year of service to Montana, and has ever been an ardent friend of the work. The congregation was large in the morning, and at night many turned away for want of seats.

Bozeman is a flourishing town of about 4,000 inhabitants, and admirably located at the head of the Gallatin Valley. It was named in honor of John Bozeman, who, with a party of emigrants, attracted by the beauty and fertility of the valley, settled there in August, 1864. Three years thereafter Mr. Bozeman was murdered by the Indians in the neighborhood of the Yellowstone. The town has already the solid expression of permanency and the stir of city enterprise. Substantial business blocks of brick, a few elegant mansions and numerous neat cottages are a revelation to those who suppose Montana is beyond the "timber line" of civilization. The town has two banks, three newspapers, two flouring mills, and all lines of business represented, including "fashionable dress-making." And its continued growth is assured. The magnificent Gallatin Valley, the finest agricultural section of the Territory, would sustain it, if all the mines were exhausted and all other signs were to fail.

On Sunday afternoon I rode down the valley six miles to visit the family of Bro. Robinson, one of our prosperous and loyal members. He is an East Tennesseean, a successful farmer, an enterprising citizen and an ardent Southern Methodist. Coming West many years ago, he has grown up with the country, has the "rustling" manner of a typical Westerner, and has great expectations for the future of the Territory.—But here every citizen talks hopefully, moves briskly and keeps his eyes before him.

All claim that the climate is pleasant. The atmosphere being so pure and dry, the extreme cold of winter is not more severe than in much lower latitudes. The nights in midsummer are always cool. I find it necessary to wear heavy flannel all the time, and never go out in the evening or early morning without an overcoat. I noticed the thermometer on Monday morning at six o'clock—really two hours after sunrise—and it registered 48. The nights are very short. It is yet twilight at nine o'clock, and day begins to dawn at two and a half. Hours of sleep must be regulated without regard to the sun.

On Monday morning I left Bozeman for a tour of the Yellowstone National Park, which has just been completed. I leave in a few hours for Helena to spend the Sabbath. The Montana Conference will meet, on Wednesday next, at Butte.

Fraternally yours,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

The Support of Our Schools.

BY J. D. CAMERON, D. D.

In his thoughtful article, of July 19, Bro. J. W. Honnall says: "It suits the majority of our Mississippi Methodists better to send their boys to our schools which happen to stand just over the State line." Is that a fact? Do "the majority of our Mississippi Methodists" send their boys to our schools at all? I can not speak for those within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference; but how many boys from the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference have attended school at Vanderbilt University the past session? How many at Centenary College? How many have gone to these institutions since they have been such? What does it avail though they do stand with open arms, if their arms are to remain comparatively empty? My opinion is, that the majority of our people send their boys to the State University and the Agricultural and Mechanical College; the majority of those who send anywhere. I have not a word to say against these as secular schools; but they fail by far to meet the demands of Christian education. I presume Centenary College is doing a good work for the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences; but no church school is doing much for the education of the boys of the North Mississippi Conference. This is the fact, and it is with facts we must deal. There is a good deal of State pride among our people, which causes them to want their boys educated within the limits of the State. It is also a fact that our people do not send South to school to any considerable extent. No matter as to the cause of this, we are dealing with facts. If Vanderbilt and Centenary are meeting the demands of the church, then we need nothing more. Are they doing this? Are they educating our young men for the ministry? Which one is doing this? Or are they both contributing their part? How many are they educating? The two Alabama Conferences have united on the Southern University, and the union seems to be real and perfect. And what a grand work that school is doing for the church within their bounds! Over two hundred young men matriculated there the past session, and only twelve of that number returned to their homes out of the church; thirty-three are preparing for the ministry, and four of the twenty-eight graduates have offered themselves for foreign mission work. What blessings those young men will be to the church, either in the pulpit or pew!

We want schools for our boys where the Bible is taught as a text-book and Christianity as held by Methodists is part of the curriculum. A mother said, last year, in the presence of several Alabama preachers: "I think when my boy goes off to school, I will have to go with him." One of the preachers, who proved to be a trustee of the university, said: "My sister, if you would attend one commencement at Greensboro, your fears would all subside." That mother has attended that one commencement, and is now ready, without fear, to send her boy to the Southern University. If the institutions we have are meeting the demands of the church, then they are all we want. If they are not, can the demands be met? If so, how? It seems to me that these are the questions to answer.

A Reminiscence of Centenary College.

Dr. R. H. Rivers, of Louisville, Ky., writes for the Central Methodist the following account of a thrilling scene at one of the commencements at Centenary College during his presidency of that institution. It will bring vividly before many of our readers the glorious times we used to have on those memorable commencement occasions. The seeming failure, yet complete triumph, of the young man spoken of comes to us now as a prophecy of the life of the college itself. It has seemed to fail. There are those who have said, "Better tell it to quit;" others have hissed; but the old college has held on, and now complete triumph is in sight! Dr. Rivers writes thus:

"It was about the year 1850 or 1851, I was a young president. I had suffered great anxiety as to the success of the commencement. I had sought by all proper methods to prepare the young men for the occasion. They had written and re-written their pieces; had had them rigidly criticised and thoroughly corrected. They had also practiced them before me, and had given much attention to their delivery. At length the time had arrived, and the gatherings of the people were very large. At the time of which I write, Centenary College of Louisiana was at the zenith of its prosperity. We had at least two hundred and fifty students in all departments. C. G. Andrews, since become distinguished as an able and pious minister of the gospel, graduated that year. According to my recollection, he was a tall, manly youth, and highly connected. Bishops McTyeire and Keener, then in the earlier years of their ministry, were sitting on the platform. Drs. Winans and Drake, already passed the meridian of life, were also adding to the interest of the occasion by their presence. Gov. Foote, of Mississippi, had addressed the literary societies in one of the most classic and beautiful orations of his wonderful career. Governor Walker, of Louisiana, was showing his patriotism by his fatherly interest in the rising young men of his own great State, as well as those of neighboring States. Besides these, were many others from every portion of the States of Louisiana and Mississippi. Many 'brave men and fair women' of wealth and culture had come from a distance to listen to the displays of oratory which imparted so much interest to our commencement occasions. Naturally of a deeply sympathetic nature, and always loving my boys with something akin to the deepest parental affection, I was, of course, kept in a state of continuous excitement. I was so anxious for the perfect success of the various exhibitions, that both sleep and appetite left me. Restless, anxious, excited, I had reached the regular graduating exercises.

"Boys generally do well on such occasions, and mine had almost covered themselves with glory. There had not been a single failure. I had worked hard, and had been assisted by Prof. Martindale, one of the very best teachers of elocution that ever graced a professor's chair. At this stage one of our brightest boys was called on for his speech. He had written an address which would have done credit to one more mature than he was. It was full of poetic sentiment and glowed with the creations of an exuberant imagination. He had spoken about a half-page when he came to a dead halt, uttering these words: 'Ever and anon.' After a most awkward pause he again repeated: 'Ever and anon.' Another halt. (Confusion—disappointment!). Has he forgotten his piece? Again he repeated: 'Ever and anon,' and again he stopped. Some one on the stage turned to me, and said: 'Better tell him to take his seat; he has lost his speech.' While the sympathy was almost universal, a few hissed him. He rose almost on tiptoe, he advanced to the very front of the stage, and in a voice indicating self-possession, energy, determination, triumph, he again repeated: 'Ever and anon as I look abroad upon the magnificent works of nature; as I behold the sun in his matchless career through the heavens, I see him accompanied to his setting by the most gorgeous clouds, which, like so many chariots of gold and crimson and blue, follow as in a triumphal procession; and then, when I look up to the mighty heavens and behold the firmament, the work of his fingers; the moon and the stars, which he has ordained, I can but exclaim: "Great and marvelous are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all."' It was over—the long agony closed amid a deafening shout of applause from the entire audience. On he went; the Rubicon was crossed; his words burned; his thoughts breathed; his language glowed; his voice rung out; his harmonious and often gorgeous sentences, in tones as clear as ever bell sent forth in answer to its clinging tongue. He was the hero of the day. He had fairly won his spurs, and almost every other speech was forgotten amid the triumphs which young Hines had wrested from defeat itself.

"After the exercises were all over, there was much discussion as to whether that hero of the hour had been merely acting a part, or whether he had really forgotten his piece. I never knew. I simply give the incident as one of the most remarkable I ever witnessed on a commencement occasion."

The one thing that we need this hour is a concerted aggressive movement of the church against the world. It is so plain no one can deny it, that the churches have lost their "grip" on the tens of thousands of people whose supreme duty it is that the churches should care for. We mean the people who meet us every day in the streets, many of whom are in our employ. Our conduct towards them has been such that they do not believe that we care for their souls, and they have become alienated from the sources of spiritual life. They are perishing spiritually, and are depressed and burdened materially, because they are not keeping God's commandments and doing his will, and they have, therefore, fallen into a condition of unrest and misanthropy that no person can look on with satisfaction. Their confidence will not be gained by sending missionaries among them and distributing tracts, but by the personal contact of the best men and women in the churches. We have made the church in some sense a private affair by consulting too much our ease and convenience, and it is not God's house, as they understand it. They are mistaken, but they are not convinced by a simple denial. The pastors are only in part responsible for this state of things, and the least responsible. We must learn the significance of the saying of Christ who described his mission to this world by saying, "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost."—Central Christian Advocate.

Beneficence is a running stream. If cash flows out of a Christian man's pocket, it will almost miraculously flow in again, just as water rushes into a channel whose waters have to gush out. Many a good man's purse is like a syphon, the very emptying of which insures its refilling.—Dr. Arthur Edwards.

"AFTER THE HEAT OF THE DAY."

BY N. H. W.

In the hush of the summer evening,
After the heat of the day;
When the sunset that promised so much
Has faded in clouds of gray—
The welcome calm comes down,
And the earth is cheered by the sound.
For all nature was weary and drooping with thirst,
After the heat of the day;

In the hush of life's quiet evening,
After the heat of the day,
When the bright prospects of youth
Have vanished in sorrow away—
Then God's calm of peace comes down
And old age is cheered by the sound,
For the heart was sad and the way was long,
After the heat of the day.

—Presbyterian.

Sunday-School Lesson.—August 12.

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT.

Leviticus xvi. 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Without shedding of blood is no remission—Heb. ix. 22.

TIME.—B. C. 1490 or B. C. 1220.

PLACE.—The plain of El Rahah, at the foot of Sinai.

1. After the death of the two sons of Aaron.—The chronological link connecting the following law with the death of the sons of Aaron was intended not only to point out the historical event which led to the appointment of the day of Atonement, but also to show the importance and holiness attached to an entrance into the inmost sanctuary of God.

2. Speak unto Aaron ... come not at all times into the holy place This arrangement was evidently designed to inspire a reverence for the most holy place, and the precaution was necessary at a time when the presence of God was indicated by sensible symbols, the impression of which might have been diminished or lost by daily and familiar observation. That he die not—Because of his presumptuous intrusion. I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy seat—That is, in the smoke of the incense which the high-priest burnt on his yearly entrance into the most holy place, and this was the cloud which at that time covered the mercy seat.

3. Thus shall Aaron come—That is, with the sacrifices, dress, purifications and means of expiation mentioned afterward. A young bullock—That is, with the blood of it, as it is explained (verse 14). For a sin-offering—For his own family's sins, for a goat was offered for the sins of the people. A ram for a burnt-offering—These victims he brought alive, but they were not offered in sacrifice till he had gone through the ceremonies described between this and the eleventh verse.

4. Put on the holy linen coat ... breeches ... girdle ... miter—This clothing is separated from that of the common priests by a white linen girdle, in place of the ordinary priestly girdle wrought in needle-work with "blue and purple and scarlet." (Exodus xxxix. 29.) The high-priest is thus to lay aside his "golden garments" of authority, and to be clad in pure white. It seems most probable that the high-priest, in preparing to enter the holy of holies, attired himself in spotless white as a token of the holiness without which none, in a spiritual sense, can enter the divine presence. He thus became a more distinct foreshadow of the greater High-priest, who is "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners;" who has once for all "entered into that within the veil." Wash his flesh in water—His entire body, and not merely his hands and feet, as was required in preparing for the ordinary ministrations.

5. Shall take of the congregation two kids of the goats for a sin-offering—Inasmuch as these sacrifices were for the people the victims were supplied by them, as the former ones had been by Aaron. The fact that the two goats together constitute the sin-offering is to be particularly noted. The high-priest's sin-offering was a bullock, and the ordinary sin-offering for the whole congregation was the same; here it is changed to two goats, to meet the particular ritual provided, but they together constitute a single sin-offering. One ram for a burnt-offering—The burnt-offering for the people was precisely like that for Aaron and his house (verse 3). The burnt-offering, both for the high-priest and for the congregation, was not a bullock, but an inferior victim was prescribed, probably to avoid withdrawing the attention from the other sacrifices, and thus to bring out with greater force the significance of the whole work of the day as an atonement for sin.

6. Aaron shall offer ... bullock ... for himself—Not kill: that is spoken of in verse 11; this verse refers to the formal act of placing the victim in front of the entrance to the tabernacle. The bullock for his sin-offering stood between the temple-porch and the altar. It was placed toward the south, but the high-priest, who stood facing the east (that is, the worshipers), turned the head of the sacrifice toward the west—that is, to face the sanctuary. He then laid both his hands upon the head of the bullock, and confessed.

7. Two goats ... before the Lord at the door—The two goats formed a single sin-offering. In order duly to bring out the meaning of the sacrifice, it was necessary that the act of a living being should be performed after death. As this could not possibly be visibly set forth with a single victim, two were employed, as in the case of the birds in the rite for the healed leper. The two goats were presented together before Jehovah. Up to this point they were on a par, and to decide which of them should die, recourse was had to casting lots.

8. Cast lots upon the two goats—In the eastern part of the court of priests—that is, close to the worshipers, and on the north side of it, stood an urn, called Calpi, in which were two lots of the same shape, size and material; in the second temple they were of gold, the one bearing the inscription "la-Jehovah," for Jehovah, the other "la Azazel." These two goats had been placed with their backs to the people and their faces toward the sanctuary, westward. The high-priest now faced the people as, standing between his substitute (at his right hand) and the head of the course on ministry (on his left hand), he shook the urn, thrust his two hands into it, and at the same time drew the two lots, laying one on the head of each goat. Popularly it was deemed of good augury if the right-hand lot had fallen "for Jehovah." One lot for the Lord—A lot is a solemn appeal to God in a doubtful matter, relative to practice, as an oath is in testimonies and engagements; and each of them ought to be the last resource when other methods of decision fail, and to be used as a solemn act of religion or not all. The other lot for the scapegoat—Both this and the other goat typified Christ: this in his death and passion for us; that in his resurrection for our deliverance.

9. Goat upon which the Lord's lot fell ... a sin offering—The goat was not to be offered on the altar until after the sacrifice of the high-priest's sin-offering. It should be observed that verse 9, 10 merely speak of the purposes for which the two goats were destined. The practical directions respecting them, in which the required details are given, will be found in verses 15, 16, 20-22.

10. The goat ... to be the scapegoat shall be presented alive before the Lord The high-priest tied a tongue-shaped piece of scarlet cloth to the horn of the goat for Azazel—the so-called "scapegoat"—and another round the throat of the goat for Jehovah, which was to be slain. The goat that was to be sent forth was now turned round toward the people, and stood facing them, waiting, as it were, till their sins should be laid on him, and he would carry them forth into "a land not inhabited." Assuredly a more marked type of Christ could not be conceived, as he was brought forth by Pilate and stood before the people, just as he was about to be led forth, bearing the iniquity of the people. To make an atonement with him The sins of the people were confessed not on the goat which was killed, but on that which was "let go into the wilderness;" and it was this goat, "not the other," "which bore upon him all the iniquities" of the people. So far as the conscience was concerned, this goat was the real and the only sin-offering "for all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins," for upon it the high-priest laid the sins of the people after he had, by the blood of the bullock and of the other goat, "made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar." To let him go ... wilderness—See verses 21, 22. The only meaning of which this seems really capable is that, though confessed guilt was removed from the people to the head of the goat, as the symbolical substitute, yet as the goat was not killed, only sent far away into "a land not inhabited," so, under the old covenant, sin was not really blotted out, only put away from the people, and put aside till Christ came, not only to take upon himself the burden of transgression, but to blot it out and to purge it away.

11. Shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself—The first part of the service was designed to solemnize his own mind, as well as the minds of the people, by offering the sacrifices for their sins. The sin-offerings, being slain, had the sins of the offerer judicially transferred to them by the imputation of his hands on their head, and thus the young bullock, which was to make atonement for himself and the other priests, was killed by the hands of the high-priest.

12, 13. Shall take a censer, etc.—While the blood of the victim was being received into a vessel, taking a censer of live coals in his right hand and a platter of sweet incense in his left, he, amid the solemn attention and the anxious prayers of the assembled multitude, crossed the porch and the holy place, opened the outer veil which led into the holy of holies, then the inner veil, and, standing before the ark, deposited the censer of coals on the floor, emptied the plate of incense into his hand, poured it on the burning coals, and the apartment was filled with fragrant smoke. Intended, according to Jewish writers, to prevent any presumptuous gazer prying too curiously into the form of the mercy-seat, which was the Lord's throne.

14. The blood of the bullock, sprinkle it—While the incense was offering in the most holy place the people withdrew from proximity to it, and worshiped in silence. At last the people saw the high-priest emerging from the sanctuary, and they knew that the service had been accepted. Rapidly he took from the attendant, who had kept it stirring, the blood of the bullock. Once more he entered the most holy place, and sprinkled with his finger once upward and seven times downward, counting as he did so: "Once" (upward), "once and once" (downward), "once and twice," and so on to "once and seven times," always repeating the word "once," which referred to the upward sprinkling, so as to prevent any mistake. Coming out from the most holy place, the high-priest now deposited the bowl with the blood before the veil.

15. Kill the goat ... for the people—Leaving the coals and the incense burning, he went out a second time to sacrifice at the altar of burnt-offering the goat which had been assigned as a sin-offering for the people; and carrying its blood into the holy of holies, made similar sprinklings as he had done before with the blood of the bullock. While the high-priest was thus engaged in the most holy place, none of the ordinary priests were allowed to remain within the precincts of the tabernacle.

16. Make an atonement for the holy place—Taking up the bowl with the bullock's blood, he next sprinkled once upward and seven times downward toward the veil, outside the most holy place, and then did the same with the blood of the goat. Finally, pouring the blood of the bullock into the bowl which contained that of the goat, and again the mixture of the two into that which had held the blood of the bullock, so as thoroughly to commingle the two, he sprinkled each of the horns of the altar of incense, and then, making a clear place on the altar, seven times the top of the altar of incense. Thus he had sprinkled forty-three times with the expiatory blood, taking care that his own dress should never be spotted with the sin-laden blood. What was left of the blood the high-priest poured out on the west side of the base of the altar of burnt-offering. The object of this solemn ceremonial was to impress the minds of the Israelites with the conviction that the whole tabernacle was stained by the sins of a guilty people, that by their sins they had forfeited the privileges of the divine presence and worship, and that an atonement had to be made as the condition of God's remaining with them.

Letter from Monroe, La.

It is due the ladies of the Monroe charge, and others who have co-operated with them, to publish the fact that we have at last succeeded in building a handsome parsonage in this city. The building is quite large, containing six rooms, with verandah in front and on the west side, which is shaded by a large pecan tree, known as the Texas pecan. The house is finished throughout, including painting. (I am sure the brethren who have preceded me here, and who know the painfulness of having to eke out fifteen dollars per month for rent from an inadequate salary, will be glad at this intelligence.) The house and lot is worth about two thousand dollars.

Now, a few words as to how we accomplished this important enterprise; and they will answer that very important question which I anticipate—"Is it paid for?" I could not have succeeded but for two important facts:

First: About eighteen months ago, when the Monroe Building Association was incorporated, I advised our Ladies' Aid Society to take five shares in the concern; which they did, and which they have promptly kept paid up. I can not enter into an explanation here of the workings of these mutual associations. They are found in many of our larger towns and cities, and brethren living in such towns where they are in operation know the good they are doing. Here they have enabled many a man of only moderate means to build who heretofore has been paying rent year after year, with no prospect of a home. The taking of these shares enabled us to draw from the association $510, which amount is returned in monthly payments of $11 60, and will require four years and six months to liquidate it. The ladies meet these monthly payments, and, as they have a parsonage which they are justly proud of, they enter into the work heartily, so that the preacher is free from anxiety as to the payment of rent. He, of course, attends to the payment of the amount as it falls due; and should these good ladies fall behind a dollar, he could, with propriety, call on a friend for the deficiency, which he could not do if it was for rent. The rest of the money paid for the house, about $900, was contributed in cash, material, etc. Our townsman, Mr. Connor, was very liberal in his contribution, for which we are very grateful.

The second fact referred to is, that a gentleman—a good brother who worships with us, but not a member of our church, and who desires that his name be not mentioned—gave us the lot on which the parsonage is built. The lot is a very desirable one—90 feet front by 101½ feet deep, and is only one block and a half from the church. He valued the lot at $600.

I regard this as a very providential movement, for our churches here are weak, numerically and financially. While our church is the strongest numerically, our people are poor. I can not at this moment think of one who may be regarded in what is termed, "good circumstances." Our Baptist brethren have not been able to employ a minister during the year, while our Presbyterian brethren have become a part of a circuit, and have services only two Sabbaths in the month. This decline is owing, partly, to the fact that this is not the business center it was before the extension of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad westward. At our last Annual Conference, however, the authorities converted Monroe into a station. While I do not question the wisdom of the change, it has been rather hurtful to the pocket of the pastor, and but for this delightful home, which we entered a month ago, I do not see how we could live. Happy the preacher who is not racked with anxiety as to where the money is coming from to meet his monthly rent as it falls due!

I wish I could write encouragingly with regard to the spiritual condition of our church here, but I sometimes feel that the devil has more to encourage him in this direction than have I. I hope, however, before the year closes to witness a better state of affairs.

The prohibitionists hold annual convention here next month. I hope the session may tell for good. The drink habit is the curse of this country, and the greatest enemy the church has to contend with. Said a gentleman to me, not long since: "There is a young man here who at one time lived in my town. He was then a consistent Christian. I met him to-day, and I hardly recognized him; he seems to be a complete wreck." How many such cases we have in our midst!

On the second Sabbath in July we had an unexpected treat. Rev. R. S. Trippett spent two days with us, and while here favored us with two of his excellent sermons. He has many friends here who were glad to see and hear him again.

Very truly yours,

W. HART.

Seashore District Conference.

Hattiesburg being the elected site of the present session, and Friday, July 20, the day to convene, at the opening hour a very full attendance of members was present. Rev. T. S. West, P. E., occupied the chair. Rev. J. W. Chambers was elected secretary.

The various reports from pastors in charge revealed the fact of increased development of the Master's cause within the bounds of the district. Two new camp grounds were established and meetings held since last Conference—one near Hattiesburg, the other near Covington; making a total of six camp grounds within the bounds of this district. Bay St. Louis has been raised from mission ground into a self-sustaining station for a single man. New parsonages at Covington and Columbia, with prospective ones at other points, speak well for comfort of future pastors. The two new railroads that will soon traverse this district will obliterate the "piney woods" and the training-ground for young and heady aspirants for the ministerial office. In a few years this section will demand the best talent of the Conference.

Dr. T. S. West, in his own persuasive, inimitable style peculiar to himself, moves up and down, in and around among this people, holding a firm, yet gentle rein, inciting activity, enthusiasm and fidelity among the pastors and members. The report on missions for home field advocated the concentration of forces and money—say, two first-class men of faith, talent, consecration and endurance—to embrace the whole field as their circuit of operations; turn them loose to turn this section right side up, and render it loyal to Christ.

The report on Sunday-schools stressed the importance of using our church catechisms in the school and home, also establishing juvenile missionary societies.

The preaching, without a single exception, was awakening; no effort to exalt self, but Christ and him crucified.

The session, as a whole, was harmonious and most delightful. Out of five places seeking the honor of entertaining the next District Conference, Ocean Springs carried off the prize.

The citizens of Hattiesburg dispensed a generous hospitality, and can secure another session of Conference at an early day, if desired.

When Bro. P. A. Johnston makes his report, you will find that Seashore district appreciates Centenary College.

Hattiesburg is "the future city" of Mississippi. With an unbroken pine forest on all sides, her corporate limits have room for expansion. Three railroads are to penetrate her streets. Unsurpassed water facilities for manufacturing purposes are in her borders. Close proximity to Alabama coal-fields, by rail, will supply cheap fuel; pure air and gulf breezes will supply health. All that is needed is men of capital and capacity, and these are now prospecting. Bro. H. J. Harris is editing and publishing the Hattiesburg Courier, sending forth a clean, high-toned paper that will greatly tend to educate the masses upon a solid moral basis. The dwellings are cosy and comfortable looking, and a majority are painted.

The old District Conference parsonage has disappeared; you can't find it. Dr. West now occupies a parsonage building that is as handsome in its dress of soft-toned paint and harmonious trimmings as a bride adorned for the marriage. The amateur painters—Heard, Willis and Tommy—can stand the review of the critic's eye and put to blush the veteran.

Hattiesburg High School has secured the services of Prof. Foster, of Columbia, Miss., who comes highly recommended as an educator and Christian gentleman.

Woman's Work.

The annual meeting of the Seashore Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held Tuesday, July 17, 1888. The following officers were elected for this year:

President, Mrs. J. J. Lyons, New Orleans, La.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. Bancroft, Mobile, Ala.; recording secretary, Mrs. A. M. Zable, New Orleans, La.; treasurer, Mrs. A. J. Lewis, Meridian, Miss. Vice-presidents—Mrs. Christian Keener, Louisiana Conference; Mrs. Ab. Watts, Mississippi Conference; Mrs. Price Williams, Alabama Conference; Mrs. S. M. Jones, North Mississippi Conference; Mrs. Anson West, North Alabama Conference. Agent for Woman's Foreign Missionary Advocate, Mrs. J. H. Lakin, Montgomery, Ala.

The treasurer reported having paid over last year to the treasurer of the Woman's Board of Missions $45 50. Amount collected for dues this year, $31.

The society was addressed by Rev. Dr. McCoy, of Birmingham, Ala.; also by Dr. R. B. Crawford, of Eufaula, Ala.

These gentlemen remarked that they were glad to see the women of the church interested in mission work. In all heathen nations women were the greatest sufferers. The Woman's Missionary Society embodies some of the most intelligent and consecrated women of the church; their wisdom and sagacity were the admiration of the Conference. Although at the beginning their efforts had been small and feeble, they were now raising for missionary work as much as the entire revenues of the church twenty years ago. God's richest blessings were invoked upon the women and their labors.

Recording Secretary.

From the Work.

COUSHATTA, LA.

MR. EDITOR: On Saturday, June 16, with the assistance of Bro. W. H. Henderson, of the Grand Cane work, we began a series of protracted services in our church at this place. Bro. Henderson preached two sermons a day until Thursday. His sermons were on well-chosen subjects, and were not only attractive on account of his fluency of speech and earnestness of delivery, but on account of the deep thought and logical reasoning they contained. He revealed to his congregation many truths of the blessed Bible.

On Thursday evening Bro. L. L. Pickett, the evangelist from Texas, arrived, and the meeting was given up to him. He held two services a day, the morning services consisting of Bible reading and short exhortations, which were very interesting and profitable to all who took part in them. Bro. Pickett is a man of true holiness, and to be in his presence is to feel the influence of his perfection in Christ Jesus. He made very plain the necessity of sanctification, and aroused the church of Coushatta to a sense of her duties. His work was first to get the church to work, and, after accomplishing this to some extent, he preached, prayed, and sung for the salvation of sinners. Night after night the altar was filled with penitents, and, although there were not many added to the church, and only three or four were converted, as far as we could learn, we feel sure that seed for the Master was sown that will yet bring forth an abundant harvest. Church members who had been in the habit of attending balls and such worldly amusements were converted from the errors of their way. Many discontinued the filthy use of tobacco, and, last and greatest, family altars were erected where there had been none. Bro. Pickett labored with us about ten days. Then he was compelled to leave for Downsville, to fill an engagement with Bro. Eddie Galloway, to hold a meeting for him. We want Bro. Pickett to return. Praise the Lord! Yours in Christ,

R. A. DAVIS.

BUNKIE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: You published a communication, not long since, written by the senior preacher, Rev. S. H. Whatley, as to the general state of our circuit; but it is of one of our appointments—viz, Elno Bayou—that I wish to write at this time. I made my first visit to this community about the first of February, and almost exclaimed with Moses: "Carry me not up hence, unless thy presence go with me." But, thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory, his presence did go, and has continued with us; for by his Spirit's influence we have been enabled to pull down one of Satan's strongholds, and permanently establish, in place thereof, the kingdom of God and his Christ.

We held a protracted meeting with this people some time in April, at which we had twenty-five accessions, to which has since been added, from time to time, such as shall be saved. Here we have a flourishing Sunday-school, under the superintendence of our worthy brother, D. W. Bass. May God bless and magnify his labors, and so enable him to sow the good seed in the youthful heart and mind that by and by he may "come with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves!" We also have a prayer meeting at this place, under the leadership of Bro. B. C. Conant, who is very efficient, carrying on the work with great zeal and courage. All the members of this charge pray in public, and at their Thursday night meetings the power of God is made manifest.

I have just returned from a visit to this community after having preached three times, receiving two members and holding one prayer meeting. This people appreciate the gospel, and I feel assured in saying that they not only have their names on the register of God's temporal kingdom, but they are indelibly written in the Lamb's book of life; and though, strictly speaking, they be poor in this world's goods, they are rich in the love of Christ. Brethren, pray for this dear little flock, asking that the power of the ever blessed Spirit may enable them to be faithful unto death, and receive the crown of life.

J. E. DENSON,
Junior Preacher.

MAUREPAS, LIVINGSTON PARISH.

MR. EDITOR: My uncle, G. L. Jones, takes the ADVOCATE, and I read it every week, and I look forward, from one paper to the other, for a letter from Livingston circuit; and, as I see so few, I will try to give a few lines from Maurepas Church, of which I am a member. We held our Quarterly Conference here on June 23 and 24. Our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Ellis, was with us from Friday until Tuesday night, and preached several good sermons on Sunday. We had our new church dedicated at the Conference. On Saturday the general interest of this work was looked into. We feel very thankful to the Conference for sending such strong-minded, good, Christian-hearted men as Bros. Ellis and Tucker to us. With this short letter I will close. I am, yours, a lover of the cause of Christ,

M. F. BRADFORD.

LIVINGSTON CHARGE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed our protracted meeting at Live Oak, and my heart is made to rejoice while I write. The Lord was with us in great power. We commenced on Saturday, July 14, and continued until Wednesday night, preaching twice a day. The interest increased from the first. The Rev. James Healey, of Pipkin's Chapel, reached us on Monday morning, and preached six of the most heart-searching and soul-stirring sermons to which I have ever listened, the fruits of which will only be seen in the great morning of the resurrection. The church was greatly revived and harmonized. We had thirty-five accessions and about fifty conversions, and many more to follow.

ROBT. W. TUCKER.

Simeon's words were the swan song of Judaism, but Anna's were the lark song of Christianity. Most Christians are mere Jews, like Simeon, wishing to get to heaven as soon as they themselves are saved. But Anna caught the true spirit of Christianity, for instead of desiring to depart, she hurried away to communicate the good news "to all them that were looking for redemption in Jerusalem."—M. G. Pearse.

The McAll Mission, Paris.

The following letter from Mr. McAll, of Paris, is both interesting and instructive in regard to city mission work, and especially to those of New Orleans engaged in such work, as both the cities are largely under Roman Catholic influence, although the proportion of Protestantism is greater here than there. Mr. McAll's letter is published in the June number of The Missionary Review of the World. I quote as follows:

"I will attempt no more than a faint sketch of what we have been enabled to accomplish within the last two or three months in the way of extending the work, planting new stations in hitherto neglected districts of Paris and throughout France. This we have been enabled to do at a comparatively small additional outlay, as the entire work of many of the new stations is undertaken gratuitously by the French pastors and others in the respective localities, so that we have only to provide the little mission halls and their incidental expenses, which, in many cases, the very small means of these friends on the spot would not enable them to meet.

"I will begin with last evening, January 12. We had the privilege of opening at 8 o'clock P. M. our 114th station. It is situated in a quarter of Paris peopled by very poor and religiously ignorant people, in a district called Monceau. Several of our valued helpers live near the spot, and have long much desired to attempt something for their less favored neighbors. During the visit of M. Guillaume van der Beken, secretary of the Paris Young Men's Christian Association, some friends at Cincinnati felt so much interested in his statements respecting our work that they resolved to aid its extension. They assured an extra fund to M. van der Beken for this purpose. He and his wife and her cousin and two ladies, all living close by, sought out this new mission hall, and last night we set it apart for an effort to reach the poorest and most neglected around. It is in the Rue de Tocqueville, close by a benevolent institution in which houseless men get a meal and a night's lodging. From this proximity, we doubt not, that many will turn into the room and hear the gospel for the first time in their lives. The opening meeting was very encouraging. With the exception of a few friends, it consisted entirely of the neighbors, working people, etc. The place looked exceedingly neat and attractive, and was well filled. It was delightful to hear the people try to sing the hymns, and their attention was reverent while we commended them to our Father's blessing. These Christian ladies (mentioned above) of the neighborhood propose to organize in the hall, in addition to the public meeting, children's religious services, mothers' meetings, etc.

"On Wednesday, of last week, we opened our 113th station, at St. Germain-en-Saye, an ancient town of 18,000 inhabitants, a few miles from Paris. Mr. Elliott J. Shepherd, of New York, has generously supplied the funds for this new movement, in memory of the birth of a little daughter during his sojourn in the town. M. Bayroux, the French pastor of St. Germain, will take the direction of the station, we supplying him weekly with speakers from Paris. On the opening evening we were cheered to see the little hall filled, and though all was new and strange to the majority of those present, there was respectful and serious attention throughout. The speakers remarked that, while during long centuries the town had witnessed all manner of events and revolutions, never had a place been opened in its streets for the preaching of the pure gospel (the Protestant Church is on the outskirts) until that night. We all felt that it was our privilege to make thus a direct assault on the strongholds of ignorance and incredulity, and returned home with the glad conviction that 'the Lord was there.'

"Time and space fail me to detail the openings which increased our stations from 99 at the close of 1887 to 114 as it now stands. In all, we have increased our number of sittings by about 1,600, raising the number with which we start the year to about 17,000."

The following thoughts are suggested by this letter:

(1) These mission stations are not only not independent of the Protestant Churches and pastors in Paris, but they are aided, abetted and sustained altogether by many of them.

(2) They are "the auxiliaries of the French Protestant Churches," and from them "the French Protestant Churches are receiving converted souls that they never could have reached."

(3) They are mission stations only, and not established with a view of building up separate congregations (churches), although many of them will ultimately develop into established churches and become new centres of missionary influence and work among the masses.

Now, is not this the very kind of movement which we need in New Orleans?

Dr. Carradine said in his address, at the annual meeting of the City Mission, held in his church, that there were one hundred and fifty thousand people in this city who were habitual non-church goers. How can we reach these masses? The open-air meetings are doing it, and doing it successfully, too. But we want to make this work permanent. How can it be done? By establishing in each neighborhood where the open-air meetings are held one of these mission stations, to be sustained and worked up by the church most accessible to it. This can be done. From the number of names that have come in to me by the card system, I could establish a new church of from ten to twenty-five members within four blocks of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church. But, of course, this is not to be once thought of. Then what are we to do with these people? Do nothing? Then we have lost the fruit of our labor in large measure. But a mission station, held once a week, in the room already rented for a Sunday-school, and both under the care of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Church, would save these newly awakened and converted souls, and become a constant source of supply to the church working it. There is no doubt of it. The McAll work is positive demonstration of it. Therefore, it is no experiment in undertaking this work all through the city. If pursued systematically and persistently, its success is a certainty. Then the reaction on the church so at work would be great indeed. It would develop workers, and vary the class-meeting experience by enabling a man to tell what he has done for God. I verily believe that there are many people in our churches who want to work, and would work for God for the salvation of souls, if they only knew what to do. They are waiting to be put to work. There are willing souls standing idle in the market-places. We must find work for them.

Re-read McAll's letter. Would not such a system of mission work here give our churches plenty to do? Would not the direct reaction of such work increase the efficiency of the laity as Christian workers, and send a thrill of spiritual power all through the churches? Would we not increase in vitality, because we helped others to live? If to French Protestantism, McAll's mission stations are "the pulsation of their own church-heart," why can it not be so with us?

J. J. HILLINGSLEY.

Supplemental—Since writing the above, three weeks have elapsed. In addition to a mission school for Dr. Walker's Church of 70 scholars, a mission station has also been opened. Last Monday night the leader informed me that every chair (80) was occupied, and about twenty were standing during the entire service. B.

Woman's Work.

We present our readers with some extracts from the annual address of Mrs. E. J. Fullilove before the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society, at the meeting held in Alexandria, La., in June last. Want of space forbids publishing the whole address.

We have reached the close of another year for our Woman's Missionary Society. Before we turn a leaf in our ledger, let us review the open page and cast up the account. To our credit we find a gain of 17 societies and 555 members, renewed interest and actual growth. We feel the healthy glow of life in the whole body, and our spirit is strengthened for greater effort. Along this credit line runs the debit column. Let us reckon some of the items. Our Christian government and happy homes; our helpful ministers and consecrated churches; our blessed Bibles, and sweet songs of praise floating on every breeze; our precious prayers which bring God and the holy angels into the mystic recesses of our hearts, where the sacred hush is often "too pure for a word." All this we find crowded into this debit column; while over all we find written—pardon for all through the precious blood of the Savior. If we could sum up this line, think you our work would cancel the debt? There is but one thing we can give in part-payment—which is, ourselves—and even then we only give that which was his from the beginning. We are ready to turn a white, spotless page. We can only begin a creditable entry by writing over one line, "Savior;" over the other, "self." Perfect consecration is our only plea. The "dues" of our society—dimes—seem a paltry offering in this connection; yet when they follow holy consecration they become a sweet expression of our gratitude and a medium for the good news of salvation.

Already the consecrated dimes of a host of devoted women have enabled the vanguard of the Christian army to shout the glad tidings. The listening heathen have heard the silvery echo, and they send back the cry, "Come over and tell us." Thousands are girded for the march. Are you ready to join this army of light-bearers? It is your Savior who says, "Go." He redeemed your souls, and you are under as much obligation as any other; you are debtor as much as was Paul. Will you go? Will you leave home and friends and native land for the sake of him who died for you? It was for you—all the ignominy and shame and poverty and crucifying. He left his father's home of many mansions and the companionship of a million million angels for you, my sister, to show you the way of life. Your hearts are filled with unutterable love and you, doubtless, say to your own hearts, "I am his—all his;" but apply the test—will you go to rescue for him those souls who are crying for "light—more light"? Ah! who of us are ready for the going! Perfect consecration means going or sending just as God wills. Hard as the going seems, many stand ready for the march, waiting only for rations. The Lord's treasury has stood by the door for many long days to receive the money which is to supply these rations. The Lord himself stands over against the treasury, and sees every penny cast in. Shall we be content to have our blessings mensured by our mites? Do we place our mites in sending alongside the going of others, and hope to share equally in the reward? We would be loth to have our share of eternal life measured by our pitiful mites. Our heads and hearts may be consecrated, but I fear our gold has never been touched by the fingers of God's love. Few of us have ever given gold. The wise men brought to the Babe of Bethlehem gold, the purest type of material wealth, and sweet perfume, the emblem of cheerful giving. Did all the gold and all the gratitude vanish with the eastern magi?

Sisters, we have written "self" over the credit line on our new page, and "self" includes everything. God's plans will go on, whether we fail or fall, for the resources of the universe are his. If we refuse to labor with him, another will step in and win our crown. We have balanced our account; the new page is before us, and we are workers for eternity. The lions in our pathway are chained. Have faith in our cause, and "let the sneers of ridicule pass over the polished surface of our souls like a breath on a mirror which evaporates, leaving no trace behind." It is before our Savior's radiant face we must stand or fall. He will meet us in "the quiet valley between the mountains of sorrow and prayer."

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Briefs.

Be sure to read the article by "Barnabas," on this page. Two more are to follow soon.

Chaplain McCabe, in Zion's Herald, figures it out that there are in the Methodist Episcopal Church 400,000 users of tobacco, and that they spend $10,000 a day. In a year this amounts to $14,600,000. The Chaplain, who is intensely missionary in his thoughts and feelings, suggests that the tobacco be stopped, and this amount given to the missionary collection. We hardly ever see a man or woman stop an expensive habit that the money saved may go to help the Lord's cause.

The necrological list of the first half of 1888 includes many distinguished names—the Emperor William of Germany; the Emperor Frederick of Germany; Chief Justice Morrison R. Waite, Roscoe Conkling, A. Bronson Alcott, Louise May Alcott, Matthew Arnold, John T. Hoffman, Benjamin H. Brewster, William Dorsheimer, W. W. Corcoran; ex-Governor Joel Parker, of New Jersey; Henri Herz, Stephen Heller and Ciro Pinsuti, musicians; Professors Bonamy Price, Asa Gray and Lauren S. P. Hickok; ex-Consul-General George Walker; E. Labiche, the French author; the Rev. Alexander H. Mackonochie, the ritualist; D. R. Locke, better known as "Nasby;" the artists Edward Lear, Felix O. C. Darley and D. H. Strother (Porte Crayon); George H. Corliss, the eminent engineer and mechanician; Henry Bergh, Joseph W. Drexel, Jean Baptiste Godwin, the French philanthropist; ex-Governor Horace Fairbanks, of Vermont; Dr. Emil Bessels, the polar explorer; Dr. Cornelius R. Agnew, Rear-Admiral C. S. Boggs, and Mrs. Mary Howitt, the novelist.

Is it not cheaper, and in every way wiser, to endeavor to endow a college that is already in existence with a good history behind it than to try to build up a new one? The money necessary to found and build up a new college if put into one already domiciled in ample buildings will do far more good. If the Methodists in our territory were to conclude to build a new college, after they had expended $50,000, they would not be as far advanced as Centenary College is to-day. Then, why not put the $50,000 in Centenary? If you add $50,000 to $50,000, you have $100,000. If you add $50,000 to $00,000, you have $50,000—just what you started with. If you have money to put in a college, put it in one already in existence, and you may have a reasonable hope that it will accomplish something. New colleges, unless amply endowed at the start, are doomed to years of struggle for existence. We understand there are men among us who have money to put in schools and are simply waiting to see what the church will do in the matter of educating her sons. We are glad to hear this, and as glad to say to those waiting to give, that the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana are fast coming to the wise conclusion that it is far better for the church and the young men of the church to endow Centenary College than to spend money experimenting on a new institution. So those who have been holding back may now give their money in confidence that it will accomplish much.

The Teachings of Jesus.

Beginning with the Sermon on the Mount, whose interpretations of all preceding revelation flashed light over all the past, and ending with the remarkable discourse uttered the night before his crucifixion, in which the grandest thoughts and purest feelings and sublimest emotions of his great nature bubbled over in a limpid stream of eloquent teaching which has gladdened all the ages with hope, the study of the utterances of Jesus and his methods of communicating thought disclose the fact that as to both utterances and methods he is different from every other teacher of morals. There is seen something which differentiates him sharply from all other speakers. The ponderings and musings and studies of the world over his "sayings" have justified and proved the truth of the announcement of his enemies: "Never man spake like this man."

How can this be explained? One thing that helps to explain it is the strange fact that in no place, in no manner, nor at any time did Jesus ever antagonize a single truth in the world. Such an attitude no teacher had ever stood in before. His teaching, while it largely extended the range of the human mind in the realm of truth, was yet in harmony with all the truth the world had—with the whole of it taken together, and with each fragment of it taken separately. In enlarging the field of human vision over the domain of morals, he poured in a light which revealed the old truths in their real relations. And this revelation became a true interpretation of that which had gone before in the speeches and writings of "holy men of old." This strange attitude is assumed and clearly shown on the mount when he delivered the great discourse. In reading that sermon we see the dimness of the dawn brightening under the rays of the rising sun. And as all natural light has its exhaustless fountain in the sun, so all moral light, all truth, has crystallized in its permanent form in the teachings of Jesus.

Another thing that helps to explain the difference between Jesus and all other teachers is his claim to absolute authority to teach, and his unquestioned assertion that his was the only authoritative teaching. No other teacher could do such a thing as this without contradicting the plainest facts of his own consciousness. Such a claim can not be made by anyone who is not in conscious possession of all truth. The possession of truth carries the authority to teach. The more clearly the truth is apprehended the larger becomes the authority for its proclamation. Jesus being the fountain of truth—holding it all in conscious possession—is the only authorized teacher of morals; and this tremendous claim he openly made. From his earliest to his latest words there is no word, nor act, nor tone that diminishes aught from this high claim. The consciousness of the possession of truth, and the consequent authority to teach it, left no room for theory or speculation, and took away all hesitancy. Jesus never theorizes, never speculates, never hesitates. Such acts imply doubt, and Jesus never doubts. Standing at the center of truth, he speaks with authority: "This is truth, believe it and be saved; reject it, and be lost forever." That is all. Nothing can be added. Nothing can be subtracted. It is the last word that can be said. Is it any wonder they said, "Never man spake like this man"?

The New York Herald says that whenever and wherever there is a pulpit on fire the people always go in crowds to see it burn.

A Side Light.

BY "BARNABAS."

The school question recurs. Reading the earnest appeals being made for the patronage and endowment of Wofford, Centenary and other honored institutions of the church, one is led to speculate upon the reasons why these appeals are not more effectual. Upon this subject the communications in our Advocates for a year or two past reveal many men of many minds. In a multitude of counsellors there is a multitude of counsel. We await with interest the advent of the alchemist who will transmute the heterogeneous mass into "wisdom."

The recent transfer of prominent educators from our church colleges to those under the control of the State is, in this connection, significant, if not alarming. Such an exodus can be accounted for on but one or two hypotheses: that the salaries of our college professors are not generally adequate to the demands of respectable living, or that the State University or the scientific school offer superior advantages for the Christian culture of young men, and hence a larger field of usefulness to those who are engaged in it. It would be hardly charitable to suppose that these Christian educators are so far dominated by the spirit of worldly ambition as to have used the prominence they have acquired under the patronage of the church as a stepping-stone to higher things, financially; that they have merely gone from a good salary in a church school to a better salary in a State University. Whatever may be the motive prompting these changes, their effect can not but be hurtful to the interests of denominational education. The time has come when to hold their own in comparison with those of the State our church schools must be liberally endowed. Endowments must come in one of two ways—either from small contributions by many contributors (which is the better way), or large gifts by men of means. The rich men of the South today are those generally who have made their fortunes since the war. The toil and self-denial by which these were made are yet fresh in mind. Such men can not, therefore, be expected to hazard their means in the endowment of institutions of learning, unless they can see in those having these institutions in charge a devotion and zeal approximating that which they themselves have displayed in earning the money they are solicited to give. Nor can the enthusiasm of the church at large be aroused by the example of chosen men—ministers especially, called from the high work of preaching the gospel to that of Christian education—abandoning the position in which the wisdom of the church has placed them, either for the sake of a higher salary, or for the uncertain prospect of a wider field of usefulness in a scientific or other secular school. If the loss to the church ended with the outgoing of these eminent teachers, the hurt would not be so serious. But when we reflect that to fill the vacancies thus created our best men must be called from the active ministry of the Word—and try to estimate the effect upon a gainsaying world of this movement, which goes always from Church to State schools at higher salaries, and never in the reverse direction—the damage done calls for serious consideration. The common sense of the world and the common sense of the church agree in this: that the best plea for Christian education is Christian education; and no one can doubt that this can be better accomplished by the conversion of the young through the instrumentality of thoroughly religious men and women in a church school than by any effort to convert science to Christianity through the medium of an occasional professorship in a State University or institutes of technology.

The case is not greatly relieved by the fact that some of the parties to this exodus are laymen. A layman qualified for teaching in a denominational school should be one whose call to the professor's chair is only less urgent than his call to the ministry—one whose life and teaching are animated by the essential spirit of the gospel. There is not a wide difference after all between a preaching teacher and a teaching preacher, and the church's hold upon the one should not be less strong than her hold upon the other.

The conclusion of the whole matter for the present is this: Let the church abandon the policy of multiplying schools and colleges beyond her capacity to keep them up, thus driving useful men by starving salaries to secular institutions; and, then, if any choose to go for the sake of gain or at the prompting of individual judgment, let them go in all charity, but not with the consent or endorsement of the church. The exigency calls for loyalty all round—in the professor's chair, as well as among the membership of the church at large.

President Hunnicutt Accepts.

After due deliberation, I have accepted the presidency of Centenary College, constrained by a deep sense of that obligation which rests upon me, in common with all Christians, to maintain and advance the agencies of Christian education among us. No outward appliance is so much needed by our church in all this region as a well-equipped college for boys which shall be liberally and largely patronized by the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana. Such a college I most ardently desire, and in this desire I feel assured I am joined by thousands throughout both these States. No college for boys, deserving the name, was ever well maintained without an endowment or its equivalent. I, therefore, propose that we immediately begin an energetic movement to endow Centenary College. It has ample grounds, large and elegant buildings, a healthy and accessible location, and is worth, at least, seventy-five thousand dollars. My proposition is that $250,000 be raised for its endowment in ten or less annual installments, and that $25,000 of that amount be raised the present year. All established colleges are endowed, and our church colleges all, as with a simultaneous impulse, are moving for endowment. Indeed, their life depends upon it. We can not compete, as we must, with State and other endowed institutions without endowment. I propose the following plan for endowing Centenary College:

1. That any friend of education, able to do so, be and is hereby earnestly requested to endow a professorship, to be selected and named by the endower. Two persons might unite in endowing a chair with twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, the professorship to bear their joint names.

2. That twenty-five persons be requested to give $1,000 each to raise the $25,000 called for this year. (Several have already given their notes under this proposition, and we hope the amount will be raised by the subscribers of $1,000 each. Notes may be given payable in installments or bearing interest, the principal not being collectable while the interest is duly paid.)

3. That all friends of this movement be requested to subscribe one or more hundred dollars to the general endowment fund, either in notes payable, say, in four annual installments, or in notes bearing interest as above specified.

4. That our women, some of whom have accomplished wonders in many other great enterprises of the church in recent years, be asked to aid in raising this endowment fund by forming multiplying guilds. Say, one gives five dollars and induces five of her friends to give five dollars each, and each of these five induces five others; or twenty-five persons to give five each, they all reporting to the first one, will make a sum of $155. Or, one gives one dollar and induces four others to do likewise, and each of these four induces four others, and each of these four others to contribute a dollar each, which would amount to eighty-five dollars.

Now, friends, this means work for God in the cause of Christian education. Let us do it.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

The Southern Methodist Review.

This quarterly is on our table with its one hundred and forty pages of choice reading matter. Prof. R. M. Smith writes in a reverent spirit of "The Revelation to the Greeks," quoting from Plato, Aristotle, Socrates, Æschylus and Diogenes Laertius, to prove that "into the hearts of all true seekers after God did come a true revelation from on high." "How Shall I Educate My Girl," by Jesse T. Littleton, is an article that should be read by every parent and every teacher of girls. Dr. C. G. Andrews has shown us in "Several Scripture Readings" that he has the happy faculty of sifting out the true meaning of Scripture words and phrases by comparing several translations together. He shows that Mr. Wesley's translation has anticipated many of the changes made by the Revised Version, even taking "a front rank with the productions of the combined wisdom of the succeeding ages." "Father Ryan and His Poems" are discussed by Rev. J. Thomas Pate, and many of the sparkling thoughts of the poet-priest are reproduced. Rev. O. E. Brown contributes an article on the theological line, on "Gracious Ability," using that term as a synonym of "Prevenient Grace." Prof. Martin, of Vanderbilt University, contributes his third paper on the "Book of Jonah." Rev. C. R. Lamar writes of "Freedom and Law;" and Rev. Boone Keeton of "Analogy or Identity." Both articles are of interest. Rev. C. H. Buchanan contributes a very valuable paper, on "Worship and Its Abuse." There is scarcely anything more "abused" than worship; and if this article on its abuse could be scattered widely through the church, it would go far toward effecting a reformation. The editor's table is a rich feast. In "Christ in the Book of Job," Dr. Harrison shows that the Authorized Version has about the true translation of the celebrated passage in reference to the resurrection. "The Progress of the Publishing House," is an encouraging resume of it business. In his article, "The Great Cryptogram," the Doctor completely demolishes Mr. Donnelly and his cipher. "Methodist Deaconesses," is an article of special value at this time on a subject which is attracting a great deal of interest in all the churches. Altogether this is an able and valuable number of the Review.

The number of regularly issued publications in the United States and Canada is 15,420, and the total circulation of each issue is 30,165,220—that is, an average of one copy to every two people of the population of the United States. Nearly 18,000,000 copies are sent out once in seven days by the weekly press—or one copy for about every three people. The monthly periodicals issue an aggregate of 6,000,000 copies each issue, or about one periodical for every ten of our population.

Notes.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church did two notable things recently. It confirmed a law requiring members to give one-tenth of their earnings, and adopted a resolution directing the sessions to prosecute, according to church discipline, members who advertise in Sunday newspapers.

In one of our churches in Charleston, S. C., the Sunday-school recently had a "College Day." Addresses were made concerning Wofford College, and a collection taken to aid in its endowment, and the amount, $100, sent to the agent of the college. It occurs to us that this is a good way to bring before our people information concerning our schools; that by it interest will be awakened and enthusiasm kindled in a cause that ought to be dear to every Methodist. It is specially a good point gained when the children in our Sunday-schools are made acquainted with what the church is endeavoring to do for their education and training for the work of life.

The amount of money we are contributing to carry out the last command of our blessed Lord—well, it really makes us sick to think about it! Just think of it, and you will feel, perhaps, the same qualms. Eleven hundred thousand Christians contributing two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for mission work is a "spectacle to men and angels." A brother in our office, the other day, said we were not giving enough money to kill the snakes in one province of Africa. If we don't do better, God will "turn our blessings into curses." Twenty-five cents apiece is the measure of our missionary zeal for one year!

What Dr. Potter says, in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, in regard to Emory College will apply with equal force to our Centenary College. It is this:

If Emory's normal constituency were in working relations with the college, five hundred students would represent it properly. This is a perfectly reasonable statement of the possibilities of the college. We are not thinking of the next generation, but of the next year.

The more you think over that statement, the more you see that it is a "reasonable statement of the possibilities of the college."

We had the pleasure of meeting our worthy confrere, Dr. Carter, of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, while on our recent visit to Seashore. The Doctor is greatly improved in health and almost entirely relieved of sciatica, from which he has suffered so much. As a Methodist preacher he has had a varied experience. The first year of his ministry he received as a salary the full amount of thirty-six dollars, and the second year he received only a palmetto hat; still he lived and is now a great preacher as well as a good editor.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

We reproduce the above for the purpose of saying that the gift of that hat is one of the bright spots in our itinerant life. We think, however, that the brother whose quarterage one year was a barrel of walnuts is entitled to "honorable mention."

This paragraph from the Evangelist touches in an interesting manner a subject that seems to be of general interest at this particular time:

How long should a sermon be? Some say more; some say less. There is no rule which will work in all cases. But any preacher who wishes to know how long his sermons should be, can easily ascertain if he is capable of reading the expression on the faces of his audience, and will watch for opportunities to indulge in that intellectual exercise. So long as those faces plainly say "Go on; don't you see we are interested?" he may safely continue, provided he has not already continued long enough. He should never risk a very emphatic or even threatening demand to stop. If he finishes while the faces cry "Go on," he will be sure to see them again and often. If he waits until they utter a vigorous protest against his sermon long drawn out, he will be sure to hunt for them thereafter in vain. So there is no fixed measure for a sermon. Some are too short at forty minutes; others may be too long at twenty. It is only poor sermons, or sermons poorly preached, the people require to be very short.

In his report of the Seashore Camp Meeting and the preachers who dispensed the Word of life on that occasion, Editor McCoy, of the Alabama Advocate, has this reference to himself:

As to the editor of this Advocate and his pulpit labors, we quote the following from the Times-Democrat for the benefit of our friends: "Dr. McCoy is held in high esteem as an exhorter of great strength in the church." In the midst of so many great preachers it was highly proper to have one first-class exhorter. We thank the reporter for the compliment paid us, and rejoice to know that even in this age of progress and development Methodism has one good exhorter left as a landmark.

Whether it was exhortation or preaching, we happen to know that no one held the attention of the large audience more closely than Bro. McCoy, and no words were more fervent and earnest than his.

Personals.

The portrait of Bishop Galloway in the last week's Clarion-Ledger does not look anything like him. A paper that can't do any better than that ought to quit trying.

We call attention to the Centenary Endowment column in this paper. Now, friends, give your aid to this scheme. Notes for whatever amount you are willing to give may be given to Rev. P. A. Johnston, Forrest, Miss.; Rev. J. V. Penn, Jackson, La.; Prof. G. H. Wiley, Jackson, La., or to Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Port Gibson, Miss. President Hunnicutt, in a private note to us, says, "I hear of students for Centenary wherever I go."

Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone celebrated their golden wedding, July 25. Testimonials in the shape of letters, telegrams and presents poured in upon them by hundreds.

The Sam Jones Camp Meeting, near Webster, Miss., will begin August 17, and continue about ten days. Better and more ample accommodations will be furnished the public than at any previous meeting. Our thanks are tendered to Bro. Cassels for an invitation to be present.

The seventh annual report of the Law and Order Society of the City of Philadelphia is one of the most interesting documents we have seen in many a day. The addresses from prominent men on the subjects of Law and Order are indeed very fine. Our thanks are hereby tendered to the secretary, Rev. Robt. Graham, for this report.

We have received the catalogue and circular of the Memphis Conference Female Institute, located at Jackson, Tenn. This is one of the oldest female colleges in the South and has done much good work. Dr. A. W. Jones is the president, which position he has held for thirty-five years.

The East Mississippi Female College, at Meridian, Miss., is now under the guidance of Rev. R. M. Saunders, recently of Norfolk, Va. One of the papers published where President Saunders last lived and labored has this concerning him:

He has moved among us with such quiet usefulness and grace, and met with so much earnestness and diligence in the field of knowledge, that his place can not be well filled—a man of modesty and wide learning, a preacher of ability and eloquence and one of the most distinguished educators in this part of the country, he has naturally become endeared to our people and they will regret to see him go away.

Augustus Bell, colored, died recently near Rodney, Miss. He was the body servant of Gen. Jackson at the battle of New Orleans and was 103 years old.

Rev. E. P. Roe, the popular novelist, died at his home on the Hudson river, July 20.

Rev. J. W. Honnoll, presiding elder of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, has published a thoughtful sermon on "The Sin Against the Holy Ghost." Copies can be had of the author, Clarksdale, Miss. Price 10 cents.

Rev. J. W. McNeil, the efficient secretary of the Hennington Camp Ground Association, near Crystal Springs, Miss., has our thanks for an invitation to the seventeenth annual camp meeting. The exercises will begin Thursday, August 16, and close the following Wednesday.

We had a pleasant call, last week, from Prof. Grote, of the Southern University, Ala. He was en route to Texas to visit his mother. He speaks encouragingly of the future prospects of the Southern University. Prof. Grote occupies the chair of modern languages.

Dr. Cunnyngham, editor of our Sunday-school literature, is on a tour of visitation to the Western Conferences.

Keachie College, of which Rev. T. N. Coleman is president, has removed to Nacogdoches, Texas, and will begin operations in its new field next September.

Rev. James A. Newsom, the pastor of our church in Madison, Miss., died at that place, July 29. He was a promising and popular young pastor.

A note from Bro. Johnston, agent for Centenary College, says: "Five hundred dollars more for Centenary's endowment at the Meridian District Conference."

Bro. Mellen writes of a "glorious meeting" held by Bro. Burton and himself at Adams Church, Lincoln county, the particulars of which will be sent soon. Send us always such news, brethren. It encourages everybody.

It affords us pleasure to chronicle the marriage of Bro. Van Valkenburgh, of the Louisiana Conference, and Miss Ellen Thomson, of this city. The happy event was consummated under the tabernacle at the Seashore Camp Ground by Dr. Evans in the presence of a large number of interested friends. The itinerant can't do without a helpmeet. We would scatter flowers along their path.

Books.

THE GREAT PYRAMID OF EGYPT—ITS TEACHING TO US AS A PEOPLE. A lecture delivered at Champaign. By Charles Latimer, C. E. Price 25 cents. Publisher, P. H. Jones, Chicago, Ill.

The fact that the author of this work—who was chief engineer of the N. Y. P. & O. R. R.—takes the ground that the great Pyramid of Egypt was built by men inspired by God, will render it interesting to those engaged in scientific religious investigation. This is the last published work of the author (lately deceased) and is given in an interesting, readable style, which commends it to all. It is well printed and handsomely bound.

THE RISE OF SILAS LAPHAM By W. D. Howells.

This new number of Ticknor's admirable paper series of original copyright novels is one of the latest works of this prince of American novelists. Many critics rank this as his greatest and most impressive work, and the crowning triumph of the school of realism in American literature. It is the fortieth volume of Ticknor's Paper Series, which has been one of the greatest successes in the American publishing trade.

TWO COLLEGE GIRLS. By Helen Dawes Brown. Ticknor and Company, Boston. Wharton and Bro., New Orleans. Price 50c.

This book belongs to Ticknor's Paper Series of choice reading. It is a vivacious and highly amusing picture of these pretty and fascinating seniors and sophomores, the scene being laid at one of the great Eastern colleges for women (some say at Vassar). It is rich in beautiful passages of tender pathos, strong, simple and vivid, and full of sustaining interest. Nothing has been published since "Little Women" that will so strike the public taste. The action takes place in one of the leading American colleges for women, and although no definite localities are mentioned, the scene will be easily recognized.

LIVING RELIGIONS; OR, THE GREAT RELIGIONS OF THE ORIENT FROM SACRED BOOKS AND MODERN CUSTOMS. By Rev. I. N. Fradenburgh, Ph. D., D. D. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price $1 50.

This is an instructive book on a very interesting subject. The religions of the East are commanding more attention in the West than ever before. The author not only gives a clear statement of what these religions are as to doctrines and precepts, but he gives an account of the manners and customs and religious rites and ceremonies of the various peoples who hold and practice them. While there is much to admire in these religions, their brightest light fades into darkness when brought alongside of Christianity. The religions examined in this book are, Buddhism, Taoism, Confucianism, Brahmanism, Hinduism, Zoroastrianism and Mohammedanism. All these are written of in good style and many quotations from their sacred books are given, besides sixteen illustrations and a steel engraved likeness of the author.

ORIGIN OF THE BAPTISTS By Rev. J. R. Riggin, of the Little Rock Conference. Price 10 cents.

The author has taken the histories of the best Baptist authors and out of them has constructed an argument to show that the Baptists are quite a modern sect. Whether the readers will all consider the argument unanswerable, we do not know, but we are sure all will be interested and more fully informed on the subject than before reading this pamphlet.

CATALOGUE OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS of the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. J. D. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

This is a catalogue of books that have been selected, classified and arranged in libraries in accordance with a resolution to that effect by the last General Conference. The catalogue also contains a list of Sunday-school supplies and requisites. If you want to know what to get for your school send for this catalogue.

The sixth annual report of the Board of Church Extension of our church is an interesting document, and shows that large advance in the cause of Christ among the people has resulted from this arm of the service. Dr. Morton and his helpers are doing good work.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

WHICH LOVED HER BEST?

"I love you, mother," said little John;
Then forgetting his work, his cap went on,
And he was off to the garden swing,
And left her the wood and water to bring.

"I love you, mother," said rosy Nell,
"I love you better than tongue can tell."
Then she teased and pouted full half the day,
Till her mother rejoiced when she went to play.

"I love you, mother," said little Fan,
"To day I'll help you all I can.
How glad I am school doesn't keep!"
So she rocked the baby till it fell asleep.

"I love you, mother," again they said,
Three little children going to bed.
How do you think that mother guessed
Which of them, really, loved her best?

—Anon.

MR. EDITOR: I have been wanting to write to the ADVOCATE ever since mamma has been taking your dear paper. I read the cousins' letters, but never see one from this circuit. Bro. Backus is our preacher, and we all love him, and Sister Backus and their little girl, Daisy, very much. They are doing everything they can to build up the religious cause; have established a Sabbath-school in our neighborhood, which is flourishing and encouraging family altars all around. I am a little girl ten years old. My papa is dead. I have no brothers and only one sister. She is married, but is living in the house with us this year. I will close, hoping Bro. Daniel Ellis and family will see this at Carthage, Miss. We hope they are well and doing well. Sister often speaks of their kindness to her when she boarded in DeKalb and went to school. I will expect to see this in print.

PEARL HOUSTON.

DEKALB, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to your paper for some time, I thought I would write this pleasant afternoon. Mr. Editor, we have a fine preacher. He is Bro. Godfrey. I like him so much. I will be so glad when our meeting starts. I hope we will have good weather for it. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I joined under Bro. Whatley. The Baptist meeting was very nice; had dinner on the grounds every day. Well, I will close for this time, hoping my letter will not reach the waste-basket.

LULA TALIAFERRO.

EVERGREEN, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My papa is our preacher. Mr. J. F. Miller is our superintendent. I like him very much. I will answer Ella Foster's question: It is if the word "hell" is used in any of Paul's writings. Looking through Paul's writings I did not find the word "hell" therein. Hearing my father speak of editorial scissors, I will close at once.

Your little friend,

MATTIE E. AHRENS.

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl thirteen years old. I go to Sunday-school nearly every Sunday. I have a nice time when I go fishing. We are going to Bayou Delake fishing. Wont we have a nice time? I have a little pet dog. Her name is Fanny. I will close by asking a question: Where in the Bible is the word "grapes" found?

ELLA BARNHILL.

EVERGREEN, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking of writing to your paper for a long while. The Baptist State Convention met at Evergreen, July 5. I went every day except Friday. We had a delightful time; had dinner on the grounds every day. I will close for this time, hoping to see my letter in print.

A Word to the Boys.

If we are to have drunkards in the future some of them are to come from the boys to whom I am writing; and I ask you again if you want to be one of them? No! of course you don't!

Well, I have a plan for you that is just as sure to save you from such a fate as the sun is to rise to-morrow morning. It never failed; it never will fail; and I think it worth knowing. Never touch liquor in any form. That is the plan, and it is not only worth knowing, but it is worth putting in practice.

I know you don't drink now, and it seems to you as though you never would. But your temptation will come, and it probably will come this way: You will find yourself, some time, with a number of companions, and they will have a bottle of wine on the table. They will drink and offer it to you. They will regard it as a manly practice, and very likely they will look upon you as a milksop if you don't indulge with them. Then what will you do? eh, what will you do? Will you say, "No no! none of that stuff for me! I know a trick worth half a dozen of that!" or will you take the glass with your common sense protesting and your conscience making the whole draught bitter and a feeling that you have damaged yourself, and then go off with a hot head and a sulking soul that at once begins to make apologies for itself and will keep doing so during all its life? Boys, do not become drunkards.—Dr. Holland.

Children's Sayings.

Our own little Floy was, one day, trying to "dressmaker" with a rusty needle, and sundry long breaths and short jerks gave evidence that all was not plain sailing. At last the little seamstress gave up in despair, and went to her work-basket.

"There, now, mamma!" she exclaimed, "I'm going to run this needle through my enemy!"

Mr. Pilsbury is something of a taxidermist, and one afternoon made preparations to skin an owl, preparatory to mounting it. Phil, his ardent little admirer, heard of proceedings, and rushed frantically home, exclaiming, "Mamma, mamma, mayn't I go'n see Mr. Cranberry peel an owl?"

A little girl was one day given for the first time some gooseberries. After a while she came back and asked for some more "turkeyberries."

THE RIGHT KIND OF A YOUNG MAN TO LOVE.—I love a young man who loves his mother so fondly that for her sake he is chivalrous to other women. I love a young man who will step out of his way to avoid crushing a worm, and will not deem it beneath his dignity to succor a stray kitten. I love a young man who is pure-hearted and slow to laugh at smutty stories. I love a young man who believes there is a nobler career in life than to be a good dancer or a successful society man. I love a young man who is not ashamed of tears for others' sorrows, for a tender song or for a beautiful thought. I love a young man who can not be laughed out of a duty, or ridiculed from a purpose. I love a young man who hates whisky as angels hate Satan, and thinks too much of his brain to make smoked meat of it. I despise a "goody goody" young man, but I love a good one. I would not like to be even third cousin to a dude, but I love a young man who is hail-fellow well met with nice girls and scorns not the companionship of his sisters.—Our Dumb Animals.

NEATNESS IN GIRLS.—Neatness is a good thing for a girl, and if she does not learn it when she is young, she never will. It takes a great deal more neatness to make a girl look well than it does to make a boy look passable. Not because a boy, to start with, is better looking than a girl, but his clothes are of a different sort, not so many colors in them, and people don't expect a boy to look so pretty as a girl. A girl that is not neatly dressed is called a sloven, and no one likes to look at her. Her face may be pretty and her eyes bright, but if there is a spot of dirt on her cheek, and her fingers' ends are black with ink, and her shoes are not laced or buttoned up, and her apron is dirty, and her collar is not buttoned, and her skirt is torn, she can not be liked.

Household.

OIL STOVES.—The editor of the Household department of the New England Farmer, in treating of oil stoves, quotes as follows from a lady who uses them: "She says that a three-wicked stove is needed to do the work of a family of four or five persons, and with such a stove everything can be done, and no wood or coal fire is needed for washing or ironing. Visiting the headquarters of another kind of stove, and one familiar through long and satisfactory use, I heard the need of cleanliness rehearsed. The stove should be daily washed with soap and water after filling it not quite full. The outside of the cones through which the wicks pass, must be rubbed with sand-paper once a week, and the flame should be kept burning as much as three-fourths of an inch above the cones, for if turned lower the combustion would be incomplete, and the odor from it a source of trouble.

"If one is to make good cake or crochet a pattern, she follows directions closely; but when she buys a machine of any sort, she is very likely to ignore the 'recipe' that goes with it. If you invest in a stove, read carefully the concise rules accompanying it, as not one needless direction is given. Also be prepared to make some mistakes at first, and be sure that the fault lies in some misunderstanding, and not in the stove itself, if it is a kind which has been in general use for some time. Once becoming accustomed to its use, it will be found helpful in winter as well as summer." The experience in the Chronicle Household has shown the oil stove to be a great saving of heat and discomfort in the kitchen work in summer.

OLD CLOTHES.—It is a mystery to many people how scourers of old clothes can make them almost as good as new. Take for instance a shiny old coat, vest, or pair of pants of broadcloth, cassimere, or diagonal. The scourer makes a strong warm soapsuds and plunges the garment into it, souses it up and down, rubs the dirty places, if necessary, puts it through a second suds, then rinses it through several waters and hangs it to dry on the line. When nearly dry he takes it in, rolls it up for an hour or two, and then presses it. An old cotton cloth is laid on the outside of the coat and the iron passed over that until all the wrinkles are out; but the iron is removed before steam ceases to rise from the goods, else they will be shiny. Wrinkles that are obstinate are removed by laying a wet cloth over them and passing the iron over that. If any shiny places are seen they are treated as the wrinkles are; the iron is lifted while the full cloud of steam rises and brings the nap up with it. Cloth should always have a suds made specially for it, as if washed in that which has been used for white cotton or woolen clothes, lint will be left in the water and cling to the cloth. In this manner we have known the same coat and pantaloons to be renewed time and again, and have all the look and feel of new garments. Good broadcloth and its fellow cloths will bear many washings and look better every time because of them.

CLOTH MADE OF GLASS.—M. Dubus Bonnet, of Lille, France, has invented a process of spinning and weaving glass into cloth. The warp is composed of silk, forming the body and groundwork; on which the pattern in glass appears, as effected by the weft. The requisite flexibility of glass thread for manufacturing purposes is to be ascribed to its extreme fineness, as not less than from fifty to sixty of the original threads (spun by steam-engine power) are required to form one thread of the weft. The process is slow, for no more than a yard of cloth can be produced in twelve hours. The work however, is extremely beautiful and comparatively cheap. A French paper, commenting on this discovery, says: "When we figure to ourselves an apartment decorated with cloth of glass, and resplendent with lights, we must be convinced that it will equal in brilliancy all that the imagination can conceive and realize; in a word, the wonders of the enchanted palace mentioned in the Arabian tales."

There is a still, small rain from heaven that has more to do with the blessedness of nature, than the mightiest earthquake or the loviest rainbow.—Macdonald.

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 76 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect, and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Hollis Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 14 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

SELSER—MATILDA CAROLINE SELSER was born in Jefferson county, Miss., October 27, 1825. When quite young her parents moved to Warren county, where she grew up to womanhood and was married to John Durden, May 19, 1842. When quite young she made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she remained a devoted member till death. In Lexington, Miss., June 29, 1888. Her end was peaceful—Indeed, it was triumphant.

The last interview I had with her she gave the most satisfactory testimony as to her faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. She was a woman of strong mind, cultivated, and of decided character, which was manifest in all the relations of life. To her deeply bereaved husband, who still lingers with us, she was everything that could be desired; affectionate, devoted, patient and kind, willingly sharing with him all the burdens and sorrows of life. Perhaps husband was never more dependent upon wife, consulting her in all matters that pertained to domestic life. Hence their relations to each other was a beautiful illustration of the apostle's injunction to husband and wife. As mother, she was an admirable illustration of the truly Christian character. By her wise counsels and diligent attention to the duties which constitute the Christian mother she made an indelible impression upon her deeply bereaved children, who to-day realize keenly the loss they have sustained and may we not hope that she will continue to speak to them in motherly address, saying, "Follow me as I follow Christ!" As neighbor and friend, she was a noble illustration of Christian character. Kind and generous, she was ever ready to minister to the comfort of those in distress, being no respector of persons. But in her character there was nothing more conspicuous than her devotion to her church. Having been trained in her early religious life under the influence of those distinguished men whose names are historic in Mississippi Methodism—Winans, Drake, Lane, and others—it is not surprising that she exhibited such maturity of the Christian character. She loved her church, its doctrines and discipline, and was never happier than when doing something to advance its interests. The Sunday-school was her special care. She stood by it, and labored to sustain it under the most discouraging circumstances. She never failed to meet her class when it was possible to do so, and was always prepared to instruct them. Who will, who can fill her place in the church? Who will take up her mantle and carry the work on? Our little weak church in Lexington has been sorely afflicted in the last fifteen months; but while "God hurles his workmen, he carries his work on." To her ten children and numerous grandchildren it is an irreparable loss; but they weep not as those who have no hope.

In offering this humble tribute to her memory, her pastor feels that he has sustained a loss that can not be repaired. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones and lead them up to a happy reunion in the "sweet by-and-by."

THOS. Y. RAMSEY.

JOURNEY—SISTER MARY A. TEAL was born August 24, 1858; married to W. T. M. S. Journey, January 25, 1883; died March 16, 1888. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1872, and lived a consistent member until death. The last three years of her life were spent in deep affliction. She had not a moment's ease during these three years; but it has never been my pleasure to know a person who bore affliction as she did. She never murmured nor complained, but said, "The Lord's will be done." She was the daughter of E. J. and Mary J. Teal, who are living in sweet anticipation of a happy meeting on the banks of sweet deliverance. Sister Journey died in sight of heaven, and is now forever at rest. She leaves a devoted husband, father, mother and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but their loss is her gain. We say farewell but for a short time. We commend her friends and relatives to him whom she trusted while living.

H. A. BURROUGHS.

HODGES—FELIX EDMUND HODGES, infant son of A. S. and C. E. Hodges, was born April 2, 1886; died Wednesday, June 27, 1888, aged two years, two months and twenty-five days. Little Felix was a loving and sweet child. His life budded on earth, and now has blossomed in heaven. It was hard for papa and mamma to give up their darling baby. His little chair is vacant; his steps are no longer to be heard; but it is a comfort to know they can meet their little babe again. Another little lamb at rest with the fold.

COUSIN VASHTI.

BATES—MRS. AUGUSTA J. BATES, relict of Joseph W. Bates, was born November 18, 1848, and died at her home in Kosciusko, Miss., July 21, 1888. She professed religion when young and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her religion at once became a fixed principle to govern her future life, so that she at once became an example to others. No one could be in her company without becoming impressed with her piety. Her pure modesty adorned her character; her simplicity was her beauty; to know her was to love her. She was gentle, patient, faithful, progressive. When the dark-winged angel came, there was but little preparation to be made. Her moral house had been kept swept and the light was burning. She passed over the river to receive her reward. We deeply mourn our loss, but not without hope. We know where to find her. Those who live right die happy.

W. W. WILLIAMS.

GLOVER—CICILY GLOVER, wife of John Glover, of DeSoto parish, La., was born in Wilcox county, Ala., July 28, 1828, and died July 15, 1888, aged sixty years. She had her full share of affliction and trials incident to this state of probation. I do not know when she professed conversion or joined the church, nor do I know the particulars of her last illness; but, having been acquainted with her more than thirty years, I can testify to her consistent Christian life and devotion to Christ. She raised a large family of children—all of whom I believe are professors of religion. Having faithfully filled all the offices allotted to woman, she has ended her earthly pilgrimage and has entered the home of the good and the rest of the weary, to await a reunion with loved ones who are on their way. To live is Christ, to die is gain to the faithful.

BRIGHAM—Resolutions of Bastrop Sunday-school on the death of JUDGE J. H. BRIGHAM:

Whereas, We have received the painful intelligence of the death of Hon. J. Harvey Brigham, which occurred at Kingston, Jamaica, in July, 1888; And, whereas, The deceased was for many years the faithful and efficient superintendent of this Sunday-school; therefore, be it,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Brigham the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has lost a faithful and pious member and the Sunday-school cause a strong and earnest advocate.

Resolved, That we recognize the results of Bro. Brigham's life-work in the permanency and success of this Sunday-school and church.

Resolved, That we extend our condolence and sympathy to the bereaved family of our deceased brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the Morehouse Clarion and NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

P. H. DALTON, Sup't.
G. W. NOFF, Sec'y.

The confidence of people who have tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, in this preparation, is remarkable. It has cured many who have failed to derive any good whatever from other articles. For diseases caused by impure blood or low state of the system it is unsurpassed.

Of course there is poor preaching in the world. Who ever preaches as the gospel ought to be preached? When we consider how sacred, how lofty, how honorable, how responsible this function is; when we reflect that ministers are sent forth to be the messengers of the great God to their fellow-sinners, and to utter his voice to them, we may well marvel that any man should dare to assume such an office; or that, having assumed it, he should dare exercise it in so imperfect a manner. But the preaching is at least as good as the hearing. And both preaching and hearing would be greatly improved were the true idea of worship recognized: that it is God and his Word we are concerned with here; that his ministers are to "seek the law at his mouth," and the people are to hear it, "not as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God." How much this conviction, deeply inwrought into our minds, would do to cure the defects both of our preaching and our hearing!—Dr. H. A. Boardman.

Scientific.

Geography and Its Related Sciences.

Mr. H. J. Mackinder would define geography as the science whose main function is to trace the interaction of man in society, and so much of his environment as varies locally. According to Mr. Bryce, the environment comprises the influences due to the configuration of the earth's surface; those belonging to meteorology and climate; and the products which a country offers to human industry. The first of these categories depends more largely than has been acknowledged on geology, and is related to physiography, which asks, "Why is it?" to topography, which asks, "Where is it?" to physical geography, "Why is it there?" and to political geography, "How does it act on man in society, and how does he react on it?" and itself asks, "What riddle of the past does it help to solve?" We may stop short at any of these questions, but can hardly answer a later one with advantage unless those which preceded it have been answered. Of meteorology, average or recurrent climatic conditions alone—not weather-forecasting—come within the geographer's ken. In considering the productions of a region, the distribution of minerals is incidental to the rock structure. The distribution of animals and plants is pertinent in so far as those organisms form an appreciable factor in man's environment, and in so far as it gives evidence of geographical changes, such as the separation of islands from continents and the retirement of the snow-line. But the study of the distribution of animals and plants in detail, and as illustrating evolution, is in no sense a part of geography. Geography and history are related in their elementary stages, but diverge in their higher stages. The geographer must furnish to the historian the ideas and facts in science which he requires, and must go to the historian for the verification of the relations which he suggests. The body of laws governing those relations, which might in time be evolved, would render possible the writing of much "prehistoric" history. Mr. Green's "Making of England" is largely a deduction from geographical conditions of what must have been the course of history.—Popular Science.

PROPORTION OF WATER TO SOLID MATTER.—Water covers about three-fourths of the earth's surface, says Iron; and water, according to Dr. Whitelaw, forms about three-fourths of the weight of living animals and plants. Prof. Chaussier dried the body of a man in an oven, like a brick in a kiln, and after desiccation the body weighed only twelve pounds. Rather more than one pound of water is exhaled daily by the breath, about one and three-quarter pounds by the skin, and two and three-quarter pounds by the kidneys, making the daily emission of water by the body about five and one-half pounds, or not quite three quarts. Human blood contains from 78 to 83 per cent. of water, the gastric juice 97 per cent., the flesh 77 per cent., the skin 58 per cent., bones from 7 to 20 per cent. This large percentage of water in the animal body will not appear surprising when it is remembered that a large proportion of the food we consume consists of water. Taking vegetable food first, cucumbers and mushrooms contain as much as 96 per cent., cabbage leaves 92 per cent., turnips 88 per cent., carrots 83 per cent., potatoes 75 per cent., the various kinds of fruit from 75 to 80 per cent., bread from 44 to 49 per cent. Animal food is equally replete with water, the percentage of water in haddock being 82, sole 78, veal 75, beef 74, mutton 71. Milk contains 87 per cent. of water, an egg 74 per cent. The list might be extended almost indefinitely; but we may conclude by stating, for the comfort of total abstainers, that much maligned beer contains as much as 90 per cent. of water. How much more, under certain conditions, we are unable to say.

The most potent remedies for the cure of diseases have been discovered by accident. The first dose of Dr. Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria was given, as an experiment, to an old lady almost dying from the effects of Malaria, on whom Quinine acted as a poison. One dose cured her; and a single dose has cured thousands since. It is the only known Antidote for the poison of Malaria. Sold by Druggists.

The Camp Meeting.

The season is upon us; the problem upon the church. It is a problem—how to maintain the old-time religious influence and impress of the meetings, and still meet the new and changing needs of the age. The camp meeting is peculiar to American Methodism, and has been greatly blessed in the past in conversions and reclamations. In olden times, when churches were sparse and the stationed minister the exception, concentration in the grove for purely religious and evangelistic work was a notable event for the year, and great trophies of grace and marvelous spiritual power were exhibited. Then tents' companies were large, and went to stay through the whole meeting, and special preparation was made to secure the attendance of the unconverted and to hold them under religious influence and strong, persuasive personal effort. Those days are largely gone, and can not be restored. The change is but a part of the radical transformation which has taken place in society, and the ministry and laity are not responsible for it. Unfavorable comparison of the present with the past does not help to a solution of the problem. Censorious words spoken against the ministry and laity who live in this age, as if responsible for present conditions, are as unwise as they are unchristian.

Many Christian people think that with the church facilities now so generally possessed, and with a stationed ministry, the work once done at the camp ground can be done with much better economy of effort at home. For this reason, very largely, the attendance upon the meetings is transient, the majority going and returning the same day. Of course, this large class of people is not present long enough to be brought into close sympathy with the deeper religious work of the week.

A new feature has come in the way of the cottage, and the grove is eagerly sought by the wearied and heavy-laden for physical change and recuperation. This is an excellent departure, and we think providential, to furnish a resort which can be enjoyed by our families at little expense, and where the atmosphere shall be moral and restful. The pulpit at the grove has of late become a rostrum for the preaching of excellent sermons, and the work has seemed to be more directly exegetical and educatory. The Sunday-School Assembly is finding its place and work on the camp ground for biblical study and edification. Many thoughtful people have the impression that here, very largely, is the solvent to the problem. Not that the assembly is to absorb and supersede the camp meeting, but that it is coming to provide the modification, in some degree, demanded.

The most imperative need of Christianity is a better interpretation of the Bible. We all need to join anew the "school of Christ." It is not Cephas, Paul nor Appollos that we need so much to know as Christ. He has spoken. Let it be the mission of the camp ground, in a sense never known before, to reveal him. Preach him, teach him, reflect him on the camp ground, and God will lead out the denomination to the best use of these accessories. "Let all your things be done with charity."—Zion's Herald.

"Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit; there is more hope of a fool than of him." It is the men who are open to conviction—who are teachable, who take hold of things out of the beaten track, and, "taking time by the forelock and not by the fetlock," go forward to success. To this latter class we desire especially to appeal and urge them to write to B. F. Johnson & Co., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va. They will do you good and not evil.

The cross is the distinct announcement to us of that wonderful law which fills all life, that "through much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom of heaven." - Perfection through suffering—that is the doctrine of the cross. There is love in that law.—F. W. Robertson.

Many People refuse to take Cod Liver Oil on account of its unpleasant taste. This difficulty has been overcome in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It being as palatable as milk and the most valuable remedy known for the treatment of Consumption, Scrofula and Bronchitis, General Debility, Wasting Diseases of Children, Chronic Coughs and Colds, has caused physicians in all parts of the world to use it. Physicians report our little patients take it with pleasure. Try Scott's Emulsion and be convinced.

Nothing can constitute good breeding that has not good nature for its foundation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. David T. Day, chief of the division of mining statistics, has submitted a summary of the mineral products of the United States in 1887, in advance of the official report. The total value is $558,056,345. It shows a wonderful gain over 1886, and is $200,000,000 greater than the output of 1886.

The bill appropriating $11,000 to construct a road to the national cemetery at Pineville, La., has become a law; the bill to subdivide the western judicial district of Louisiana has passed and will probably soon be signed. The appropriation of $27,000 for improvements to navigation of the jetties and lower Mississippi in the way of lights, etc., has gone to the Senate. Mr. Newton's bill, appropriating $75,000 for a public building at Monroe has become a law. An appropriation of $3,500 for the geological survey in north Louisiana, which he proposed, has been included in the general appropriation for geological surveys of $400,000. Mr. Robertson's bills appropriating $50,000 for a public building at Opelousas and $15,000 for a road to the national cemetery at Baton Rouge, are before the President.

A movement is on foot among the soap manufacturers of the United States to form a soap trust. A meeting was held in New York recently and the plans of the organization discussed, but no definite action was taken.

Gen. Beauregard, commissioner of public works of this city, has resigned his office.

The Secretary of the Treasury has forwarded to the Senate a statement giving an account in detail of a vast amount of assets in Europe amounting to many million dollars once belonging to the Confederate government, but now subject to a valid claim of the United States.

The House Committee on Banking and Currency, on July 28, ordered a favorable report on the Senate bill to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Bank, with an amendment authorizing the commissioner of the institution to pay the expenses incurred in the settlement of the accounts.

Of the four anarchists, who are charged with a conspiracy to blow up with dynamite Judges Gary and Grinnell and Inspector Bonfield, in Chicago, two have disappeared and, it is supposed, jumped their bonds and fled the city.

The steamboat, Edward J. Gay, laid up at the head of First street, this city, turned to the water's edge on July 30.

FOREIGN.

It is learned that the object of the plot, which was discovered at Rustchuk, was to murder Prince Ferdinand. Two of the ring leaders, Bogneteff and Ivanoff, have been arrested.

The Riforma, published in Rome, had an article, on July 25, on the agitation that is being carried on in the United States against Italian immigration. It says that the movement in question is based solely upon an unreasonable hatred of the Italian element and that public opinion in Italy will not allow the question to drag.

The Emperor William arrived at Stockholm, on July 26. A magnificent display was organized in his honor by King Oscar of Sweden.

The King of Greece, who is on his way to St. Petersburg, had an interview, on July 26, with Count Kalnoky. The prime minister assured his majesty of Austria's sympathy with Greece, whom, he said, she regarded as one of the main ramparts against pan-Slavism in the Balkans.

Emperor William has ordered that his military entourage, hitherto called "maison militaire," shall in future be designated as "headquarters of His Majesty, Emperor and King."

Nine emigration agents have been arrested at Cracow for inciting the natives of that district to immigrate to America.

The Imperial family, on July 27, attended the ceremony of the blessing of the waters of the Neva by priests in front of the winter palace at St. Petersburg.

A son was born to the Emperor William on July 27. Congratulations were received from all the European courts.

A volcanic eruption at Bandaisin, fifty leagues from Yokohama, has destroyed several villages and killed 1,000 persons, including 100 visitors at the Thermal springs.

From Japanese papers of July 10, particulars of an emeute in Seoul, the capital of Corea, on June 20, are given. The emeute had its origin in the revival of the absurd rumors directed against foreigners and which had weight owing to the dense ignorance of the people of Japan.

The Czar appears to have given his assent to the creation of a Bulgarian monarchy, with either Prince Waldemar, the youngest son of King Christian, or the Duke of Cumberland on the throne. The Duke of Cumberland has decisively rejected the offer, which was made to him through Prince Bismarck.

Emperor William left Stockholm, on July 28, in the yacht "Hohenzolen," and arrived at Copenhagen, on July 30, where he was extended a cordial greeting.

The protest of the Vatican against the visit of Emperor William to Rome has proved effectual. One result of the Vatican's diplomatic triumph is that Minister Crispi has sent instructions to the Italian embassy in Paris to institute the negotiations for a commercial treaty with France. Berlin official circles strongly distrust the Italian government on account of its relations with France.

Eight thousand navvies are now on a strike in Paris and others are expected to join the movement. Twenty-three of one hundred persons arrested have been held for trial on the charge of having been concerned in rioting at Lavillette.

A faded or grizzly beard is unbecoming to any man, and may be colored a natural brown or black by using Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers.
